There is a story told of a certain new farmhand who was instructed by his employer to feed his favorite horse some corn "in the ear." He was discovered some hours later endeavoring to pour the grain into the ears of the unfortunate animal. We cannot get any vital religion through the ears only. The truths of Christianity must be digested and made a part of our very life before they can nourish us. The only way to accomplish this is to practice them.

Many Christians fall when temptation comes because they are only hearing Christians. They go to church regularly. They are familiar with the tenets of the particular religious body to which they belong, but they have never practiced what they hear. They are like students at a technical school who have listened to many lectures about the general principles and tools of their trade, but have never actually taken those tools in hand and experimented with them.

Jesus Christ was very practical. Out of the many who came to hear Him, He choose twelve who seemed very much in earnest. These He made practice religion. He took them with Him on His preaching tours. He taught them to help others. Later He selected seventy more and gave them likewise something to do. At the time of His ascension there were about one hundred and twenty such learners. This is what He wants us all to be—learners in the school of practical religion. The man who thinks that hearing the gospel preached makes him a Christian and will bring him salvation has a bitter disappointment in store. St. James says: "Be ye doers of the Word and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."

Hearing is important as a first step. "Faith cometh by hearing." Faith is important as a foundation. But faith without works is dead. One cannot erect a substantial building without a good foundation, but how bad it is to see a strong foundation with no superstructure built thereon. Such a sight speaks of failure of disappointed hopes. Many a man has been disappointed in his religion because his Christianity has consisted of faith without works, a foundation without a building, hearing without doing.

Let us be practical. Do not be like the man who built his house upon the sand. Join the ranks of the real disciples. Be learners. Handle the tools of your religion. Practice the construction of character. Begin by putting at least one principle of Christianity to use. Do at least one kind act each day. Try to conquer some one fault. Go to some Christian leader and ask him to allow you to help in his work. He will give you an opportunity. And as you become more familiar with the tools of your Christian profession God will set you harder tasks, and will give you at the same time greater joy in your religion. Your spiritual house will be founded upon a rock.

THE NEW FAITH AND THE OLD.

"Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."—Ex. 14:15.

The first impression of any forward movement is that it means a dissolution of all the things to which one can tie. Slowly dawns the truth that the mind of man was not made to tie to anything, that it cannot be fastened to any landmark, that it is a living thing which must either go forward or die. This, true of the body itself, is true of our whole life, of our education, of our emotions, our character, and our civilization. We must needs go forward or perish, even though the movement means facing the desert and leaving those things which we have been to such pains to establish.

This law holds good in religious thought. The truth of to-day must be the error—or half truth—of to-morrow as certainly as the garments of the child must be discarded by the man, and just as in large measure the science of to-day will be the superstition of to-morrow. If men grow in things how much more shall they grow in thought. Religion being man's attempt to express in deed and word his thought of the highest and best it would belie its name if each new height gained did not show some yet greater height before. An unchangeable religion would not be a religion at all.

Yet no other thing has so worried many good people as the fear that their religion should change. Just as they once believed that the universe was made, finished, and fixed forever—as though such a thing would ever be true of a universe aglow with life—so they thought of their religion as committed to them complete like a set of unchangeable laws. Therefore their utmost concern was to preserve its precise form, and the great thing in religion became not the spirit of its teaching but the form of its text. Failure to realize the vital and therefore developing nature of religion resulted in the guarding of the letter that kills at the expense of the life giving spirit. And when faith forsook its chrysalis stage they wept such bitter tears over its broken shell they have not yet seen the fairer glory into which it has grown.

If there be any ground for lament as to the condition of religion it lies not in the failure to preserve the old statements and the old customs, not in the unwillingness of the world to-day to shrink itself into yesterday's outworn forms of truth, but in the pitiable sight of a church that tries to keep up the old life with dead formulae, that has so far forgotten its great teacher's revelation as not to know that religion is life and not logic, or laws, or language. The saddest feature to day is the unwillingness of the church to go forward; instead of being the leader of science and of civilization she is often reluctantly dragged behind these onmoving powers.

The need now is not to go back to Moses and to Paul, as though these were our goal, but, taking some guidance from them, to go forward into the new truth that is ever dawning. He who steps into the twilight of new truths always finds the day breaking about him. If he stands perfectly still the full day comes and then the night again. It is only the man who keeps on moving forward who is always in the light. The trouble is that so many are standing fast in truth from which the light has all died out, and they are calling their darkness the only day and denouncing those who prefer the light.

The ancient good ever stands opposed to the new best. It says, better stay in the old Egypt you know than perish in a desert untried. But true souls step forth. They find the desert, and often it is drear; yet God is there, and morns are bright and manna falls by the way.

Then, beyond the desert there is Canaan; beyond the Alps, Italy; beyond the doubt, the delight of larger, clearer truth. Do not fear leaving the old; do not worry over theological unrest. Unrest is but the sign of life. Better the child's unrest than the senile placidity of old age. Better the death in the desert than decay in Egypt. Better to die in doubt than to mold away in the empty tomb of truth. Consider him, who for the joy set before him, despised the cross; forget the things behind and press forward to the prize before, the clearer light and larger life.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't rely on creed for salvation.

Don't waste time denouncing the devil.

Don't think too much about reward for well doing.

Don't expect sermons to take the place of sympathy.

Don't refuse another's burden lest you lose your blessing.

Don't depend on forms of church worship for spiritual uplifting.

Don't expect the world to support the church unless the church serves the world and saves it.

THE ANT EATER.

A peculiar-looking animal is the ant eater, which is closely allied to the sloth family. Its head is drawn out into a long, tubular muzzle, at the end of which is a tiny mouth just big enough to permit the exit of its long, wormlike tongue, which is covered with a sticky saliva.

This tongue is thrust among the hosts of ants with great rapidity, coming back laden with the tiny insects. To obtain its prey the ant-eater breaks open the ant hills, when all the active inhabitants swarm to the breach and are instantaneously swept away by the remorseless tongue.

The jaws of the ant eater are entirely without teeth, and the eyes and ears are very small.

There are several species of ant eater, the largest kind being about four feet long and having a tail covered with very long hair, forming a huge brush. The claw on the third toe of each fore limb is of great size and is used for breaking open ants' and other insects' nests.

Generally speaking, the ant eater is a harmless animal, but at times when at bay it will fight with great courage, sitting up on its hind legs and hugging its foe with its powerful arms.—London express.

Peanuts Imported.

So many peanuts are eaten in this country that the native supply is not sufficient for the demand and about $3,000 worth of the African nuts were imported from Marseilles in 1906 and over $73,000 worth in 1907. The west coast of Africa produces quantities of peanuts.

WANTED TO KNOW

The Truth About Grape-Nuts Food.

It doesn't matter so much what you hear about a thing, it's what you know that counts. And correct knowledge is most likely to come from personal experience.

"About a year ago," writes a N. Y. man, "I was bothered by indigestion, especially during the forenoon. I tried several remedies without any permanent improvement.

"My breakfast usually consisted of oatmeal, steak or chops, bread, coffee and some fruit.

"Hearing so much about Grape-Nuts, I concluded to give it a trial and find out if all I had heard of it was true.

"So I began with Grape-Nuts and cream, 2 soft boiled eggs, toast, a cup of Postum and some fruit. Before the end of the first week I was rid of the acidity of the stomach and felt much relieved.

"By the end of the second week all traces of indigestion had disappeared and I was in first rate health once more. Before beginning this course of diet, I never had any appetite for lunch, but now I can enjoy a hearty meal at noon time." "There's a Reason."

A SUDDEN GOLD.

Miss Helen Sauerbier, of 315 Main St., St. Joseph, Mich., writes an interesting letter on the subject of catching cold, which cannot fail to be of value to all women who catch cold easily.

PERUNA ADVISED FOR SUDDEN COLDS.

It Should be Taken According to Directions on the Bottle, at the First Appearance of the Cold.

ST. JOSEPH, MICH., Sept., 1901.—Last winter I caught a sudden cold which developed into an unpleasant catarrh of the head and throat, depriving me of my appetite and usual good spirits. A friend who had been cured by Peruna advised me to try it and I sent for a bottle at once, and I am glad to say that in three days the phlegm had loosened, and I felt better, my appetite returned and within nine days I was in my usual good health.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Harry Metzger, long a resident of Fort Wayne, and former Democratic County Clerk, died last week. He was 55 years old.

A peach tree in David Wallace's yard in Owensville has produced its second crop of fruit this season. J. D. Welborn also has a peach tree that has produced a second crop.

Pat Phillips, a fisherman of Hazleton, caught a lamprey eel measuring more than three feet in length. This member of the eel family is rarely found except in the sea and in the lower reaches of streams that empty into salt water.

Dollar Lake, on the Blackford and Grant County line, for many years a favorite fishing and hunting resort for this part of Indiana, is to be completely drained. Isaiah N. Miller, a well-known farmer near Upland, has taken the contract to drain it. It has been a great place for ducks and other water fowl, but will now become farm land.

The Reliable dry goods store in Michigan City, owned by Joseph Savelson, was robbed by silk thieves, the burglars taking seventeen bolts, valued at $500. This is the fourth time dry goods stores in that city have been robbed of silk in the last five years, making it appear that Michigan City is on a circuit of northern Indiana towns visited periodically by thieves whose specialty is silk.

Plans and specifications for a $75,000 auditorium have just been completed by the Winona Assembly Association. The new building will seat 9,200 persons. H. J. Heinz, of Pittsburg, the millionaire pickle man, has given $25,000 toward a fund to be used in erecting the building, and it is hoped to raise the other $50,000 during the coming winter and to have the building constructed early next year.

The lower Ohio river is the lowest in many years, and the stream is almost dry in places. Navigation is practically suspended between Evansville and Cairo, Ill. Editor Baker, of the Grand View (Ind.) Monitor, rode across the river on his bicycle. In but a few places did he have to dismount and wade, and then the water was but a few inches deep. Many of the side streams of the Ohio river are dry.

An organization has been formed among farmers of the vicinity of Morocco to establish a State bank at Remington. The capital stock is $25,000, and the Board of Directors are J. H. Biddle, James H. Gilbert, W. I. McCollough, Elias Julian, S. G. Hand, Dr. E. Besser and Christian Hensler; president, H. Gilbert; vice-president, J. H. Biddle; cashier, S. G. Hand. The bank will open for business within a few days.

The cracking of the courthouse walls still continues at Portland, and the belief is strengthened that the building is becoming unsafe. The latest crack appeared some time between the closing hour Saturday evening and the opening Monday morning, and it is over the door leading from the main corridor into the recorder's office. It is probably an inch in width, and on the opposite side of the building from those first noticed.

Miss Tillie Hutton, of Waldron, has brought suit against Sanford McColley, of Shelbyville for $500 damages. Miss Hutton, in August, attended the homecoming at St. Paul, and while in the act of stepping from an interurban car on the return trip a whisky bottle was thrown at the car, and it struck Miss Hutton, tearing off part of an ear, and injuring the sense of hearing. Investigation laid the blame on the defendant, hence the suit.

Last week a short dispatch from Columbus to The Indianapolis News stated that male teachers were scarce in the rural parts of Bartholomew County. Since that time County Superintendent Charles E. Talkington says he has received nearly a hundred letters from male teachers, from all parts of the State, and also from neighboring States, asking for places. Male teachers may be scarce in Bartholomew County, but there seems to be plenty of them elsewhere. One man wrote that he was a college graduate with a master's degree, and he added that he would like to have a school in Union Township.

Ernest Naftzger, of Muncie, son of the Rev. Dr. L. J. Naftzger, who is superintendent of the Muncie district, North Indiana M. E. Conference, has gone to New York City, where he will join the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman as a singing evangelist in a trip of several months abroad. After a few weeks in Canada, they will likely go to England, and in March will sail for Australia. For several months they will remain in Polynesia, conducting revivals. The young man, who possesses a tenor voice of remarkable clearness and range, has been assisting Dr. Chapman in religious meetings for several months.

James Napier, superintendent of the Wayne County farm, near Centerville, harvested 450 bushels of potatoes from a field of four acres. He estimates the corn crop will be sixty-five bushels to the acre.

Cut off from saving his horses by a fire of unknown origin in his barn, William Baker, farmer, eight miles southwest of Warsaw, collapsed and he is in a serious condition. Eight horses were cremated, and the season's crops were destroyed.

Wallace Dye, aged 40 years, merchant of Bedford, was killed when showing a revolver to a customer. The ball entered his heart.

The eighteen churches of Northern Ohio, Southern Dearborn and Eastern Ripley Counties held the third annual meeting at Wilmington recently. The organization is one of strength, embracing Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians.

James Tuell, aged 22, was the victim of a peculiar case of poisoning at New Albany. He was found on the streets in a dazed condition and was taken to his home, where he was left in a yard swing, the family having been away, and an hour later he was found in the swing unconscious. Physicians were summoned, but at last accounts there was no chance for his recovery.

Daniel Mahoney, farmer and a road and bridge contractor, who was thrown form a buggy near his home, south of Logansport, died of his injuries. At the time of his death he held several contracts for building township gravel roads. He did most of the grading for the Logansport & Lafayette traction line, and his specialty was large contract jobs. He leaves a widow and one daughter.

Mrs. Nellie Cook, 29 years old, who has been employed as a nurse in the National Soldiers' Home in Marion, since July 1, is dead of Bright's disease, after an illness of nine days. She came there from Lima, Ohio, where her husband, an engineer in a factory, was accidentally killed in June last. Her death is the first in the nurses' cottage. She will be buried beside her husband at Kokomo.

Linton people are indignant because a Terre Haute hospital has refused to treat a patient whose condition is regarded as hopeless. The rejected patient is Armont Fraboasis, who suffered a broken spine while working in a mine. The physician thinks there is some hope of recovery if he could be placed in a hospital. The rejection has added new life to the proposition of establishing a hospital in Linton.

Bluffton is once more without a negro in its population. Two colored men employed on patching asphalt streets have left on cessation of their work. In the seventy years of its existence Bluffton has had only two colored families, and those for only a short period. Only one colored child has ever been born in the city. Occasionally a porter will take a job in the Hotel, but his stay is generally limited to a few months.

Grief over the death of her young child, which she caused several weeks ago, resulted in the death of Mrs. John T. Collins, of Muncie. A number of weeks ago Mrs. Collins gave a dose of poison to her baby, mistaking it for soothing syrup, and the child died soon after. Since that time Mrs. Collins has grieved continuously, and has been ill, gradually declining until her death. She was the mother of Miss Gertrude Collins, a young actress, well known in the State. Four children and a husband survive.

Earl McAfee, 11 years old, climbed a tree at his home in Princeton, to get a bird's nest. Running throubh the tree was a telephone wire and the boy caught hold of this. It had become crossed with an electric wire and the heavy voltage shot into the victim's body. E. N. Ashby, a neighbor, hearing the screams of the boy, ran to McAfee's assistance, and he grabbed a stick, "shinned" up the tree, pushed the wire away and caught the fainting boy in his arms. Young McAfee will recover, though his hand is badly burned.

Superintendent Ferrell, of the Shelbyville schools, after conducting a quiet investigation for several days, caused twenty children in the grade schools to be brought before Mayor Swain and Prosecuting Attorney Hack, to tell where they bought tobacco for cigarettes and pipes. The names of several merchants were obtained to be followed by arrest, in the hope that convictions will put a stop to the business. The superintendent says that 200 children, ranging in years from 6 to 14, are using tobacco. He has a half-bushel basket filled with pipes and tobacco.

When the jury before which Pasquale Trotta was tried on the charge of murder, returned a verdict of not guilty in the Circuit Court room at Marion there followed one of the wildest scenes ever witnessed by the Grant County bar. Thirty Italian laborers who had waited impatiently for the verdict, jumped to their feet, clapped their hands and shouted, as they clasped Trotta in their arms and kissed his cheeks. The aged mother of Trotta fainted, and had to be carried from the courtroom. All efforts on the part of Sheriff McGuffin and his deputies to restore order failed.

South Bend will have interurban railway connections with Indianapolis within thirty days, according to information given out by officials of the Chicago, South Bend & Northern Indiana Railway Company.

The blacksmiths in Newcastle have formed a protective association, and all workers in the city are members. The object is not to raise prices, the schedule being left as it is at the present time, but to protect its members from deadbeats.

THE VOICE THAT WAS.

"That's the most pathetic thing I ever read," said Frances Cowan, laying down her book and lifting her eyes, full of tears, to her father. "It's about a man that wrote a wonderful book, and lost his power to write any more. Oh, he could write, but not in the same way. The divine fire had gone out, and he got so that he couldn't enjoy anything—not a beautiful sunset, even, because of a yearning sadness that he wasn't able to make it his own, as he had done in the past, to give it to others in his own words, on his own pages. It drove him to melancholy. I don't know when I've cried over a book, but this has just made my heart ache."

"Yet you laughed last night because Aunt Millie's voice cracked when you asked her to show you how that little song went."

"But, papa, that's so different! A cracked voice is funny."

"Frances, at your age your Aunt Mildred was a beauty—popular, admired, sought after. She had a voice—I've never heard one like it. Its sweetness thrilled your heart, and singing was the joy of her life. Then ill-health came—a throat trouble—years of invalidism. She lost the power to sing. You never hear her speak of it, but I know, child, that she never listens to a beautiful voice nor reads the music of an exquisite song without that same yearning sadness your writer felt when he looked on the sunset and knew that he had lost his divine gift.

"She never murmurs; she lives here in my home; to my children she is a delicate, elderly aunt—beloved, to be sure, but one who spends herself freely for their comfort and happiness, day after day, as a matter of course.

"Frances, you needn't go to that book for a heartache. Your Aunt Mildred can remember how people used to hold their breath and listen in ecstasy when she sang, and now her younger brother's children ask her to help them recall a forgotten air, and when she hums it for them her voice cracks—and they laugh."

"O, father, father!" said Frances, softly. "They never will again. I didn't dream it was like that."—Youth's Companion.

BIRDS' TONGUES.

Why the Parrot Is Able to Imitate Human Speech.

Many people suppose that woodpeckers use their sharp-pointed tongues as darts with which to transfix their prey. It is true that the woodpecker, like the humming bird, can dart out its tongue with astonishing rapidity and that its mouth is furnished with an elaborate mechanism for this purpose, yet, according to the authority mentioned, investigation shows that the object of this swift motion is only to catch the prey, not to pierce it. For the purpose of holding the captured victim the woodpecker's tongue is furnished with a sticky secretion.

Considering its powers of imitating speech, it is not surprising to learn that the parrot's tongue resembles that of man more closely than any other bird's. It is not because the parrot is more intelligent than the other birds, but because its tongue is better suited for articulation than theirs, that it is able to amuse us with its mimicry.

The humming bird's tongue is in some respects the most remarkable of all. It is double nearly from end to end, so that the little bird is able to grasp its insect prey with its tongue much as if its mouth was furnished with a pair of fingers.—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Old Joke Revised.

There was a rap on his lordship's door.

"My lord," announced the servant with a low bow, "the airship awaits without."

"Without wings, without gasoline, without ropes and without a propeller. We have just been in a collision."

Fame.

Principal (of the school of dramatic art)—Er—yes; indeed she is. On an amateurs' night at one of the theaters recently the audience fairly went wild with enthusiasm when she starred in a little comedy called "Getting the Hook."—Chicago Tribune.

Too Much Opposition.

"Pimmie, does your mother still object to my coming to see you?"

"Yes, dear; she does."

"Good! So does mine. She says that if I marry you she'll cut me off with a shilling."

"O, but that's altogether different! Perhaps, Jack—in view of everything—and because—and we're both so young—well, don't you see?"—Chicago Tribune.

No Longer Secret.

"No," answered Mrs. Middleblok; "I have found out the name of every one of them."

VOL. XXII. ST. JOE, DEKALB COUNTY, INDIANA. WEDNESDAY, OCT. 21 1908. NO. 43

Republican Rally.

The Widney Opera House was crowded to listen to the Ft. Wayne speaking delegation, who expounded republican doctrines, Thursday evening. Chas. S. Bash and Col. Lukens, two of Ft. Wayne's successful business men accompanied by a male quartette formed the political attraction. They were due to arrive here at 8 o'clock but their automobile refused to act somewhere below Spencerville and there was some delay in reaching their destination.

Mr. Bash made the opening address of the evening, and representative of a prominent manufacturing industry, he dwelt upon the dangers to be incurred by the proposed tariff reform measures as advocated by the illustrious, Mr. Bryan. Following his talk, Col. Lukens sang a song and then continued propounding republican doctrines to listening ears. While he was speaking, the delayed quartette arrived and soon afterward entertained the audience with some rousing campaign songs. These were well rendered and stirred up the enthusiam of the audience.

A goodly number of the county candidates were present and on the platform. They were, John W. Henderson, candidate for representative; Thaddeus Thomas, for clerk; Albert N. Thrush, for treasurer; Hubert E. Hartman, for prosecuting attorney; and Willis Rhoads, candidate for joint senator. These men all stood up so that the people might take their political measure, and each had a good word for those present.

Hollis B. Akins

Hollis B. Akins was born in Bristol County, Ohio, February 7, 1852 and departed this life on October 18, 1908, aged 56 years, 8 months and 11 days. Mr. Akins at the age of two years moved with his parents to Nebraska and at the age of 6 they moved to DeKalb County where he resided until death called him. He is one of five children of whom three sisters, Mrs. Ida Smith, Mrs. Emma Fisher and Mrs. J. N. Scholes are living. His father preceded him in the year 1898. He was married to Julia Ann Cotrill in 1873. Three children were born to them. Frank Akins, Detroit, Mich., Mrs. D. J. Blair Newville, Ind. and Mrs. A. E. Chapman, South Dakota. He was a faithful and dutiful father and husband and only those that knew him can speak of his true character.

He was honest in all of his dealings with his fellow-men. He was a prosperous farmer and has won the esteem of all his neighbors and friends. He enjoyed fishing and hunting and nearly every fall he went to the Maine woods whence he would bring back large game. He leaves a wife, three children, his mother, three sisters and a large number of relatives and friends.

Patriotic Exercises.

The evening services at the Methodist church Sunday consisted of patriotic excercises. The church was appropriately decorated with the national colors. The church choir furnished the music and sang some excellent national music. Rev. J. C. McKain gave the address of the evening. His subject was "The Religion of Politics", and he dealt with it in a forceful manner, holding the interested attention of his audience.

Reception

A pleasant reception was given Saturday evening at the Christian church to the new members who had come in during the recent meetings. The program began with a piano solo by Hazel Perry and a welcome address by the pastor. This was followed by a five minute talk by Frank Scholes who pursued as his theme the advantage of making a right choice early in life. Mrs. Sheffer also made a talk congratulatory to the young people who had recently united with the church.

Mrs. Wade, state benevolent worker, was present and took time to present her appeal in behalf of the cause she represents. The main address of the evening was given by Rev. Couch pastor of the Harlan christian church. His subject was Christian Growth and he developed it with the genius of a master thinker Geo. Wilson of Harlan was also present and gave a very interesting talk at the close.

A nicely prepared luncheon was served to the full enjoyment of all. The evening's event was highly beneficial in a social and intellectual way

For County Surveyor.

The republicans have placed in the field as their candidate for surveyor, B. LaFayette Bailey of Union township. This is the first time he has been before the people as a candidate for a public office. Mr. Bailey is an excellent young man, thirty-two years old and has been a school teacher for eleven years, seven years in this county and is counted among the best teachers in the county. He has been a student in the State Normal school at Terre Haute, and will soon have completed a course in the Scranton schools.

Mr. Bailey is a man of high moral character and of general good judgment. The work of surveyor is one demanding good judgment and much knowledge other than mere scientific training. Mr. Bailey will be able to fill the position with satisfaction to the people.

The candidate was born and reared on a farm near St. Joe and today enjoys the respect and confidence of the people of this locality. Should the will of the voter see fit to elect him, they will have chosen one who will fill the office with credit.

Mrs. C. A. Patterson, attended the thirty-fifth Indiana state convention of W. C. T. U. at Bedford, which closed its session, early last week. She went as a delegate from this county, Mrs. Jennie Sechler accompanied her as a delegate from the local organization. The convention was one of the largest and most successful in the history of the state organization. About 500 delegates registered and many more were in attendance who did not register. The importance of the temperance issue as it faces the people of Indiana, this fall, added to the zeal of the convention, and brought forth strong resolutions to aid and hasten the movement in this state for the good of the cause.

Interesting Convention.

The Newville township Sunday School workers met in convention at Wesley Chapel, Sunday afternoon and evening. The session was called to order by the president, H. W. Maggins, and he conducted a short praise service. The devotional portion of this was given by R. H. Conine.

The afternoon subject for discussion was "Sunday School Organization and Its Officers". This was ably put before the convention by Clyde Hart. He forcibly emphasized the duty of each officer in his relation to the organized Sunday School. It was made plain that the superintendent, teachers, and scholars each fail at least a little to do their duty and if each one did some better the interest and welfare of the school would be greatly advanced. An interesting discussion followed Mr. Hart's address. Those who took part were, Mrs. McDonald, J. S. Kain, Mr. Conine, Mr. Tustison and the president. As the time was passing swiftly the discussion was called to a close. After a song Gladys Abel recited an appropriate recitation. This was followed by a special song from the Wesley Chapel school. The necessary business of this session was disposed of and Rev. Sweeney dismissed the afternoon session.

The evening session was the occasion of an address from Rev. Sweeney on "The Teacher and His Class". He developed many interesting and helpful points with reference to the teacher and his class. Special music was furnished for the evening by the Wesley Chapel school.

An Appreciation.

Through the columns of the News we desire to say to the people of St. Joe and vicinity that they have our most sincere and heartfelt thanks for what they contributed toward our loss by fire, and should the opportunity come to repay you all in a more material way we will be only too willing to do so. Respectfully

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

Chicago Wins World's Championship.

It is Chicago, champions of the world again. Frank Chance's Cubs clinched the greatest of all baseball trophies by capturing the fifth game of the series at Detroit, 2 to 0. At that Detroit did better than last year when they managed to tie one game, but then lost four straight. This year they captured one of the five games played. Also their total of runs was greater for the series. The runs on the whole series were: Chicago, 24; Detroit, 15. The series, however, created less interest in the two cities most affected than that of last year if the attendance may be taken as a guide. The paid admissions were only 62,222 for the five games and the receipts totalled but $94,975 as compared with $101,000 last year. The attendance at the last game was only 6,167. Of the money taken in the players of Chicago, the winning team, get $27,669, and the Detroit players $18,446. The club owners get $19,681 a piece and the National Commission $9,497.

Panic on a Ferry Steamer.

Several girls were slightly injured and 100 more had a narrow escape from death when the Ferry steamer Ariel, running between Walkerville, Ontario, and Detroit, Mich., was in collision in a fog with the small freighter Energy. About 100 girls, employes of factories, were aboard the ferry, and a panic reigned among them for a few minutes. The crew succeeded in quieting them, however, before there were any serious results. It was found that several were slightly cut by glass from the ferry's broken windows.

Horse Stealing a Disease With Him.

Byron Beemas, alias Byron Palmer and Henry Wilson, 70 years old and noted in Northern Indiana as a horse thief, pleaded guilty after the State had completed its evidence against him. He must serve in Michigan City prison from one to fourteen years. Beemas has been in prison in four different States and admits horse stealing with him is a disease.

He Was the First Volunteer.

Dr. Chas. Franklin Rand, the first volunteer to enlist in the Union Army after President Lincoln's call for troops, and the first soldier to receive from Congress a medal of honor for bravery on the field, is dead at his home in Washington, D. C., aged 70 years. He was born in Batavia, N. Y. He spent three months in Libby prison.

Big Fire in Arizona Town.

Fire broke out at Bisbee, Ariz., and in three hours had done more than $500,000 damage. When the fire threatened to wipe out the entire city dynamite was resorted to, and buildings were blown up in the path of the flames. This procedure saved the city from total destruction. The insurance is $150,000.

Refuses to Accept Insurance Money.

The father of Michael Yoder, of New Paris, Ind., who died from burns received from burning straw, is an adherent of the Mennonite faith and refuses to accept $1,000 life insurance carried by his son in his favor, or to permit his son's burial expenses to be paid by the lodges of which he was a member.

Perry Heath's Sister Burned to Death.

Mrs. Louise Chamberlain, sister of Perry S. Heath, ex-assistant postmaster general and later editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, was burned to death in a fire in her home in Albuquerque, N. M., which started from an explosion of gasoline.

Four Killed at a Crossing.

Four persons were killed and two were seriously injured in a railroad crossing accident two miles south of Schaghticoke, N. Y. The six persons were in a wagon and were driving from Schaghticoke to Melrose.

Big Lumber Mill Burned.

The Jenkins lumber mill plant was almost completely destroyed by fire at Blaine, Wash. The loss is estimated at $500,000.

Father of Seventeen Children Hurt.

Joe Brown, teamster for the Green Valley Coal Company at Jasonville, Ind., was seriously hurt in a runaway accident. He is a man 54 years old, and is the father of seventeen children.

Earthquake Shock in Mexico.

An earthquake shock lasting forty seconds was felt at Mexico City, Mex. Clocks were stopped, but the intensity of the shock was insufficient to cause any damage.

NEWS OF THE WEEK

1,000 LAND SEEKERS BROKE.

It is estimated that a thousand land seekers who have come to Dallas and Gregory, S. D., have lost their money at the gaming tables and are "broke." Many more who have lost all their ready cash have been forced to telegraph for money. Nearly 6,000 persons have registered at these two points already, and nearly as many more are expected before the period for registration closes. Hundreds return as soon as they have registered, but thousands have remained for the drawing. These latter have, in hundreds of instances, been the victims of the "tiger." The gamblers have operated their games without restraint and are said to have made remarkable winnings. They run twenty-four hours a day, with the games as strong at daybreak as when the sun sets. To be broke in that country means something to a man, because he is without friends at a time when it is not easy to make new ones. Every outgoing train carries many men who have lost their money and are risking their lives on the brakebeams or bumpers. No land opening probably has ever brought more people, and they all come with money.

WOMEN CONVICTED OF PLOT.

In Carthage, Mo., Mrs. Albert Baker and her mother, Mrs. Hannah Raney, aged 65, have been convicted and given prison terms for an alleged plot to kill Albert Baker, the former woman's husband. The alleged plot had its inception in St. Louis, where Baker married Myrtle Raney Feb. 12, 1901. He charged an attempt on his life in Carthage on March 8, 1908, to secure $10,000 life insurance, which his wife induced him to take out the day before their marriage. The sentence is six years for the wife and five years for the mother. A brother, Thad Raney, will be put on trial at once. Baker alleges he was awakened by blows on the head by a hammer in the hands of Thad Raney. In the fight that ensued, and in which he alleges his wife and her mother and brother participated, Baker was shot twice, and he says that while he beat off his assailants his wife exclaimed: "My God, Albert, won't you ever give up!"

CHICAGOAN HEIR TO $1,000,000.

Emil Ascher, manager of Gallagher & Ascher, glove manufacturers, 135 Adams street, Chicago, announced the other day that he had inherited $1,000,000 from an uncle, A. Ascher, who died in London twenty years ago. The uncle is said to have amassed about $2,000,000. At the time of his death, it is said, no relatives could be found. "It was only by accident that we learned of the fortune," said Mrs. Tilly Vejaka Ascher, wife of the heir. "Then I write to a friend of mine in London and received a reply from his law partners, S. Bucokoski, informing us we probably could recover half of the fortune."

AMERICAN SLAIN BY INDIANS.

It is reported in Winnipeg that James Oliver Curwood, the well-known author of Detroit, Mich., who recently went into the Hudson bay wilds for a Detroit publishing firm, has been killed by Indians in the Lac La Rouge country. Details are wanting, but the trader who brought in the report says that the Lac La Rouge Indians claim that the white man began the trouble by shooting one of their number. The mounted police are investigating, and their report is expected within a few days.

Victory for Union Labor.

Peaceful picketing and the right to strike, or threaten to strike, was upheld in the United States Court of Appeals in Chicago in a decision handed down by Judges Grosscup, Baker and Seaman. An injunction issued by Judge Sanborn of Milwaukee against the Iron Molders' Union on complaint of the Allis-Chalmers Company two years ago was modified by the higher court and a number of the clauses in the original writ were vacated entirely.

Noted Ambassador Is Dead.

Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, one of Great Britain's noted ambassadors, died in Brighton, England, at the age of 78. Besides figuring largely in Eastern affairs Sir Henry achieved prominence as a member of the celebrated fourth party in the British House of Commons, which, under the leadership of Lord Randolph Churchill, created a stir quite out of proportion to its small numbers.

Policeman Kills Child of 5.

In attempting to break up a disorderly crowd in Minneapolis, John Connolly, a new patrolman, fired two shots, but both went wild, one striking Theodore Hedine 5 years old, who died shortly after of the wound, and the other seriously injuring Julia Churchill, 20 years old.

Mrs. Sothern Refused Divorce.

A Nevada judge refused to grant a divorce to Virginia Harned from E. H. Sothern, because neither appeared in court.

Consul General Ridgely Dies.

Benjamin H. Ridgely, United States consul general to Mexico City, died in the Mexico City Pullman while waiting for the Mexico City train. Consul General Ridgely was accompanied by his wife and mother.

Suffragettes Besiege Parliament.

A mob of 100,000 besieged Parliament in London as a climax of the suffragette campaign, and the entire police force, aided by military, had trouble fighting off the disturbers.

MOTHER AND SON AT SCHOOL.

Attends Institution with Boy to See that He Gets Fair Play.

Little "Jimmie" Scott, a negro, age 10 years, is in Lansing, Mich., claimed by his mother, Mrs. J. J. Scott, to be a victim of race prejudice. She says the boy is not treated fairly by his white schoolmates. In fact, she suspects that perhaps he does not get the chance he should to receive an education. The boy is in the third grade. The mother is accompanying her son to school. She sits by his side during study hours and returns home with him afterward. "I want my boy to have his chance," the mother says. "He is a good boy, and I want him educated as are white folks' children, so I go to school with him to see that he is not pestered and is given his chance to study." It is said that the boy does not learn easily, and that is the reason he has not advanced more rapidly. This does not accord with Mrs. Scott's opinion. She says: "Jimmie is a bright boy, and if they will give him a chance other boys have he can go along with the other boys."

HAD TWO HUSBANDS FOR YEAR.

New York Woman Deceived One in Daytime and Other at Night.

By passing the day with one and the night with the other, Mrs. Catherine Stroebel was able to deceive two husbands for a year in New York. Details of the dual life were made public in the suit which ended in a divorce for Philip Stroebel. The expose of Mrs. Stroebel came through the detective work of Stroebel's sister, who became suspicious when she did not receive answers to repeated telephone calls to Stroebel's home at night. Stroebel, an engineer, worked at night. Immediately after he would leave in the evening his wife would go to the home of Jacob Valusse, where she would prepare supper for him. Departing in the morning after cooking the Valusse breakfast, she would arrive at the Stroebel home in time to greet her other husband and prepare his breakfast.

FOUR RAILROADS ARE FINED.

Confess Hauling Stock More than 28 Hours Without Unloading.

The cases of the government against four Kansas railroads charged with violating the twenty-eight hour stock law came up in the United States District Court in Leavenworth, Kan. These are cases in which indictments were returned against the railroad companies for hauling stock more than twenty-eight hours without taking the animals from the cars to feed and water them. The railroads pleaded guilty. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe was fined $700 on three counts, the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific $6,850 on fifty-nine counts, the Missouri Pacific $600 on four counts, and the St. Louis and San Francisco $1,200 on eleven counts.

BEAM KILLS WIFE; SAVES BABY.

Breaks Woman's Neck in Building Collapse and Protects Child.

An explosion that occurred in a nearby factory more than six years ago, it is declared, caused the collapse of two dwellings in the northern section of Philadelphia, in which one person was killed and several severely injured. Mrs. Mary Heffner, aged 20 years, was the victim of the accident. She was caught by a falling beam and her neck broken while going to rescue her six-weeks-old baby. The baby was buried under the debris, but the beam which killed the mother rested on the edge of the couch and prevented the debris from crushing out the infant's life.

Liner Pretoria Sinks Ship.

The Hamburg-American Line received a wireless message from the steamship Pretoria, which was expected to arrive at Cuxhaven that night, that she had been in a collision in a dense fog off the Dutch coast with an ore steamship owned by Hess W. Kuntsmann, of Stettin. The ore ship rapidly sank, but the Pretoria was only slightly damaged. The Pretoria picked up ten men, but the remainder of the sunken vessel's crew were probably drowned.

Hanna's Protege Is a Suicide.

Dan Hart of Abilene, Kan., committed suicide by shooting. Family troubles are said to have been the cause. While a child Hart was the inmate of an orphans' home, and attracted the attention of the late Mark Hanna, who took him to rear. Hart was a member of the Hanna family for a number of years. He was a great favorite with the Senator, whose own son Dan was named after him.

Outlaws Alarm a County.

Reports from Arvonia indicate that the situation in Buckingham county, Va., scene of recent outlaw depredations, is again grave. Edmund Hubbard, commonwealth's attorney for the county, has telegraphed Gov. Swanson for assistance, requesting detectives. It is believed the Zimmerman-Thomas bands have again appeared.

Chicagoan at Traction Helm.

The interurban projects of the Oklahoma City Street Railway Company have been turned over to Marcus Pollasky of Chicago, and future extension of the system will be conducted under his supervision. This also includes the Guthrie street car property.

Cholera Panic in a Theater.

A case of cholera was discovered during a performance at the Souvorin Theater in St. Petersburg. There was a panic in the audience. For a certain twenty-four hours there were in the municipal hospitals 109 new cases of the cholera and forty-seven deaths.

Thaw Returned to Institution.

Justice Mills, in the Supreme Court in White Plains, N. Y., recommitted Harry K. Thaw to the Matteawan Asylum for the Criminal Insane.

WOMAN IDENTIFIES DEAD BOY.

Mrs. McCloud Tells Police Child Is Her Son by New York Lawyer.

The body of a 7-year-old boy which was washed ashore at Belford, N. J., was identified as that of Harold McCloud, who disappeared mysteriously from his home in Brooklyn several days ago. The identification was made by the child's mother, who has been directing the search for the boy since his disappearance. She has insisted from the first that Harold was kidnaped. After identifying the clothing found on the body Mrs. McCloud told the coroner she is certain the child was carried away by his father, who, she said, is not her husband, Alexander McCloud, but a well-known lawyer, who is about to be married to a wealthy woman in New York. She had known that man before she met Mr. McCloud, she said, and it was as a result of McCloud learning of this acquaintance that he left her less than a year after their marriage. Mrs. McCloud declares that ten days after she had talked with this man the boy was enticed to a cab occupied by a man and woman and hurriedly driven away. She declared her belief that the lad was murdered, but the coroner said an examination of the body revealed nothing that would lead to suspicion of foul play.

FOUR ARE KILLED BY GAS.

Ten Others Unconscious as Result of Escape of Fluid.

Illuminating gas leaking into sleeping rooms in an Italian boarding house on Bank street, in Waterbury, Conn., kept by Giuseppi Santoro, killed four Italian men. Besides the dead, eight men and two women were found unconscious. One of the women is the wife of the proprietor. Antonio de Marco, who discovered the escape of the gas, told the police that his attention was attracted to the house by groaning. He summoned two policemen and with them went to the place, which is a three-story building. The odor of gas was so strong that it was impossible to enter until the doors had been allowed to stand wide open for a while. An entrance being effected, three men were found dead in a bed and a fourth on the floor, his position indicating that he had tried to reach a window.

Speaker Cannon of the House of Representatives has just sold $49,000 worth of his Nebraska farm lands and is offering for sale still other property he owns in eastern Nebraska. The farm Mr. Cannon has just sold contains 700 acres and sold for $70 an acre. The market price for lands of the same class in the vicinity is $75 to $80. Mr. Cannon purchased this property years ago, when lands were going at a song. He is reported to own thousands of acres in eastern Nebraska, right in the heart of the corn and wheat belt.

FIGHTS HIS DOGS FOR LIFE.

A raving maniac, after clinging to a dory plank fighting for his place with two of his dogs for thirty-six hours in the North Atlantic, the captain of the French three-masted schooner Junita was brought into St. Pierre, Miq., by the fishing schooner General Archamere, the sole survivor of a crew of twenty-six men. The disaster, which is the worst that has befallen the fishing fleet on the Grand Banks in years, occurred during the hurricane which swept northward from the West Indies.

Seats Collapse at Ball Game.

Five hundred spectators were thrown into a panic and thirteen of them were hurt—two mortally—by the collapse of the grand stand on the Brighton oval, East New York, at the outset of the baseball game between the Brooklyn National team and the Brighton Athletic Club, the amateur champions of Brooklyn.

Leper's Father Causes Strike.

The workmen in the Camden, N. J., coke plant struck because Prince Clark, father of Charles Clark, a leper at the Camden county almshouse, was found to be working with them. Physicians say he shows no superficial traces of the disease, but he will be held pending advice from the State board of health.

Midshipmen Asked to Resign.

The Annapolis naval academy authorities have called upon twenty-three midshipmen for their resignations, following a meeting of the academic board, when it was found that fifteen members of the new fourth-class and eight second-class men had failed to pass the regular September mental examinations.

Halted Union Death Cause?

A wedding three times postponed appears to be the most important element upon which to base a solution of the mystery surrounding the death of Orie Lee, the girl whose body was found on a country road near Wadsworth, O.

Trans-Mississippi Date Is Set.

The executive committee of the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress has decided to hold the next meeting of the congress, which is scheduled for Denver, in August, 1909.

Chicago Child Kidnaped.

Margaret Frances Mitchell, 8 years old, heiress to $250,000 and niece of Minnie Mitchell, who was murdered by William Bartholin, was kidnaped in Chicago by three men in an automobile.

Cruiser Breaks Record.

In her official trials the British cruiser Inflexible attained a speed of twenty-seven and one-quarter knots, breaking all records. It was stated after the trial that her speed would have been greater had not a fog prevailed.

MONEY IN CANTELOUPES.

Former Desert Land Now Worth $5,000 an Acre.

In some sections of Colorado and in the Southwest, where only a few years ago the land was a worthless desert, the canteloupe is king. The luscious fruit is at its best where other fruits and vegetables are not grown. It is a hermit. Squashes, watermelons and pumpkins grown in its vicinity cause it to deteriorate, but potatoes grown in its neighborhood seem to add to its virtue.

From four districts in the West the export value of canteloupes this year will be $10,000,000. In the vicinity of Glenwood, Colo., new land, redeemed by irrigation and devoted to canteloupes, is selling for $5,000 an acre. This statement seems preposterous until one is confronted by the recorded deeds. A fruit farm of 20 acres which was bought at $1,000 an acre three years ago produced in cantaloupes per acre in the three years $1,500, $2,100 and $2,000, thus returning the purchase price each year with 50 per cent profit the first year and 100 per cent profit the following years.

The region about Glenwood which it is possible to irrigate does not exceed 20,000 acres and most of it has already been snapped up. The soil is incredibly rich, but has no rainfall.

Another canteloupe district is the Salton Sea, in southern California, formerly a desert strewn with bleaching human bones. Part of it is now irrigated and from one section there was shipped this year $2,000,000 worth of melons, while as much more rotted on the ground. This former sun-baked desert is now bringing apricot trees into bearing in two years and giving crops of barley, kaffir corn, onions and cantaloupes in succession on the same land in one year. The sun shines 365 days in a year.

QUESTIONS ABOUT THE FARM.

President Asks Many and the Commission Is Busy.

President Roosevelt wants to know whether the farmer likes his farm and why. To receive this information a commission on country life, consisting of six members, is now conducting an investigation. After the farmer has made known his advantages and drawbacks, other citizens are to be asked whether they like their job, their home, their neighbors and why.

Some of the questions now going over the thousands of rural routes are as follows:

"Are the farm homes in your neighborhood as good as they should be under existing conditions?"

"Are the schools in your neighborhood training boys and girls satisfactorily for life on the farm?"

"Do the farmers in your neighborhood get the returns they reasonably should from the sale of their products?"

"Do the farmers in your neighborhood receive from the railroads, highroads, trolley lines, etc., the service they reasonably should have?"

"Do the farmers in your neighborhood receive from the United States postal service, rural telephone, etc., the service they reasonably should expect?"

"Are the farmers and their wives in your neighborhood satisfactorily organized to promote their mutual interest?"

"Are the renters of farms in your neighborhood making a satisfactory living?"

"Is the supply of farm labor in your neighborhood satisfactory?"

Senator Culberson of Texas has been appointed to succeed David R. Francis of Missouri as chairman of the advisory committee of the Democratic national campaign organization. Mr. Francis has gone abroad.

Candidate Taft came out of his vacation seclusion at Middle Bass Island and started from Sandusky across Ohio by train, making many short addresses from the rear platform of the observation car in which he rode.

Candidate Bryan has issued a reply to the pamphlet published by President Van Cleave of the Manufacturers' Association in the interest of Taft. Bryan says that the Democratic labor plank is not an assault on the courts, and asks if the labor question is so important as to justify business men in ignoring all other issues. Instead of creating the "class spirit," as Van Cleave had said the jury trial clause did, Bryan holds that it aims to prevent having the writ of injunction used to create or to favor a class.

In a letter addressed to Rev. R. H. Gesner, rector of Christ Episcopal church of Oswego, James S. Sherman, Republican vice presidential candidate, expressed himself unequivocally in favor of the renomination of Gov. Charles E. Hughes.

"A prohibitionist does not have to be a total abstainer," said Eugene W. Chafin, prohibition candidate for president, in a speech at the old capitol building in St. Paul. "The prohibitionist is the man who votes the prohibition ticket on election day because he believes the principle is right."

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The weekly review of trade, published by R. G. Dun & Co., says:

Trade developments include none of striking importance, and conditions mainly afford encouragement for the future. Movements of general merchandise now extend to seasonable proportions, and retail trade here and at the interior is favorably stimulated by lower temperatures.

Staple commodities remain in fair request for early shipment, the attendance of buyers in the wholesale branches being well maintained, and the deep water ways convention brought large numbers of visitors, who bought freely at the fall openings in fashionable lines, satisfactory absorption being made of apparel, millinery, footwear and house furnishings.

Chicago steam road returns testify to increasing freight tonnage, of finished products and heavy materials, and receipts disclose further recovery in crude supplies for conversions.

Live stock arrivals make the best aggregate in some time past, although shortage is yet felt in hogs and beeves.

Stocks of provisions in store have undergone rapid reduction during the last thirty days, and easier values induced more liberal buying and heavy east-bound shipments.

Cash grain markets were duller than was expected, but futures became active upon reports of political troubles in Europe.

Manufacturing indicates that machinery and labor have become more fully engaged. Furnace product is in rather quiet demand for the first quarter of 1909, and prices waver, but there is steadier activity at the steel mills, carshops and foundries, and closer working to capacity in farm implements, heavy hardware, machinery and electric appliances.

Bank clearings, $237,347,561, are 4.9 per cent under those of corresponding week of 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district numbered twenty-five, against twenty-seven last week and twenty-four a year ago. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number five, against six last week and nine in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Although trade reports are somewhat irregular in character, owing largely to varying weather conditions in different sections of the country and uncertainties caused by impending elections, the general undertone is toward sustained improvement.

Country trade has been comparatively quiet, because the farmers have been taking advantage of the ideal weather to complete their harvesting. However, the heavy marketing of crops has been for an increased railway tonnage and improved collections considerably, while exports of wheat are heavy.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Oct. 8 number 256, against 225 last week, 192 in the like week of 1907, 192 in 1906, 183 in 1905 and 196 in 1904. Business failures for the week in Canada number thirty-one, as against thirty-six last week and twenty-four in this week in 1907.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

At Salem, Mass., after a continuous existence in the hands of the same family, the oldest store in America has been closed, ending a career of 104 years. The present owner will devote his time to the development of an invention.

Officials of the International Paper Company have announced that several mills which have been shut down for four weeks will be started within a few days. The plants were closed because the men refused to accept a reduction of 10 per cent in wages.

Aunt Diana

The Sunshine of the Family

A QUIET, natural home story, this, but full of character and interest for those who delight in domestic details of life. A young girl takes charge of a large family in a motherly fashion that wins regard, and the incidents are all pleasing and consistent.

This serial will greatly please home readers, and its influence cannot help but benefit and ennoble the mind and the purer impulses of the heart.

CHAPTER I.

There are conflicts in most lives—real hand-to-hand combats, that have to be fought, not with any fleshly weapons, but with the inner forces of the being—battles wherein the victory is not always to the strong, where the young and the weak and the little ones may be found abiding nearest to the standards.

Such a conflict had come to Alison Merle, breaking up the surface of her smooth outer life, and revealing possible shoals and quicksands, in which many of her brightest hopes might be wrecked.

"It is hard. I do not know that even if Aunt Di think it right I shall ever have the heart to do it," murmured Alison, talking to herself in her agitation, after the manner of older folk. "I have just rooted myself in this dear place, and the soil suits me. I could not flourish anywhere else; and," finished Alison, with a quaint little smile, "sickly plants are worth nothing."

To any ordinary spectator the interior of that little room would have presented a picture of perfect serenity and absolute comfort. Even the young creature comfortably seated in a chair by the window, with an open letter and a cluster of deep red roses lying among the folds of her white gown, presented no disturbing image, though the cheek had lost its wonted fresh color, and the dark, dreamy eyes had a look of doubt that was almost pain in them.

Two years ago—she had been sixteen then, and, oh, how discontented and ill and unhappy she had been. It was not only the loss of her mother, it was her own incapacity for responsibility, her morbid dislike to her surroundings, that had fretted all her fine color away. Change of air would do her good, and then Aunt Diana had come down upon them with the freshness of a moorland breeze.

"You must give your eldest girl to me, Ainslie," she had said to Alison's father; "she wants care and cherishing more than Miss Leigh has time to give her." And, of course, Aunt Diana had her way.

Instead of the whir of machinery—for her father's sawmills were just behind their house—Alison had now only to listen to the soft flow of the river that glided below the green lawns and shrubberies of Moss-side; instead of waking up in the morning to look across the dusty shrubs and trees to the vast wood piles and masses of unsawn timber, that seemed endlessly between her and the blue sky, Alison's eyes had now the finest prospect; one shaded garden seemed to run into another, and when the willows were thinned or bare in winter time, what a view of the river and green meadows on the opposite side!

The moral surroundings were almost as much changed. Instead of Miss Leigh's dry method of instruction, Aunt Diana had placed within her reach many a pleasant short cut to knowledge, had suggested all sorts of enviable accomplishments; money was not stinted where Alison's talents could be turned to account.

In this pleasant but bracing atmosphere Alison had thriven and grown. She was still a tall, slim girl, somewhat youthful in look, but with plenty of warm life and energy about her; and though the dark eyes had still their old trick of dreaming, they seemed to dream more happily, and the shadow did not lie so deep in them—not, at least, until the June afternoon, when Alison sat sighing and visibly disturbed with her lap full of roses. It was evident at last that she found her thoughts too painful, for after another half hour's intense brooding she suddenly jumped up from her seat, scattering the flowers where they lay unheeded on the Indian matting, and walked abruptly to the door. She had dropped her letters, too; but she went back and picked them up, not replacing them in their envelopes, and then she went out into the passage.

A dark oak staircase led into a little square hall, fitted up with bookcases like a library, with a harmonium on one side; a glass door opened into a conservatory, through which one passed into the garden.

Alison turned the handle of a door just opposite the staircase, and stood for a moment hesitating on the threshold.

What a pleasant room that was, half studio and half drawing room, full of cross lights, and artistically littered with an odd jumble of medieval and modern furniture—oak chairs and cabinets, basketwork lounges, tiny tea tables, fit for Lilliputian princesses, and hanging cupboards of quaint old china that gave warm coloring to the whole. Alison's eyes were still fixed on a lady who stood with her back toward her, painting at an easel.

"Well, child, what now?" The voice was nicely modulated, clear and musical, but the manner slightly abrupt.

Alison came forward at once and inspected the picture. "It is very pretty, Aunt Di," she said, forgetting her own worries in a moment. "It is one of your best. I think I see what you mean, but to me it is all beautiful; that old man—a pensioner, is he not? and that poor, tired sheep, that seems to have dropped down by the way, left behind by the flock, is so suggestive of the title, 'Noontide Rest.'"

"That is what I intended. You are an intelligent child, Allie; both the man and the sheep must be old; it is not for young creatures to rest at noontide; my old pensioner has already borne the burden and heat of the day."

"Of course, I see what you mean, Aunt Di."

"My parable is not hard to read," replied Miss Carrington, with a smile, but as Alison studied the picture with increased interest and admiration, a pair of shrewd, kindly eyes were studying the girl's face.

"Go and put yourself in that easy chair opposite, and tell me all about it," she said at last, rousing her by a good-humored little push. "I must finish this branch if I am to enjoy my night's rest, but I can listen to any amount of lettered woes," with a suggestive glance at Alison's hand.

"Oh, Aunt Di, how do you find out things so?" stammered Alison; then, as though used to obedience, she moved to the chair that was always reserved for Miss Carrington's visitors, whom she was wont to entertain after a fashion of her own.

"I wonder how long I am to have patience," observed Miss Carrington, painting on industriously, as Alison sat with drooping head, looking at her letters, without offering to read them. "I am quite sure those are Rudel's straggling characters; that boy's handwriting is a disgrace to the family; it has put him out of my will forever; fancy one's nephew being such a sorry scribe."

"Rudel does write badly," returned Alison, with a faint little smile, "but I like his letters better than Missie's; there is one from Miss Leigh, too; do you admire her handwriting, Aunt Di?"

"No; it is too thin and angular," returned Miss Carrington, severely; "it wants freedom and breadth; it reminds me too much of Miss Leigh herself."

"I do not think we are any of us very fond of her," interrupted Alison. "I know she fidgets father dreadfully, and Roger, too, though he is so good to her."

"Roger is good to everyone but himself," responded Miss Carrington; "but even he, with all his good nature, has owned to me that Miss Leigh has a very trying manner. You see, Alison, fussy people make poor companions. Miss Leigh has never leisure for anything but her own worries; she is too overweighted for cheerful conversation; if she could forget Poppie's misdemeanors, and Missie's pertness, and Rudel's roughness, and the servants' failures for about half an hour at a time, I could quite fancy Miss Leigh a pleasing companion; but now let me hear her letter."

"It is dreadfully long," sighed Alison, as she reluctantly obeyed. It was evident that she wished Miss Carrington to read the letters for herself, but Aunt Diana held a different opinion.

"My dear Alison," it began, "I am afraid that my weekly account will be little more cheering than the last; indeed, I am arriving slowly at the conviction that, unless some change be made in the household arrangements, I shall be compelled, however reluctantly, to resign my post."

"Humph! that looks bad," from Miss Carrington.

"I have done all I can in representing to your father the mischief that must result from his injudicious treatment of Mabel; she is becoming so thoroughly spoiled, so entirely her own mistress, that no amount of reasoning has any effect upon her. I do not wish to lay any undue stress on her behavior to myself; but her treatment of Mr. Roger, and the bad example that she sets to Poppie, not to mention the constant bickering that is always going on beween her and Rudel, are quite destroying the harmony of the household. You may imagine, my dear Alison, how trying all this is to a person of my sensitive temperament.

"I always said it was a black day for us when Miss Carrington took you away from The Holms. With all due deference to your aunt's benevolence and good feelings, I can not help thinking that a daughter's place is with her widowed father. Of course, you will talk the matter over with your aunt, and perhaps you may be able to assist me to some solution of our difficulties.

"PATIENCE LEIGH."

"Patience has changed to impatience," muttered Miss Carrington, grimly. "Sensitive people never own to being out of temper, but I should have said myself that there was a spice of ill-temper in that letter. Poor Miss Leigh is decidedly ruffled."

"She never could manage Missie; I always knew that," returned Alison, sorrowfully.

"And how old is Mabel, or Missie, as you call her?"

"Sixteen last birthday, Aunt Diana."

"Humph! there is not a more troublesome age."

"Aunt Di, I have something very serious to say. These letters came two or three days ago, and I have been thinking about them ever since. I do believe Miss Leigh is right in what she says, and that I am shirking my duty."

"Since when?" a little dryly.

"Since I got quite well and strong and happy, about a year ago," returned Alison, answering most literally. "I ought to have gone back then, and not have stopped on here quietly, taking the good of everything, and enjoying myself just as though I had no duties, and no place in life. It is all my fault if Missie is getting the upper hand, and making every one uncomfortable. I ought to go home to father and Roger."

There was no immediate answer to this, but in another moment Miss Carrington had walked to her slowly, and then, standing beside her, her hand stroked the girl's hair with a mute caressing gesture. "Do not cry about it, Allie," she said presently; but her own voice was not quite so clear as usual. "It is not a thing to be decided in a hurry; we must look at it all around; impulse is never a sure guide. No one is quite their own mistress, even at eighteen, and I am afraid you will have to ask my leave, unless you prefer running away."

"Oh, will you let me go, Aunt Di?" with a sudden start of joy, as though the knots that her conscience had tied were suddenly cut through in a most unexpected way.

"My dear, if it be right I will help you to go," was the expressive but somewhat curt answer to this; but as she spoke, Miss Carrington's hands pressed the girl's head a little heavily.

"Now," she continued, with a visible effort, "we must put all these troublesome things away for the present; there is the dressing bell, and we have only time to get ready for dinner, and you know it is our evening at Fernleigh, and we shall have to be cheerful for Mr. Moore's sake."

CHAPTER II.

An hour and a half later Miss Carrington and her niece were walking quickly down one of the garden paths until they came to a little gate set in the hedge; unlatching it, they passed into a neighboring garden, and then turned their faces in the direction of a low white house, with a veranda running all round it, and roses in profusion running over it. As they did so, the notes of a violin, evidently played by a practiced hand, reached them. Miss Carrington's face brightened, and, making a gesture to her companion to move softly, she stepped up to a window and looked through it. The room, if it were a drawing room, was almost as heterogeneously furnished as her own, but it bore the character of a library. Two of the walls were lined with bookcases; a grand piano and a harmonious occupied some of the space; there was a round table littered with books, and a superfluity of easy chairs in every stage of comfort, arranged more with a view to ease than appearance. A nearer inspection would have pointed out certain bachelor arrangements—some costly Turkish pipes; a pair of pistols, splendidly mounted; some silver cups and tankards, with various inscriptions on them, all engraved with the name of Greville Moore, and purporting to be certain prizes in the half-mile race, the high jump, throwing the cricket ball and other feats of prowess, performed by some youthful athlete.

An elderly man, with a long white beard and mustache, in a black velvet coat, sat with his back to the light, playing the violin. His face, seen in repose, was clear cut and handsome, in spite of the deep lines that time and perhaps many cares had traced upon it; but his eyes were cast down, as though in deep meditation, an habitual action, for Mr. Moore had been blind half his life.

He was playing from memory an exquisite fugue from Bach. The thin, somewhat wrinkled hand handled the bow with a precision, a delicacy, a masterly knowledge, that seemed surprising in his situation. Apparently he was lost himself in enjoyment of the sweet sounds that he had conjured up in his darkness, for a smile played round his lips as the harmony widened and vibrated, and his foot softly moved as though in unison. In a moment the fugue was ended and the bow lowered.

"Is that you, Sunny? Little witch, why have you stolen a march on the blind man? Of course, you have flown through the window."

"Aunt Diana set me the example," returned Alison, demurely. "How do you do again, Mr. Moore?"

"Oh, nicely, nicely; time always passes quickly with me in my own special world. Have you given your aunt her favorite chair? How does the picture progress, Miss Diana? Sunny tells me it is one of your best."

"Would you have me praise my own work?" returned Miss Carrington, brightly. "I must leave you to Alison's criticism. I hope to do something good before I die, and if I do not succeed, well, my life will have been happier for the trying."

Saves the Pupils' Teeth.

The dental statistics gathered in many European cities have revealed such an alarming condition of affairs that Germany, at least, has decided to adopt combative measures.

In all large towns dental clinics have been founded, consisting, as a rule, of specially fitted up rooms in one of the central schools.

Fully qualified dentists are appointed, who devote their whole time to their duties, but in Stuttgart the work is done voluntarily by the local dentists. That such a movement is necessary can scarcely be doubted when one learns that of many thousands of boys and girls examined from the ages of 8 to 13 only 2 per cent had a perfectly healthy set of teeth. To give an idea of the amount of work done in a year at Darmstadt schools it is necessary to quote the figures of 1903. During the year 1,376 children were examined and 1,561 teeth were filled, while 1,871 were extracted. In Strassburg 2,666 children were examined, 690 teeth were filled and 2,912 were extracted.

Another interesting fact is that 40 per cent of all teeth examined were bad. The method of work is simple; the teacher takes his class to the dentist, who examines each mouth quickly and marks on the card which each child has brought with it whether treatment is necessary. If so the child must come again on a Saturday.

Russia is also joining in the movement and has already fitted up nine such institutions in St. Petersburg alone, while Moscow has also several.

Drugs and the Brain.

Most people believe that drugs affect the brain. Yet this apparently is not so, according to physicians. Drugs no more affect the brain than does insanity—that is, not at all!—except alcohol, which does injure the brain, though not at all on account of its mental efforts, but for the very different reason that alcohol has a chemical affinity for the albumen and fats of the tissues. By this chemical action it slowly alters and damages brain itssue, but this result in no wise differs from similar alterations produced by alcohol in the tissues of the liver and of the kidneys. Tobacco is a powerful poison, and yet no autopsies can show the yeast difference between the brain of a lifelong smoker and that of one who never lit a cigar. Likewise, the brain of an opium fiend is indistinguishable from any other brain, and so on for the rest. Drugs do affect the mind and will power, but not the brain substance itself.

All that had been serene partook of strange disorder now. Negley should have made an effort ere this to reach him. The power that devastated the city and with unspent violence swept the morne might have reached three leagues at sea! Save that the gray was unchangeable in the roof of the world, he could not believe that all this was one day. * * (* Lara would never forgive him for being whole, at the price of her mother's eyes! There seemed no adjustment possible for this cruel play of his service. * * * He called the mother's name softly, but his words made no impress—called in frenzy at last, and felt her shudder in his arms.

"Boy!"

"Yes, yes."

"Tell Lara that there was no yesterday—no last night! And leave me here—in the dark!"

How long afterwards he never knew, but he awoke to find himself uttering incoherent sentences. The woman was quite dead. * * * The hours drew on into eternity, but the gray still lived in the sky. He loosened his arm, and the blood rushing into the strained limb bore with it a thrashing pain. The water had cooled, but he did not put his burden down. He had not yet fathomed the extent of her surrender, nor the signet and color of her personality upon every word she had spoken. * * * He heard a cry from Lara, and deemed it the encroachment of personal madness. Scornfully he answered. Again the voice of the woman! He arose and called her name. A shadow darkened the orifice, and he saw his lady in the sky.

It may be in this marvelous world, where men carry on their wars and their woolngs, some pursuing their little ways of darkness, some bursting into blooms of valor and tenderness—it may be that after the most exalted passage of agony and terror, two of Earth's people were returned to each other in the strangeness of these. One swooning at the curb of an ancient cistern, under the hot leaden sky, the falling sea before, and Pelee, with his tens of thousands slain, on her right hand; the other in the pit below, standing in the cooling water, and calling upon her to forgive him for failing in that which only the gods could do. It may be that in the collection of Earth's tableaux another such film is curled away—from another age and another cataclysm.

"Niver you worry your heartt, sorr," called Macready, to whom the voice of his friend had brought imperious consciousness, man-wise, instead of collapse. "Th' faint is nothin'. 'Tis a fortune fur thim as can faint fur joy, an' no hurrt in ut, sorr. Have you th' strent' t' do th' overhand up th' chain, wit' th' fairest av tin t'ousand at th' top, sorr?"

Constable placed his burden upon the stone slabs, caught the chain, and pulled himself free from the water. His weight was a mountain. The five days had done what four had not—played havoc with the one hundred and ninety pounds of manhood which struggled upward under Macready's cheers, and fell across the rim of the cistern into Macready's arms.

Lara awoke and found Constable bending over her. Her eyes rested upon his lacerated hand, upon the swollen veins in his throat and temples. She saw blood upon his clothing, blisters upon his neck, sweat and mire upon his face. * * * The reality came that he was praying for her to forgive him—because her mother had died in his arms.

"Peter, my beloved!" she murmured. "You say—that mother——"

She halted, for the grief uprose in its fullness in her mind. The day had put a look of horror in her eyes that months would not efface. * * * But there was no mortal hurt upon her. Her nostrils, lips, hands—all moved in their way of dear perfection. Some time she would see that he had done his best. * * * Though he had failed in all else, he had saved this masterpiece from harm.

"But if I had not come back, she never would have known," he pleaded. "And she forgave me—I'm quite sure—as you'll forgive me——"

"What are you saying?" she cried suddenly. "What do you mean? It is horrible, but I came thinking to find you all lying here—as they are in the city—all dead and down—and I have found my lover living!"

"Ernst, lad," said the other, "th' boss an' th' l'adin' lady are havin' an intelechooal repasht in th' cinter av th' sta-age, be th' ould well. Bear in moind you're a chorus gurrl, an' conduct yourself in accord."

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Madame was steaming down from Basse Terre to Saint Pierre. It was the third morning after the tragic eighth of May. On the evening after the eruption the ship had touched Fort de France, and left the natives there to join Father Damien's colony. Then the Madame was dispatched to Dominica, where Constable cabled to New York for officers and men to complete the ship's company, and succeeded also in reaching Mr. Stansbury by cable, with the word that his daughter had been saved, before the planter could get passage for the Whited Sepulchre.

Constable and Lara were sitting together at the cabin door in the sunlight and soft winds. The girl wore a robe purchased ready-made in Basse Terre. It was white and lustrous, a strange native fabric, which the man regarded with seriousness and awe. This was an item in the first consignament of feminine apparel he had ever had the honor to purchase. The joy was full and rare.

"I come to you empty-handed and very soiled from the heat of the journey, sir," she had told him; "but father will reimburse you."

"Father will be allowed certain privileges, but not that," he had replied, and many were the booties, flounces, ribands, and mysteries which they drew, together and apart, from the treasure houses of little Basse Terre.

Peter was in white, too, of a freshness only found on shipboard. His right hand was in the swathed state which denotes repairs, and a thickness of lint was fitted under his collar. There was, too, a drawn look about his mouth and eyes, to which the recuperative forces had not yet attended. Negley, multifariously bandaged, was on the bridge, in company with a new officer, secured temporarily at Dominica. The captain was unable to walk, but signified his intention of healing above decks. Constable was regarding the sad face before him, and the beauty of it had made him dumb for several moments.

"Lara," he said finally, "we'll make the pilgrimage together to Saint Pierre—or the place!"

"She was very beautiful and very proud—our mother!" the girl whispered unsteadily. "She told you to leave her there—in the dark, so that we would never see—how changed she was. I know—how she felt."

Lara, Peter and Crusoe made their arduous way up the cluttered road into the Rue de Rivoli. A smoky charnal, Saint Pierre, made human only by the lamentations of those who had come down for their dead from Morne Rouge and the hills. The wind was still; and the sun shone through silent towers of smoke, and it was noon. No one had spoken for several minutes. The fruit shop had fallen in part. The stone arch remained, although the wooden door had been levelled and partly devoured by fire. Crusoe remained outside with Lara, while Peter went in to see if the place was safe. They heard his steps upon the stones, the rattle of falling plaster. The waiting was long before he appeared and beckoned. They followed him into the little stone shop. A breath of coolness still lingered in the dim place, and the fruity odor of spilled wine. The ash-covered floor was packed hard, and still was damp from the gusts of rain through the open door and the broken-backed roof. Steady as a clock ticking there was heard the "drip, drip" from somewhere among the merciful shadows, where the old soldier of France was sitting.

"Lara, dearest, I should have spared you this. Must you go farther?" Peter whispered. "Crusoe and I will be only a moment."

"I am going, too," the girl answered.

The three climbed over the heap of stones, which was the rear doorway, and entered the court from whence the song birds had flown. Across the drifts of ash, into the dark beyond, they made their way, Constable leading, Crusoe last.

They were sitting together—the lovers. She had been listening, like Desdemona, as he "spake of most disastrous chances—battles, sieges, fortunes." Soronia had been the first to see the sinister face of Iago at the door! She had bent forward and covered in her arms the face of her soldier, her painter of pictures. * * * Thus they had fallen—the adventurer in the shelter of the golden vine. Pelee had covered them with dust—each particle of covering dust fresh-wrought from the fire in which the stars were forged.

Something in the tone caused the man who was accustomed to do as he pleased to forbear from his investigations. After all, his own life had been spared because Constable had taken him captive, and the trip had paid. Crusoe did not understand what was between the millionaire and the revolutionist. It occurred to him at last that this something must have been greater even than dollars; yet he was not sure. The look upon Constable's face as he led the woman into the sunlight was that of fortunes lost! Crusoe left them there, and made his own way back to Fort de France, to wait for his ship. He was happy to be alive, but he carried a crowning mystery in his brain. This had to do with a millionaire's generosity on the one hand, and a millionaire's perversity on the other. After all, he acknowledged that he knew less of Constable than when he left New York.

Peter and Lara had descended nearly to the shore when she said: "If your strange friend had not come into our lives, we could never have known each other as we do now. We might have loved and gone our way, without knowing all that it means to be human, without knowing all that our hearts could make us do."

"It all worked out like a mosaic for you and me, Lara. Our valiants fell about us, but we were left. Always in our greatest need a man arose to help—Breen, Negley, Ernst, little Denny——"

"Was there work for Pugh to do?" she asked.

"Ah, Pugh—the weak sister! He kept you from going into the harbor too soon! I shall pay him and let him go his way to-night in Fort de France. The sea is a strange mistress to mother two such sons as the lion Negley and the poor little jackal Pugh! * * * Sweetest Lady, I am in love with you and the world! Bear witness that I forgive Pugh—aye, forgive Mondet! See, down the Rue Victor—the wreck of Les Colonies! The little editor was there, perhaps, writing his paragraphs on the stanchness of Pelee! * * * Once, Lara, my mother said, 'Peter, some time you will breathe the breath of life!' I know what she meant now. I wonder how she knew?"

"Mothers are close to the heart of things."

There were tears in her eyes. To the right of them, among the ruins, a wailing woman had found her own.

They had traversed the Morne d'Orange. The sun bathed the fields. The wreck of the great plantation house was hunched closer to the ground. As he neared the rim of the cistern, Peter halted suddenly by the stricken lianas, and beckoned Lara back. The well curbing was broken away, and the earth for yards surrounding had caved into the pit.

"Mondet was right, after all, about the earthquake," he said.

Without speaking, they stood there for several moments. Then Peter took her hand and led her back toward the boat at the Sugar Landing.

Night had fallen. Up through the streets of the capital, they strode, the man and woman. Casements were open to the stars and the sea, but the people were dull with grief. Martinique had lost her first-born, and Fort de France, the gentle sister of Saint Pierre, was bowed in the spirit of weeping. They had loved and leaned on each other, this boy and girl of the mother island.

Through the silent crowds Peter and Lara walked, a part of the silence, passing the groves and towers, where the laws of France are born again for the little aliens; treading streets of darkness and moaning, streets of light and tears. A field of fire-lights shone ahead, their red glow shining upon new canvas. This was the little colony of Father Damien—brands plucked from the burning of Saint Pierre. They passed the edge of the bivouac. A woman sat nursing her babe, fire-light upon her face and breast, drowsy little ones about her. Coffee and night-air and quavering lullabies; above all, beautiful Josephine in marble, smiling dreamily among the stars. It was the most potent instant of Constable's life; some great joy or thrilling tragedy was breathing upon his heart. He saw a tear upon the cheek of Lara. The voice of Father Damien came from the distance:

"Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart; for God hath already accepted thy works. Let thy garments be always white; and let not thy head lack ointment. Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest, all the days of thy life——"

There was a cry from behind. It was from the lips of the woman with the babe at her breast. She had caught the garments of Lara in her hands, and, half kneeling, with her face toward Peter, she exclaimed in a voice of joy:

"He is come! He is come!"

The silent camp uprose with a shout of gladness. The remnant of Saint Pierre pressed about the man and woman, crying, laughing, kissing their hands. Constable had not dreamed of such glorifying gratitude; and yet he was humbled to tears. These were so few, and Saint Pierre so vast!

"Father Damien," he said, when his voice came to him, "we are come to take you out to our ship——"

"Not on the ship, but here—now!" the old priest cried. "It is the moment of ten thousand years!"

And so they were restored to each other, in the midst of their devoted, in the fire-light, beneath the Seven Palms and the blessings of the Empress.

(THE END.)

LITTLE BOY WON REPRIEVE.

Son of Attorney General Brewster Pleaded for Criminal.

The coming wedding of Miss Mary Brewster and Donald Cassells is of great interest to all old Washingtonians because it united two families who have always been identified with Washington society.

The grandfather of the bride-elect was Benjamin Harris Brewster, who occupied the position of Attorney General during President Arthur's administration. When a young man Mr. Brewster risked his life in a heroic effort to save his sister from death by fire, and was himself terribly burned and disfigured for life. He had most fascinating manners and was noted for his brilliant conversational powers.

There is a very interesting anecdote told of Attorney General Brewster and his son Andre, now a captain in the United States army, which is probably not known to this generation.

During Mr. Brewster's term as Attorney General a notorious highwayman and criminal was caught in Louisiana and brought to trial. It was a celebrated case, and finally the trial ended, and the prisoner, having been proven guilty, was sentenced to be hanged. But his counsel put in a stay of proceedings, and telegraphed the Attorney General, asking him to intercede with President Arthur and secure a reprieve for the prisoner.

This telegram did not reach Washington until the day before that set for the execution. The Attorney General had gone to Philadelphia for the day, and the telegram was sent to his house instead of his office, and placed on his desk to await his return.

Andre Brewster, then a little lad, full of life and mischief, was a privileged character—an only son—and a great favorite with all the prominent government officials. He had the run of his father's library, and from the moment that telegram arrived he became possessed with a desire to read it. Finally, curiosity got the better of him, and when he had mastered its contents he was deeply impressed with it. During the afternoon he asked his mother all manner of questions in regard to the President's exercise of clemency, and she could not imagine why the boy was interested in that subject. Andre kept his own counsel and reluctantly retiree to bed before his father's return home.

Late that night the Attorney General returned, and, going to his desk, found on top of the pile of letters the Louisiana telegram, with this indorsement, in Andre's round, boyish hand:

"Dear Papa: Give the poor man a chance. ANDRE."

It was raining and sleeting, but Attorney General Brewster's carriage had remained at his door, and, taking the dispatch, he hurried off to the White House. President Arthur read it, and the indorsement; laid it down, and turning to the Attorney General, said, with his kindly smile:

But, alas! for Andre's success as a special pleader. Twenty-four hours later the President was besieged with letters and telegrams from Louisiana begging him not to release a dangerous criminal in a law-abiding community.—Washington Post.

Headache Every Month

You may think, because you have long had it, that you must have a headache every month, being a women.

But if you think so, you are wrong, since a headache is a sign of disease of your womanly organs, that thousands of other women have been able to relieve or cure, by the use of that wonderful, woman's medicine,

All Hearst was to do was to pour "oil" on the waters of apathy.

Won't somebody throw a million or so to the campaign committee? They are hungry.

It is understood, however, that neither party will object to receiving Standard Oil votes.

Count that day lost whose low, descending sun finds not some letter fired or statemen on the run.

One great objection to the publication of campaign contributions may be the fact that there are none worth mentioning.

Mr. Roosevelt must be a little confused with some people crying "To the stump:" and others "To the woods"

You see, you can never tell. A little while ago both Uncle Joe Cannon and and fire-Alarm Joe Foraker were regarded as Presidential timber.

The fun both sides are having figuring out how they are going to carry the election once more shows that while there's dope there's hope.

Another base ball season has passed. The players have scattered to their homes, taking up their various winter avocations. The fans, what shall we say? Well those who are still living will be either premitted to let their baseball ardour cool off or spend the winter and perhaps the remainder of their days in the mad house playing over againand again the terrific struggles of the summer days that are past.

There is no denying but that the pennant races in the two major leagues were the most exciting known in the history of baseball. At the begining of the season, baseball magnates feared there would be a falling off in gate receipts as this was campaign year. Such was not the case, however. When the struggle became so close, politics were lost sight of, and voter and candidate hied themselves to the base ball arena.

The season of 1908 has not been as clean and free from rowdyism as its predecessor. In the intense strain and excitement caused by the close race, players and spectators often forgot the better traits of a gentlemen and resorted to degrading actions in demionstrating their intense interest. Umpires who no doubt were working hard to make decisions fairly, have been openly assaulted by players and fans. Players have so far forgot themselves as to use vile and indecent language in-so-far that it was necessary to expell them from the grounds. Spectators have gone so far as to forget their place and have openly attacked players.

During the past few years, efforts have been made to put the national game as played before the American people, on a higher plain. Managements have been reasonably successful in this. Many clubs this year have openly showed their disapproval of the rowdy tactics of a few of the teams. They should stand firm and see that the game is played before the people in such a way that it will be a clean sport fit for the enjoyment of anyone, at any place and at any time.

More than fifty years ago Macauley prophesied of us in this language: "Your republic will be as fearfully plundered and laid waste in the twentieth century as the Roman empire was in the fifth, with this difference, that the Huns and Vandals who ravaged the Roman empire came from without, and that your Huns and Vandals will have been engendered within your own country and by your own institutions."

This prophecy has come to pass. The conditions are literally upon us and upon our country. There is vandalism in the twentieth century century as there was in the Sixth Century. The form is different, the effect is the same. The setting fire by night riders to twenty churches and school houses used by colored people in Georgia, the assembling of a special legislature in Indiana for the purpose of dealing with the night rider evil and the long unsuppressed existence of this evil in Kentucky are evidences that the conditions predicted by the great historian are upon us, that the dangers do not come from without, but from within and that the Huns and Vandals mounted on horseback with cowardly masked faces are our neighbors. Anarchy in many forms is in the saddle. It has recently shown itself in Springfield, Illinois, at the foot of the Lincoln Monument. It is rampant in the tobacco belt of Indiana and in the mountains of Kentucky. But night riders are in other and unsuspected places. There are "night riders" in corporations, defying law and corrupting legislative bodies. They are in political parties, which compromise with them and pander to them in order to secure their support.

Had A Close Call.

Mrs. Ada L. Croom, the widely know proprietor of the Croom Hotel, Vaughn, Miss., says: "For several months I suffered with a severe cough, and consumption seemed to have its grip on me, when a friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery. I began taking it, and three bottles affected a complete cure." The fame of this life saving cough and cold remedy, and lung and throat healer is world wide. Sold at H. Political Redemption.

There is an evident lack of funds to carry on the campaign as stremously as has been done in previous presidential races. There is also a general dissatisfaction with the financial end of the campaign arrangements, this year. Old workers are bemoaning the reduced condition of the political treasury, and there seems to be considerable rivalry between workers in opposing parties as to the proper manner of accounting to the voters for the size and use of funds.

Perhaps this is a case in which poverty will go a long way toward political salvation. Money is not so plenteous in the hands of political bosses, with which to influence individual votes or to move the will of corporations and companies. On this account true patriotism is influencing the political world more today than ever before; and may it not be claimed that the election results will be achieved on merit alone—that men will vote their sentiments?

The "silent vote" has ever been a terror to the statesman who carries the nation about on his shoulders. Every means is put forth to bring this vote under the siren influence of the partisan manipulator. This year, there is not so much pressure being brought to bear directly upon the individual voter and he is left to himself for more careful and conservative study. The silent vote is usually the thinking vote. It is the best political force in the nation and will make a loud noise this fall.

Let us be thankful for our political poverty for out of it may come redemption.

Thoughtful voters should not be unmindful of the probable effect of the Presidential election upon the United States Supreme Court. This body is justly held at home and abroad to be the most learned collection of judges sitting on the same bench. The next President will be called upon in all probability to name a number of justices for the Supreme Court. It is possible that the voters in November may thoughtlessly pave the way to a deplorable change in the attitude of the court toward the Constitution of the United States and its guarantees of personal and property rights. A president with fallacious and dangerous ideas and an assortment of political fads and fancies might be able to force the confirmation by the Senate of Supreme Justices with leaning towards such ideas, and with disastrous consequences to the whole country. In view of the centralizing process which is bringing important activities of the people under the jurisdiction of the federal goverment, this court sitting at Washington becomes more and more the bulwark of national stability.

Neuralgia Pains

Are the result of an abnormal condition of the more prominent nerve branches, caused by congestion, irritation, or disease. If you want to relieve the pain try Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills. They often relieve when everything else fails. They leave no disagreeable after-effects. Just a pleasurable sense of relief. Try them.

"I have neuralgia headache right over my eyes, and I am really afraid that my eyes will burst. I also have neuralgia pain around my heart. I have been taking Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills recently and find they relieve these troubles quickly. I seldom find it necessary to take more than two tablets for complete relief."

Man Wanted

WANED—SUCCESS MAGAZINE requires the services of a man in St. Joe to look after expiring subscriptions and to secure new business by means of special methods unusually effective; position permanent; prefer one with experience, but would consider any applicant with good natural qualifications; salary $1.50 per day, with commission option. Address, with references, R. C. Peacock, Room 102, Success Magazine Bldg., New York.

Gets The Business.

This office has become noted through out the surrounding country for the fine class of sale bills it puts out. Farmers from 10 to 15 miles from here come to have the bills announcing their public sales, printed at the News office. It has been insinuated by someone, sometime and somewhere that we are paying a man commission to solicit sale bills from adjoining neighborhoods. If this were true it would be a purely legitimate business proposition, but in justice to the auctioneer who frequently brings a job of printing, let it be said that he does it as a matter of convenience to himself and also because he knows he can get a bill that will attract attention.

By phoning to this office you can get a date for a sale and at the same time engage the services of one of the best auctioneers in Indiana. It does not make any difference how good your goods are or how many you have, you cannot sell them unless you have a crowd to buy, and then you must have an auctioneer who can get the price. Good sale bills get the crowd, and our lengthy auctioneer gets the price.

Fruit Show at Purdue.

Arrangements have been completed for the Second Annual fruit show, to be held at Purdue University, during the week of the Farmers' Short Course Jan. 11-16, 1909. Great interest was shown by the fruit growers of the state in the First Annual Show held last year. The exhibition this winter will be held under the joint auspices of the Indiana Horticultural Society and the Horticultural Department of the University. It is planned to make the fruit show bigger and better than ever. The society is providing a generous premium list—over $300 in cash prizes being already assured. Everyone interested in the growing of fruit is urged to enter this contest, practically the only condition being that all fruit shown must be grown by the exhibitor. For premium list and further information apply to C. G. Woodbury, Experiment Station, LaFayette, Ind.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE CALL OF THE HEROIC.

By Henry F. Cope.

"Thou therefore endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."—II. Tim., ii., 3.

It is hardship and not ease that attracts men. Those who have the capacity for greatness crave great things to do and they are willing to bear the pains and privations involved in such deeds. Commonly we make the mistake of urging men to religion because it is so easy and helpful; we need rather to offer the motive of its cost and hardships.

There is little hope for any man who does not respond to the call of the heroic. We may have lost the youth's enthusiasm for deeds of daring, and we may now be willing to wear slippers instead of high boots. But something essential to full living has died within us if our blood does not flow faster at the thought of great sacrifices and if we do not feel the impulse and desire to have our share in them.

The hope of any race is that it will go on worshiping its worthy heroes. Christianity has been most valuable to the world and most vital within itself in the measure that it has been a religion of hero worship. It has been the glowing enthusiasm of its people for the person and the glorious, sacrificial life of Christ that has counteracted the cold and sterile aspects of its philosophies.

The theology of Christianity has tended rather to invite cowards to its ranks; it has said to men, if you are afraid of hell believe these statements and you will have nothing more to fear. But the fact of Jesus of Nazareth has been mightier than the philosophies and men who either abhorred such factitious forms of righteousness or failed to understand any of the philosophy have been swayed by admiration for his life.

Churches ought to be groups of people who have caught the vision of the great and costly service that the world needs. They are Christian only in the measure that they have accepted the Christ mission. They are to be judged not by their power to gain wealth, to beautify their structures, or to indulge in luxurious fittings, but by the sacrificial service they are rendering society.

As long as religion is a hiding place from the deserts of wrongdoing, as long as it invites men with promises of ease, of heavenly rest and earthly peace, it will attract only the weaklings. When it shall stand and say to me, "Here is a great work to be done, here are tasks that will cost us dearly," the strong will flock to its banner.

The call to the Christian life is a call to the heroic; it is the imperative of the heavenly vision. It bids men do hard things, follow their own highest hopes and fairest ideals. It says to the least of men, Set out to save the world. It bids men lay down their lives.

It is no easy thing to live the life that sets the soul above the sod, to fight constantly this battle, without the least respite, against the sloth and selfishness of our natures. It is hard to resist the temptations to compromise with our own ideals, to snatch the prizes offered for some slight violation of conscience.

It calls for fortitude to stand for things that are high, to be willing to be called fool for some deed of faith, to choose the unfading prizes of honor and truth and right where men are struggling for the prizes that perish.

It calls for courage to do the Christly kind of service in this world. Living for men is not a matter of soft sentiment; serving the needy is something sterner than scattering a few teardrops over the slums. No man can take the part of the oppressed without making an enemy of the oppressor. If you are afraid of a sword you had better not enter His service.

The cross his followers must bear is a real one, not of signs or sentiments, but of the hatred and opposition of those who have been used to fatten by wrong while the servants of the right stood complacently by. It is the cross of being counted a fool because you choose the right before revenue, the good of others before your own.

The world wants men who will suffer, more than it wants those who can succeed; it needs those who are not afraid to fail or to lose, if only they may serve the right; it needs those who will endure hardness for the things they count highest and most worth while. And all such ever will find the way and inspiration of their living in the great hero of Nazareth.

INSPIRATION IN PAUL'S LIFE.

By Rev. Henry Mottet.

I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.—Gal. vi. 17.

Among all the men whom the world counts great few rank higher than the Apostle Paul. Forasmuch as a man, by his influence, uplifts and inspires us, and forasmuch as he actually becomes a conscious power for good in our daily life, he wins both our interest and our affection to such an extent that even the seemingly little things of life take on for us a serious importance. Many have wondered what he meant when he said that he bore in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus.

You are aware that it was customary in bygone ages to brand with a hot iron for identification both slaves and prisoners. It is possible that when made a prisoner for his Master's sake the prison mark was branded with a white hot iron into his flesh. Or there may be another explanation, difficult to accept because of its seeming incredibility. There exists a tradition that the impression of the spear in the Master's side and the print of the nails in his hands and feet somehow appeared upon the person of Paul and that these are the marks to which he refers.

He is by no means alone in the distinction of having borne these specific marks. There are others eminent in the early Christian church who boasted of a similar mysterious branding. I submit to the wonder of all whether after all, there does not exist some subtle process of thought transference which may account for these marks of the Lord Jesus. But put to one side every theory, there are three marks which speak ever with undying and majestic eloquence and which interpret St. Paul in such manner that not a single one of the race but will bow in reverent admiration.

The first mark: He lived with the high end in view that he might develop the noblest kind of manhood—the manhood of the Lord Jesus—and that then he might bestow the benefit of that manhood upon his fellow man.

The second mark: Branded upon him was the sturdy steadfastness which characterizes his whole life to the very end. He never flinched. He never complained. A lofty end in view and the steady pursuit of the same in rain and shine, who will not anew praise God for such inspiration?

The third mark: Here may be approached the finest note in the man's life. There is no such thing possible as abiding greatness where there is not within the man a tender, a quickly responsive and a loyal heart and a burning affection for God and for all humanity. Unless a man can love much, and love as did the Apostle, he can never fill any but a small and obscure place.

The marks of the Lord Jesus: Do you ask for any finer, more winsome than these? High purpose, absolute steadfastness, Christlike affection, may these brand us, may they forever remain in and upon us, the marks of the Lord Jesus, which you and I proudly bear in our bodies and in our every day life.

SHORT METER SERMONS.

The ready made religion always looks the part.

There is nothing holier than everyday helpfulness.

Faith never would know itself but for foul weather.

The man who can keep his religion to himself hasn't any to keep.

There never will be a closed town until there is a wide open church.

The honest man knows himself too well to think he wholly is self-made.

Religion never will be attractive so long as it only offers easy things to men.

There are some men who, if they were drowning, would wait for a quarter sawed board.

Men will bother little over the breadth of your opinions unless you have, too, depth of convictions.

It's usually the man who has learned how hard it is to begin to think who denounces intellectuality.

It's a strange delusion of many that God can have no new thoughts when once they have spoken.

Some people have a way of praying for peace that only prods their neighbors into open hostility.

There may be more religion in cursing as though you liked it than in praying as though it hurt you.

The man who cannot go to church without sleeping has a remarkable power of keeping his eyes open at a political meeting.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't live for fun lest you die a fool.

Don't mistake slothfulness for toleration.

Don't stop to deliberate after opportunity has arrived.

Don't seek God's service to secure your own promotion.

Don't forget that the most heavenly things on earth are everyday virtues.

Don't place so much emphasis on form that you lose sight of your fellowman.

Don't have larger ideas of liberality of other people's money than you have of your own.

Don't fail to remember that a little material aid is worth more than a lot of sacred sympathy.

Don't try to increase the riches of the soul by what you save, for these depend on what you sow.

Don't wear a cloud on your brow when you engage in God's work lest it overshadow your efforts.

Smiles of The Day

A Reload for an Oliver.

Midnight came, but Mr. Staylate showed no signs of leaving.

"Do you like music?" asked the beautiful girl, just to break the monotony.

"Passionately fond of it," replied the bore. "In fact, do you know, music will always carry me away."

She dropped on to the piano seat and rattled off several popular airs, then, suddenly wheeling round, said:

"You are still here?"

"Ye-es," yawned the bore.

"But I thought you said music always carried you away?"

"So I did—music."

But he didn't stay much longer.

An Odd Coincidence.

"Do you know that nature and scholarship both agree in one thing?"

"What is that?"

Artful Scheme.

Mrs. Knicker—"That little Jones boy has such beautiful table manners."

Mrs. Bocker—"Yes, his mother always feeds him at home before he is invited out."

Not Guilty.

"Johnny, who was it struck Goliath with a stone?"

"It wasn't me. I never hit nobody with a stone in my life."—Houston Post.

Test of Mettle.

"But how can you tell when a man rings true?"

Couldn't See Them.

"You have done your best to enforce the blue laws?" said one official.

"Yes," answered the other, "but the police were color blind."—Washington Star.

A Peacemaker.

"You're a liar!" exclaimed the first man.

"You're another!" retorted number two.

"Calm yourselves, gentlemen," interposed the peacemaker. "It is quite possible that you are both right."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Interchangeable.

"So you have determined upon a public career," said Senator Sorghum.

"Yes," answered the confident youth. "Which shall I seek, riches or fame?"

"Take either that comes your way and be thankful. If you're rich you can hire people to write articles about you and if you're famous you can write 'em yourself and sell 'em."—Washington Star.

Something Doing.

Johnny—"Ma, I guess you'd better walk ahead. Here comes a kid that owes me 5 cents."—Life.

The Mastiff's Diet.

"Will your dog bite me?"

"I hope not. He is an expensive dog and we have to be careful as to what he eats."—Nashville American.

He made Good.

Trotter—When young Biffkins left college a few years ago he declared he was going to forge his way to the front. Did he make good?

Feminine Finance.

Nell (enviously)—So that slip of paper your father sent you means enough money to buy a lot for a summer cottage?

Works Both Ways.

"Yes," rejoined the contrary person, "but I'd feel dreadful weary if I thought my head would lose its crown."

Worry-Proof.

"That woman is actually worry-proof."

"Is that so?"

"Yes. Her husband drives his own automobile and she never even thinks that an accident might occur to him."—Detroit Free Press.

Easily Explained.

"Tightwad let a man have $300 while he was out west."

"Good gracious! How did it happen?"

Hard to Do.

One of the hardest things for a husband to do is to arrange it so that the nights he comes home late to supper his wife is also late in getting it ready. If this were possible, a great deal of unpleasant conversation would be spared.—Detroit Free Press.

Where It Hung.

"How beautifully your sister puts up her hair," remarked the clever young man who hoped the little girl would repeat the compliment.

"Why," replied the little miss, who was entertaining him while sister dressed, "she just puts it up on an ordinary hook when she isn't wearing it."—Kansas City Times.

Not so Wonderful.

"My grandfather," said the new neighbor, who was making a duty call, "was a great portrait painter. With one stroke of his brush he could change a smiling face into a sad one."

"Huh!" exclaimed small Johnny, who happened to be in the parlor. "Our teacher can do that."

Exactly Like Her.

Rockford—She did, eh? Well, it certainly is very much like her. Did she pay for it?

Artist—No, sir.

Rockford—Ah, that is still more like her.

Talented.

"Is he a cheerful giver?"

"He's too much of a diplomat for that."

"What do you mean?"

"He's a cheerful borrower."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Ultra Swell.

Mrs. Green—Did you have a barn dance down at your house the other day?

Mrs. Hightons—No; "barn" seems so crude. We called it a "garage" dance

The Humane Principle.

Kid on Steed—Wot! Say, d'ye want ter break dis t'oroughbred colt's back?

Close Shave.

The Novice (tentatively)—That last shot was better, John. I don't think I missed that hare by very much, eh?

The Keeper (diplomatically)—Not by more than a hair's breadth, sir.—The Sketch.

The Safest.

Gunner—I say, old man, which would you consider the safest way to make a dash for the pole?

Fixed.

"Mrs. Gadabout is happy now."

"Why so?"

"She has a runabout."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

The Genuine Article.

"The lieutenant is a real soldier of fortune."

"Indeed?"

"Yes, he has just inherited half a million."—Kansas City Times.

Side-Show Catastrophe.

"What's the matter over there?"

"The sword swallower is being choked by a fishbone."—Sourire

Every Time.

"No; but his neighbors are."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Joy.

"Perkins looks very happy this year."

"He has reason to be. He says that after his wife and children had been fitted out with their fall wardrobes there was enough left over to enable him to have a new velvet collar put on his overcoat."—Life.

A Modern Critic.

Husband (after the theater)—Well, how do you like the piece?

Wife—Very much. There's only one improbable thing in it. The second act takes place two years after the first, and they have the same servant.—Pittsburg Observer.

Why the Mountains.

"It's odd Colorado is so mountainous while Kansas is so flat," remarked a Denver man to a citizen of Kansas City, Kan., who has been summering out there.

"Not so very," replied the Kansan. "Your part of the country has always had to hump itself to try to keep up with ours."—Kansas City Journal.

The Fat Hog.

Wu Ting Fang, the Chinese ambassador, said modestly at a dinner in Newport.

"I am aware that the honors heaped upon me are due to my exalted office, not to my humble self."

Several young ladies cried excitedly: "No, no!"

"But yes," said the ambassador, smiling. "It is my office, it is not I that gains and merits your consideration. Yet this is a mortifying truth of a kind that all of us—ambassadors or no—are apt to forget. May such a truth never be recalled to our memory with the harsh shock that——

"But listen. The other day a Rhode Island farmer won a blue ribbon at a Woonsocket stock show with a fat hog—a 1,250-pound hog.

"'Get my name right,' he said excitedly to the reporters, with their pencils and yellow paper, who crowded round him at awarding time. 'Get my name right, boys. It's Hiram Y. Doolittle, son of the late Gen. Augustus Anderson Doolittle, of St. Joseph, who settled in Rhode Island in the year——'

"'Oh, never mind all that,' the oldest reporter interrupted. 'Give us the pedigree of the hog.'"

The Rich Turkish Beggar.

Beggars are never suppressed in Turkey. The story is told (and they say it is true) about an American lady who by mistake gave a beggar of Constantinople a goldpiece. The man had left his post when she returned, but one of his colleagues told her where he "resided." It was a fine house, and at the door was a servant, who politely informed the lady that "my master is dressing. He will be down soon." And then the well groomed beggar, dressed for dinner, appeared and gladly returned the gold piece, exclaiming in the meanwhile that such mistakes were highly embarrassing.—"Charities and Commons."

Cigarette Smoking on the Increase.

Consumption of cigarettes increased largely in the United States during the last fiscal year ended June 30, 1908, according to the preliminary annual statement of internal revenue receipts. Tobacco revenues generally fell off, the public smoking fewer cigars than the preceding year, taking less snuff and chewing less. But more cigarettes of all kinds were used.

Less spirits were used than in 1907 the heaviest falling off being in the spirits distilled from grain, the revenue on which declined over $15,000,000 This would indicate large decline in whisky consumption. The beer business, however, continued to grow in spite of the depression.

The total decrease in internal revenue, as compared with the preceding fiscal year, was $17,998,072.

THREE WEEKS

Brought About a Remarkable Change.

Mrs. A. J. Davis of Murray, Ky., says: "When I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, kidney disease was slowly poisoning me. Dizzy spells almost made me fall, sharp pains like knife thrusts would catch me in the back, and finally an attack of grip left me with a constant agonizing backache. Doan's Kidney Pills helped me quickly and in three weeks' time there was not a symptom of kidney trouble remaining."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

While he was being initiated into the Beta Phi High School Fraternity in Bloomington, Wilbur Hobbs, 17 years of age, was dangerously hurt on the head and was unconscious for two hours.

John Weston, a farmer near Jasonville, shipped a carload of hogs to the Bourbon stockyards, Louisville, where they sold for 7 cents a pound, the highest price that has been received by any shipper this year.

Bass fishing in and around Logansport was never better. Since the cold snap struck this section bass bite on anything and everything, and fishermen stop pulling them in only when the number limited by law has been reached. Several four-pounders have been caught.

While cutting a sycamore tree on Bar creek, near Evnasville, Frank Meadows found the skeleton of a large snake hanging in the fork of two limbs. The vertebra bones were three-quarters of an inch in diameter, with rib bone three inches long. The reptile was probably five inches in diameter.

The Rev. Solomon Cupps, aged 79, for many years at the head of the First Church of Christ in Petersburg, died of dropsy at his home in that city. Although few followers of Christian Science ever call in a physician, yet a few days before Mr. Cupps died he secured medical attention, but too late to effect a cure.

What is believed to be evidence of murder was uncovered four miles east of Warsaw, in what is known as the Evans gravel pit, when the men employed by Road Supervisor George O. Warfel unearthed the entire skeleton of a man. The pit is near what for many years was regarded as a tough settlement. The authorities are investigating.

Griffith, east of Hammond, has a mad dog scare. A coach hound belonging to W. M. Melcher went mad and ran amuck in the main street, biting dogs and horses. John Stellma, a 7-year-old boy, was seized by the throat and lacerated. A posse of citizens is shooting all stray dogs. The Stellma boy was taken to Dyer, where a so-called mad stone is kept.

Postmaster M. W. Pershing, of Tipton, has received word from the Postoffice Department at Washington that free delivery will be established in Tipton on or about December 15 of this year. It is also announced that application blanks will be forwarded shortly by the Civil Service Commission, and the examination of carrier applicants will be conducted later.

Artman Francois, the miner whose back was broken and who was denied admittance to the St. Anthony Hospital in Terre Haute, is now on the road to recovery. When the injured man was refused admittance to the hospital the Linton physicians had no hope for his recovery, but they decided to do all in their power to prolong life. Finally they decided to replace the broken bone and after four hours' work they succeeded in doing so.

Judge Heaton, of the Allen County Superior Court, held recently that the letters "O. K." written on the back of an order for money and having a signature under them mean "all right," and are equivalent to an indorsement. The case in which the decision was made grew out of a refusal of the McBride Electrical Company, of Chicago, to pay for material bought by a subcontractor for a municipal lighting plant which the McBride Company was building.

Anglers in the vicinity of Lake Cicott, the most southern lake in Indiana and one of the best fishing places in the State, have formed an anti-carp club. To guard against carp getting in the lake the club members have taken it on themselves to examine the minnow buckets of all fishermen who come to the lake. The would-be anglers are not permitted to fish with carp minnows. They are first asked to throw away the carp minnows, and in the event they refuse, the Anti-Carp Club members forcibly compel them to do so.

E. D. Hoeltke, who lives west of Columbus, was feeding his chickens when a strange bird alighted in the barnyard and began gobbling up the grain. The bird seemed both tired and hungry, and the farmer had no difficulty in capturing it. He was unable to classify the fowl, so he brought it to Columbus, where he intended to have Ernest Stahlhuth, a local ornithologist, pass judgment. Mr. Stahlhuth was not in, and a clerk thought he would see whether or not the strange bird was a water fowl. He placed the bird in a large tank containing gold fish and minnows and went about his work. In a little while he returned to find that the visiting bird had gobbled down every goldfish and every minnow. He threw it out and it flew away without being classified.

The Board of Commissioners have ordered an election, to be held November 21, 1908, for the purpose of deciding whether or not to construct eight miles of rock roads in Washington Township, Pike County.

Willard Halslup, who owns a farm in the southeastern part of Bartholomew County, has corn as fine as has been seen in many seasons. On twenty-eight acres of ground he raised a corn crop this year that averaged more than eighty bushels to the acre.

Wayne Va_ Dolah, residing west of Dillsboro, shot and killed a chickenhawk which measured four feet from tip to tip.

The next reunion of the Thirty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, known as the Morton Rifles, will be held at Ossian in 1909.

The farmers of Shelby County are arranging to give a corn show in Shelbyville on November 25. Prizes will be given for the best exhibits.

The first brick on the new Danville postoffice was laid last week, a large force of workmen being engaged in order that the building may be completed as soon as possible.

The National Horse Thief Detective Association, which met in Peru, adjourned after selecting Charles Spry, of Logansport, president, and Crawfordsville as the next meeting place.

Irving Cartensen, 15 years old, of Hobart, was fatally injured in a hunting accident on Deep river. He stumbled over his gun while getting out of his boat. His right hand was blown off, the muscles in his right arm were torn and a part of his shoulder was shot off.

Several weeks ago a swarm of bees took refuge in the cupola of the Regular Baptist church in Owensville and this week the sexton, Mr. Matthews, found several pounds of honey there in fine condition. The bees got into the cupola through a small hole near the base.

Plans for a great waterway convention in Fort Wayne within the next few months are now being made. Cincinnati men who are interested in the Chicago to Toledo via Fort Wayne Canal were the prime movers in the suggestion for the Fort Wayne meeting, and it is a practical certainty.

Jacob Mangold, former night policeman of Decatur, was killed by Charles Wolf, it is alleged. Both men were working on a new road west of Decatur. Mangold instructed Wolf to unload stone according to rules. Wolf, it it charged, hurled a scantling, striking Mangold's head. Wolf is under arrest.

Ranch owners near Morocco are indignant over the conduct of Illinois hunters, who persistently invade the ranches and shoot prairie chickens and other game, contrary to law. The nearness of some of these ranches to the State line makes the work of guarding against violations of the game law a difficult matter.

L. A. Crittendon, near St. Anne, says that he figured, one rainy afternoon, on the number of miles he was compelled to walk in cultivating an acre of corn, and found it to be 312. He rented his farm and moved to town, where he walked 700 miles the first six months looking for a job. He has returned to the farm.

In the course of a clinic held by the Fort Wayne Medical Society recently, Dr. Alfred Kane presented an instance of one of the rarest diseases known to medical science. His patient is suffering from earamyclonus, a form of nervous prostration. It is said to be the third case of its kind in the United States and there are but thirteen in the world.

Sick and despondent because of recent reverses in his life, Benjamin F. Bowers, of Fort Wayne, picked up a shotgun and fired at his own heart. He died instantly. Bowers had been a contractor for a number of years, but had had a hard struggle. He was nearing his sixtieth year and had several times complained of his lot, threatening to "end it all."

It has developed that Dora Kohlmeier had expressed a willingness to marry in his cell John Allman, the youth who was sentenced to life imprisonment last week for the murder of her father, who interfered with their elopement. Allman has been taken to prison. The girl has been visiting him frequently the last few days and hesitated to give testimony against him. She was his last visitor.

The honeymoon of Mr. and Mrs. Jasper Haggard, of Muncie, which began only about five weeks ago, has been entirely shattered by the bride's pet cat, according to the story that the husband told the police, who arrested him for disorderly conduct. He admitted that he was intoxicated and probably did "act up" a little about the house, but said the cat was the cause of it. "She would rather play with that cat than to get my breakfast," said he. "That cat came between me and happiness almost on the day I was married." The wife declared that her husband had driven her from home and she caused his arrest.

Rain softening earth where they were working a gravel bank caved in on several workmen near Anderson, and John Atkinson, 61 years old, was instantly killed. Several men had narrow escapes from death.

The 12-year-old son of Douglass Moore, of Shelbyville, who broke his left leg four weeks ago, was on crutches recently, trying to walk for the first time, when he again tripped and fell, breaking the leg the second time in a month.

CHICAGO'S SHOCKING CONDITION

Fifteen Thousand School Children Suffering from Hunger.

According to the report of a committee which has been investigating conditions since May, there are 5,000 children in Chicago frequently sent to school breakfastless, while 10,000 others are habitually hungry as the result of receiving insufficient food. What to do with these children is now the problem that confronts the city. The Board of Education says that it cannot legally furnish food, but is willing to provide rooms and equipment to enable any philanthropic person, or organization, to relieve the distress. Many are opposed to the idea of giving free meals to children at school, believing that the proper course is to enter the homes of the people where destitution exists and relieve it there. They urge the argument that if the child who attends school is underfed the same condition, even perhaps to greater extent, applies to the younger children remaining at home. The problem is a serious one, and calls for quick solution.

Some of the conditions found by the investigating committee were most pitiable. Hundreds of mothers, the report says, often go to bed hungry in order that their children may have something to eat next morning. This self-denial is habitual heroism in several districts of the poor. Fathers out of work have been found who were regular beneficiaries of the free lunch counters in saloons, while their families went hungry.

Children have been found on South Water street, faint with hunger, begging for dead fowl in the crates or for decayed fruit. They have been seen feasting on remnants of food from garbage boxes in alleys and in a few instances clutching at crusts of bread thrown away by other children at school.

In 949 homes children were found being raised in places unfit for human habitation. The city is filled with deserted wives with large families. Children were found who did not know the taste of butter and to whom the taste of meat was but a memory.

MYSTERIOUS OMAHA MURDER.

Charles E. Davis Is Held for the Killing of Dr. Rustin.

After a five days' hearing Charles Edward Davis has been held on the charge of shooting Dr. Frederick Rustin of Omaha early on the morning of Sept. 2. Bail was fixed at $10,000 and was furnished. Mrs. Rice, who said she had a suicide compact with Rustin, was a principal witness against Davis.

Dr. Rustin was a married man in love with Mrs. Rice. He was heavily in debt and believed the only thing for him to do was to commit suicide in such a way as not to invalidate his insurance. According to Mrs. Rice he convinced her that she ought to kill him and then commit suicide. She tried, but her nerve failed. Then, she says, the doctor met Davis, who also wanted to die. The doctor, according to her, gave Davis poison with which to commit suicide, in consideration for which Davis agreed to shoot the doctor that night.

Davis admitted everything (even the taking of the poison) except the agreement to kill and the actual killing. Davis' attorney tried to convince the court that Mrs. Rice did the killing.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

Hamline University, of St. Paul, has raised $10,000 for a gymnasium and expects to double this sum.

Superintendent Heeter of the St. Paul schools and the school board will shortly take up the question of selecting four or five teachers to be sent to England on half or third pay to study the methods of the schools there.

The Sons of Veterans at their annual convention in Niagara Falls have inaugurated a movement to enlarge and increase the scope of the college established at Mason City, Iowa, to educate the sons and daughters of veterans.

At Reading, Pa., it is announced that the famous collection of butterflies and moths belonging to the late Herman Stecker has been sold to the Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago, by Mrs. Stecker for $20,000.

Members of the Minneapolis labor union of electrical workers have sent in a petition to the board of regents of the University of Minnesota to establish for them a night school for instruction in practical electrical subjects.

For the first time in years there are no secret societies made up of high school pupils in Minneapolis, according to the annual report of Dr. C. M. Jordan, superintendent of city schools, made to the Minneapolis board of education.

Sixty white pupils went on strike at the Lincoln school in Topeka, Kan. They walked out and paraded up and down the street, declaring they would never enter the doors of the school again until the negro pupils are excluded. It is feared that the strike will spread to other ward schools.

James J. Hill has made a gift of $6,000 to Minnesota College, Minneapolis, for the erection of a new building at Harvard and Delaware streets.

To ascertain how many students of foreign birth and the races they belong to attending the University of Minnesota, the immigration committee, authorized by Congress to conduct an investigation of the immigration problem in Europe, Asia and the United States, has sent to President Cyrus Northrop of the university, blanks for the use of every student in the institution. The same action is taken in other schools throughout the country.

CURE AT CITY MISSION.

Awful Case of Scabies—Body a Mass of Sores from Scratching—Her Tortures Yield to Cuticura.

"A young woman came to our city mission in a most awful condition physically. Our doctor examined her and told us that she had scabies (the itch), incipient paresis, rheumatism, etc., brought on from exposure. Her poor body was a mass of sores from scratching and she was not able to retain solid food. We worked hard over her for seven weeks, but we could see little improvement. One day I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, and we bathed our patient well and gave her a full dose of the Resolvent. She slept better that night and the next day I got a box of Cuticura Ointment. In five weeks this young woman was able to look for a position, and she is now strong and well. Laura Jane Bates, 85 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y., Mar. 11, 1907."

Her Protector.

"Well, sir," explained young Mr. Sooberbs, "it was like this : I thought my wife might be afraid of tramps so I bought her a watchdog. He was a fierce looking bull, and I reckoned he'd about fill the bill. I got him in the morning and had him sent right out to the house. When I got home that night one of the toughest looking hoboes you ever saw was sitting on the porch. 'What in thunder are you doing here?' I asked. 'Well, boss,' says he, 'I come lookin' fer a handout, an' de lady she gimme 50 cents to stick around an' pertect her from dat dog o' yours. She's sure scared of 'im.'"—Kansas City Newsbook.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

TELEGRAPHING TYPEWRITERS.

New Instrument Sends and Receives Without Making Mistakes.

The latest device in telegraph is a telegraphing typewriter. It can be attached to and placed under any ordinary typewriter, says the Electrical World. When so connected it becomes a complete sending and receiving telegraph instrument, and both sending and receiving instruments record the message.

The only experience required is that of an operator working a typewriter. The message is sent in the same manner in which you would proceed to write a letter on an ordinary typewriter. This same message will be received on the receiving typewriter exactly as it appears on the sending one.

In some respects it resembles the familiar stock ticker and other printing telegraph instruments, but unlike these it makes possible the use of capital and small letters as in ordinary letter writing. The receiving machine records the message just as written and gives what corresponds to a carbon copy made on the original machine.

There is said to be no chance for mistakes. The machine takes down the message just as sent. There is no human receiver to make a mistake by faulty hearing or carelessness or neglect, as is the case with the present Morse system of dots and dashes in use all over the world.

NOT A MIRACLE

Just Plain Cause and Effect.

There are some quite remarkable things happening every day, which seem almost miraculous.

Some persons would not believe that a man could suffer from coffee drinking so severely as to cause spells of unconsciousness. And to find complete relief in changing from coffee to Postum is well worth recording.

"I used to be a great coffee drinker, so much so that it was killing me by inches. My heart became so weak I would fall and lie unconscious for an hour at a time. The spells caught me sometimes two or three times a day.

"My friends, and even the doctor, told me it was drinking coffee that caused the trouble. I would not believe it, and still drank coffee until I could not leave my room.

"Then my doctor, who drinks Postum himself, persuaded me to stop coffee and try Postum. After much hesitation I concluded to try it. That was eight months ago. Since then I have had but few of those spells, none for more than four months.

"I feel better, sleep better and am better every way. I now drink nothing but Postum and touch no coffee, and as I am seventy years of age all my friends think the improvement quite remarkable."

"There's a Reason."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

No other medicine has been so successful in relieving the suffering of women or received so many genuine testimonials as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

In every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Almost every one you meet has either been benefited by it, or has friends who have.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., any woman any day may see the files containing over one million one hundred thousand letters from women seeking health, and here are the letters in which they openly state over their own signatures that they were cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made from roots and herbs, without drugs, and is wholesome and harmless.

The reason why Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is so successful is because it contains ingredients which act directly upon the feminine organism, restoring it to a healthy normal condition.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

There has been seen a large bright beautiful star appearing in the eastern horizon about daybreak during last week which some have called the "Star of Bethlehem" and have said it would not appear again for a thousand years. It is not known who is authority for the above, but we will quote what Hicks, the great astronomer, of St. Louis, has to say about it. "Millions of the human race, especially, the toiling early risers in all nations and lands, will gaze upon the beautiful orb, the masses not knowing that it is Venus. The sight will be very beautiful for several days before and after the 13th".

Woods Catch on Fire

Last Thursday Geo. Provines' woods were set on fire by a spark from a Wabash freight going north about 2:30 o'clock. The fire started in the woods spreading over about two acres, burning the line fence between Pervines and Chaney, entirely. The neighbors together with the aid of the Spencerville section men, kept the fire from spreading as much as possible. In the evening the St. Joe section men guarded the fire until there was no more danger. Mr. Pervines filed his claim with the railroad company to the amount of $15.00.

A Worthy Speaker.

Aaron Worth and the Hooser Male Quartet were the attraction at the opera house, Tuesday evening of last week. Mr. Worth that grand old man orator sustained his reputation before the crowded auditorium. He held the interested attention of all with his arguments and his wit and sparkling humor moved all to merriment.

The Hoosier Quartet enlivened the program with some good musical selections. If the crowd Tuesday night was any indication the Prohibitionists will poll as large a vote in this township as the Republicans who held their rally the week previous.

Mr. and Mrs. Edd Leighty and daughter Marie, spent Sunday with Mrs. Leighty's brother, Fred Jenkins and wife.

MUSIC

I will do a limited amount of PIANO TUNING during spare time only. Not to exceed two per week any time. Three orders ahead now. $2.50 cash—$3.00 cash if beyond five miles from home, to be done near a certain dehired date or any special orders. No tuning in summer.

To Students

1900 students who reside in St. Joe or who will come to St. Joe or my home for lessons will be given preference in any grade and accepted the same as old students if notice is received in time. No promise can be made now or before April or May 1909.

Reception

A reception was given at the very pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Koch on last Saturday evening, in honor of John Draggoo and wife of Crystal City, Mich. In all there were about thirty present, this number composing the immediate relatives. The fore part of the evening was spent in a social way after which the young people engaged themselves in playing parlor games also with music and song. Ice cream, cake and ice tea were served. The evening was a pleasant one. Mr. Draggoo and wife returned to their home Monday.

Notice to Readers

Notice is hereby given to the readers that the partnership which was formed between Fred B. Leighty and Lee O. Tustison has been dissolved by mutual consent. Mr. Tustison retiring and Mr. Leighty still acting as editor and publisher of the News. We intend to give the people alive and up-to-date paper and this can be fully accomplished with the aid of all. We desire to thank all for their patronage given us and desire a continuance of the same.

Respectfully,
Fred B. Leighty.

Wes Mutzfeld of Butler was in town yesterday.

Sheffer guarantees all work he trys to please. Try him.

Mrs. Dr. Morr and son of Albion, are the guests of Joseph Koch and other relatives this week.

For Reresentative

JOHN W. HENDERSON,

Of Auburn who is a genial gentleman known by nearly every one in the county. His affable ways, his generous disposition, his words of good cheer always make it a pleasure to meet him. He is the same "Jack" today that he was yesterday. The office of representative is one of the utmost importance to the people. If there is any office in which you need a man of mature judgment, conscientious in his deeds, of unquestioned honesty and the strictest integrity it is in this office of representative where the temptations to go wrong are many and manifold and the inducements often exceedingly alluring. Mr.

Henderson as a resident of Concord township served as their trustee and for four years past has filled the office of county recorder. In all this service there has never been a suspicious act or an unworthy deed. There is not a "dishonest hair in his head" nor a thought to wilfully do wrong in his heart. We need men like "Jack" Henderson in the legislative halls, men who are not afraid to stand for right and who scores the wrong. If we had more men of this type in our legislative halls our laws would be better and corruption would not run riot. No man unless he is of highest character, no matter what his ability is should, ever be sent to the legislature but when you combine this character with ability as in the case of Mr. Henderson you have the qualifications that make the ideal legislator.

Try Sheffer for repair work.

Mrs. Cadmir Woodcox of Garrett, came to this place Thursday, and spent the remainder of the week with friends and relatives.

Frank Scholes is building one of the new county bridges about five miles north of Waterloo and has been employing help from here.—Waterloo Dawn.

New Organization.

Several ladies met at the home of Mrs. Elizabeth Leighty, Friday afternoon of last week, and organized what is to be known as the "Culture Club". Mrs. Mahlon Baker was chosen chairman for the afternoon with Mrs. Fred B. Leighty as secretary. The following officers were then elected:—Pres., Mrs. Mahlon Baker: Vice Pres., Mrs. J. D. Leighty; Sec Mrs. Fred B. Leighty; Treas Mrs. Dr. Bowman: Critic, Mrs. Florence Buchanan: Press Cor., Mrs. W. C. DeLong. The club colors are Purple and Gold. Club flower, White Rose. It was decided to meet on Wednesday evening of each week at the several different homes. The first meeting will be with Mrs. J. D. Leighty tonight, at 7 o'clock. The Club starts out with twenty members enrolled, the limited number being twenty-four. It is hoped every meeting will be filled with pleasure and interest, and that this club will be a benefit, not only to its members, but to the little town in which it lives and thrives.

Boy Found Dead.

The police were notified Monday in a telegram from the coroner at St. Joseph, Ill., that the body of William Benninghoff had been found in a box car at Champaign, Ill., and asking that the members of his family be notified.

Later in the day a letter was received from a newspaper office at Champaign telling of the finding of the body and saying that the parents lived at Ft. Wayne. This letter did not give any of the particulars concerning the manner of his death or the circumstances under which the body was found.

Detective Charles Lenz notified Daniel Benninghoff, the father of the dead man, at his barbershop, 1514 South Calhoun street, and he left at noon to bring the body back.

Benninghoff has been absent from the city, for three or four years and his family had not heard from him for two years. He was a druggist and was for about three years employed at the H. F. Beverforden drug store, on S. Calhoun street. His habits were a little irregular and for that reason he lost his position there and afterward he went west.

The family reside at 1009 East Lewis street and a sister Miss Beatrice Benninghoff, is employed at the Rurode dry goods store. Mr. Benninghoff will bring the body to Ft. Wayne for burial.

Chas. Koch goes to Ft. Wayne today after Mr. Is Lamen's little daughter, who has been confined at the Lutheran Hospital for sometime. She was operated on about a week ago, Dr. Lake assisting.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

Three Perish in Tenement Fire.

Three persons were killed, four others badly injured and the lives of a hundred more were imperiled by fire in the six story tenement house at 83 East Third street, New York City. The fire started in the basement and before an alarm had been given the lower part of the house was ablaze and the flames were sweeping up the stairways. When the alarm swept through the crowded house there was a mad scramble for fire escapes and windows, and for twenty minutes the firemen and police were kept busy carrying the frightened ones to safety. It was not until the fire had been controlled and a search of the house was made that it was known any lives had been lost.

Disasters in the Philippines.

Belated reports from the Philippines indicate that the storm of October 12 in the Cagayan valley was the worst and most destructive within the memory of living inhabitants of the valley. The official figures are not yet available as many places have not been heard from, but it seems certain that the number of dead will reach 300. There was a heavy typhoon and torrential rains throughout the valley and in the mountains. Hundreds of houses were swept away. The government has dispatched a cutter to investigate conditions and organize relief. It is reported that cholera has broken out among the refugees.

Heavy Snow in Colorado.

A storm, accompanied by rain, which changed frequently to snow, has prevailed throughout northeastern Colorado for several days. In sections of the mountains heavy snow has fallen. Considerable damage was done to electric wires and telephone and telegraph wires are seriously affected. Railroad and interurban electric lines have been interrupted and at places completely blocked. Several accidents and at least one death have resulted from persons coming in contact with broken electric wires.

Circus Makes Big Money.

The Hagenbeck & Wallace shows recently returned to its home in Peru, Ind., from Chicago, where they exhibited for two weeks under the auspices of the Firemen's Association of Chicago, netted for the owner, Col. Benjamin E. Wallace, during that time $45,000. The firemen received $55,000 for their share. It is said that the shows during the season, which began May 2, resulted in a profit of more than $125,000 for Colonel Wallace.

Indiana Grain Elevators Burn.

A fire loss of over $100,000 was recorded at Vincennes, Ind., when the grain elevators of Bartlett, Kuhn & Co., of Terre Haute, along the river front, and the plant of the Empire Paper Company were destroyed by two disastrous fires that for a time threatened to get beyond control. Over 50,000 bushels of wheat and 1,500 bushels of corn were destroyed.

Haskell Suit Invalid.

The $600,000 libel suit which Governor Haskell, of Oklahoma filed in Omaha, Neb., last week against William R. Hearst, is pronounced invalid by prominent attorneys who have examined the petition.

Cloudburst in Oklahoma.

A cloudburst at Gaje, six miles west of Shawnee, Okla., caused the South Canadian to rise to an unprecedented rate, a height of two feet above the high water mark. So far no lives are reported lost.

American Dies of Cholera.

Lewis Conner, a member of the fire department of Manila, P. I., died of cholera. This is the first American death reported in some time. The average of new cases reported has fallen to two daily.

John W. Kern's Cousin Dead.

Isaac T. Kern, a first cousin of the Democratic vice presidential candidate, died at his home in Big Stone Gap, Va. He was 60 years old, an ex-Confederate and a Republican.

Little Girl Killed Herself.

Elsie Lenhart, 11 years old, committed suicide at her home in Chicago, Ill. The child left a note saying that everybody was "mean" to her and then turned on the gas in her room, where later she was found dead.

Typhoon Kills Three Hundred.

Reports received from Chang Chow, China, are to the effect that more than 300 lives were lost in that city as the result of the recent typhoon.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

The great white plague costs the people of the United States over a billion dollars each year. This statement was made by Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale before one of the sections of the tuberculosis congress. He estimates that consumption kills 138,000 every year in the United States. This is equal to the deaths from typhoid fever, scarlet fever, diphtheria, appendicitis, meningitis, diabetes, smallpox and cancer all put together. Then again, it generally takes three years to die, during which time the poor victim can earn little or nothing. Finally the scourge picks out its victims when they are young men and young women, at the very time they are beginning to earn money. The minimum cost of such items as doctor's bills, medicines, nursing and loss of earnings before death amounts to over $2,400 in each case, while the earning power which "might have been," if death had not come, brings the total cost to at least $8,000. If this is multiplied by the 138,000 deaths, we find the cost is bigger than the almost incalculable sum of $1,000,000,000. Prof. Fisher estimates that over half of this cost generally falls on the luckless victim himself, but the cost to others is over $440,000,000 a year. As a matter of self-defense it would be worth while to the community, he shows, in order to save merely a quarter of the lives now lost by consumption, to invest $5,500,000,000. At present only a fraction of 1 per cent of this money is being used to fight the disease. Five million people now living in the United States are doomed to fill consumptives' graves unless something is done to prevent it. As each death means anxiety and grief for a whole family, he estimated that there will be over 20,000,000 persons rendered miserable by these deaths.

It has been reported that District Attorney Jerome of New York had been asked by William Nelson Cromwell, organizer of big trusts and counsel for the government in the purchase of Panama Canal rights, to investigate charges of blackmail against one Alexander E. Bacon, who claims to have found evidence that a part at least of the $40,000,000 paid for those rights by the United States went to Cromwell indirectly. The story told was to the effect that American financiers had bought largely the stock of the French company prior to the purchase by the American government. It was said that the Cromwell syndicate had netted $36,500,000 in the deal. By order of the Secertary of War an investigation has been begun at New York of charges brought by Presidnt Brothers of the Balanced Cable Crane Company of Baltimore, who claims that he was deprived of a contract for Panama Canal work, although he was the lowest bidder.

Ever since the passage of the pure food law, manufacturers have complained of the injustice of denying them the use of the small amount of preservatives necessary to keep certain kinds of food products from fermentation or other form of deterioration. Professor Wiley of the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture has appointed a pure food committee, to represent the different States having pure food laws, the object of which will be to harmonize the State laws with the laws of the government. The committe will also, whout doubt, define what is a safe amount of preservative to be used. It is said that there has been an increase of ptomain-poisoning since the pure food law went into effect, but perhaps the statement, like some of the food products, can best be taken with a grain of salt—or of boracic acid.

After taking observations of the Wright trial flights at Fort Myer, the Navy Department has set forth the requirements of aeroplanes that will be acceptable to that department for use in scouting and dispatch bearing. They must be able to float on the water and rise from it without extra aid. They must be supported wholly by the air without the aid of a gas bag. Each machine is to carry two persons and a sufficient amount of fuel for a continuous flight of 200 miles for four hours at an average speed of forty miles an hour. They must be able to light without damage on either land or water and float on the water without wetting any of the supporting areas.

The army board of physicians which was ordered by the department to examine Colonel W. F. Stewart, the exiled officer at Fort Grant, who came under the displeasure of President Roosevelt, has reported that Stewart is suffering from heart disease, and is blind in his right eye, these ailments having been incurred in active service The doctors are of the opinion that the colonel is unfit for active service

RELIEF TRAIN BURNED AND MANY DIE IN FIRE

Refugees from Metz, Mich., Are Trapped by Forest Fires and a Score Perish.

FIFTEEN SKELETONS FOUND.

Engineer and Fireman Have Thrilling Escape After Seeking Safety in Vain in Water Tank.

Nearly a score of men, women and children, refugees from the Michigan forest fires that have destroyed seven towns and have caused property losses estimated at several million dollars, were burned to death in a relief train wreck Friday. The train, consisting of box cars, after leaving the town of Metz in the upper peninsula, struck a burned out culvert and left the track. The passengers were trapped on all sides by the flames and cremated in a fiery furnace. Fifteen charred skeletons were found in the burned wreck.

The forest fires above Alpena, in Presque Isle county, suddenly become threatening Thursday, after it was believed that the heavy rains early in the month had extinguished them. They spread rapidly and soon were menacing a number of towns along the line of the Detroit and Mackinac Railroad. The village of Metz, with about 100 inhabitants, lay in the path of the flames. Its situation became dangerous Thursday night.

MAP OF MICHIGAN FOREST FIRE SHOWING WHERE RELIEF TRAIN WAS BURNED

The railroad sent in a relief train of box cars. Household goods and mercantile stocks were loaded on some of the cars and the people filled the others. How many were taken aboard is not known, nor is it known whether any of the farmers from outlying points had come into Metz seeking refuge from the flames.

With its load of frightened men, women and children the train pulled out of Metz about midnight and started for the north, with flames along the tracks on both sides. The cars proceeded toward the north as far as Hawk's station, about half-way between Metz and Millersburg. There the fire was sweeping across the track so fiercely as to make further progress in that direction impossible and the train was headed back toward the south for Alpena. While rushing through the fire and smoke the engine struck a culvert which had been burned. It left the rails and fell into the ditch.

Engineer Foster and Fireman Lee took refuge in a water tank, where they stayed until the water became so hot that they had to leave the tank and run for their lives. They, with Conductor Kinville, realizing that the train was hopelessly ditched and that to remain with it meant certain death, started to Posen. They left the wreck and escaped by crawling along the tracks on their hands and knees, with the forests on both sides roaring furnaces. Conductor Kinville is reported to be blind from his burns, but Foster and Lee are understood to be not severely injured. There are reports that several others escaped with the trainmen.

BELGIANS TO COME HERE.

Movement to Send a Flood of Them to United States.

The next great influx of [illegible] into the United States is [illegible] from Belgium. Leon Genis [illegible] vice consul at Havana, [illegible] New York on his way from [illegible] to Cuba, said there was a [illegible] foot in Belgium to send a [illegible] of the country's laboring [illegible] population to America. It [illegible] government project, but [illegible] ment was looking into the [illegible] the extent of finding out for [illegible] pective flood of immigrants. [illegible] Genis said might for a time [illegible] influx of Italians into the United [illegible] in what places they might [illegible] as farmers and laborers.

Belgium, Mr. Genis said, [illegible] most densely populated country [illegible] rope and was suffering from [illegible] times more than countries [illegible] more land to cultivate and its [illegible] present population is estimated [illegible] somewhat under 8,000,000, and [illegible] State of California had a population [illegible] dense she would be supporting [illegible] more than 100,000,000 people. It [illegible] mated that there was one person [illegible] little more than every half acre [illegible] gium.

He is coming back here in March [illegible] look over the country to see where [illegible] Belgian immigrants may best [illegible] the congestion was not relieved [illegible] said, there would be much suffering [illegible] Belgium. The immigrants would [illegible] very desirable citizens, being [illegible] workers.

Mrs. Astor's Social Standards.

The woman who for many years [illegible] been the recognized leader of the [illegible] elect of New York's fashionable [illegible] and who is the oldest member of the [illegible] tor family, has signalized her re[illegible] from that lofty semi-official station [illegible] frank interview with Miss Robert[illegible] ley for the October Delineator. [illegible] Astor expresses the hope that her influence will be felt in discountenancing "the undignified methods employed by some New York women to gain a following," adding that they had "given entertainments that belonged "under a tent rather than in a gentlewoman's house." The ideal of "society" which Mrs. Astor clings to is that of the old French salon and she refers with praise to the better conditions in England to-day, where statesmen and artists grace the social functions of the leading women. All her life she says she has thought of doing the same thing in this country, but was prevented by the unfavorable conditions. Among these she mentions the fact that we have only politicians where the English have statesmen. "Many of our Senators and Congressmen seem to base their title to public favor," she explains, "upon their uncouth manners and lack of refinement, upon the fact that they once wore no socks or once wore blue jeans." And then she exclaims that if they were all like Mr. Roosevelt "what a difference there would be." He at least is not above "paying scrupulous attention to his wardrobe and his manners," and any hostess in New York or Newport "would be proud to entertain him, and the men in Washington like him." She next excuses her failure to realize the more democratic ideal in America on the ground that here people are unwilling to recognize any authority in social matters, as they do in England, where the King is the leader of society. Here "each woman is for herself and trying to outdo the others in lavish display and mad extravagance." She admits that the younger generation are inclined to go to excess in their amusements, but denies that they are degenerate. She says that the women are "easily trained in domestic matters, and taught to appreciate their responsibility to the poor," and that their charity work is an important part of their lives.

JAPANESE IN AMERICA.

[illegible] national orators [illegible] the [illegible] anti-tuberculosis congress [illegible] in Washington [illegible] possible [illegible] present [illegible] to the United [illegible] 5,000,000,000; that [illegible]

[illegible] to lessen the [illegible] of that disease each [illegible] and that 5,000,000 persons now living are destined to die from it unless [illegible] were taken to prevent. Tuberculosis wipes out as many lives as [illegible] combined over, scarlet fever, diphtheria, appendicitis, meningitis, diabetes, small pox and cancer all put together. He strongly recommends isolation hospitals for the incurably afflicted.

Great Loss from Forest Fires.

[illegible] estimated that the total loss by forest fires in the east this year will [illegible] $20,000,000. Already the [illegible] of Canada have burned up [illegible] timber valued at $20,000,000. Destructive [illegible] are also reported from the [illegible] mining Canada and the United States, [illegible] together, the loss from this [illegible] probably amount to about [illegible] When it is considered that the value of all the hog products exported by this country in 1907 was only $120,322,373, that the value of the [illegible] exported for the same year was [illegible] $300,000,000, and that the [illegible] of [illegible] gether the oats, wheat nor [illegible] exported in 1907 came anywhere near the hundred million mark, one gets some idea of what such a great loss means. To be sure, it is divided between Canada and this country, but the share of it is so great that there are comparatively few articles of domestic merchandise on the export list which return us as exports the value of that share.

NUBBINS OF NEWS.

Representatives of the coal miners of Washington and the coal operators met recently and signed an agreement for the present wage scale to be in force for the next two years.

President Roosevelt has told Israel Zangwill, the playwright, who was his guest at luncheon, that the line, "Not being American, we hold our troth sacred," in "The Melting Pot," was an unjust sneer upon American domestic life and suggested that it be changed, which suggestion Zangwill is considering.

Aunt Diana

CHAPTER II.—(Continued.)

"Ah, ah! very good. That is so like you, Miss Diana. Well, suppose Sunny reads Greville's letter to you. The lad is in high spirits; he is captain now, and he is full of his matches and the splendid team they have got. He declares Queen's will beat half the other colleges."

"Commemoration will be here directly," observed Miss Carrington.

"Yes, but he is not coming home for another five weeks, at least to stay; his tutor has written me this morning, and I have given my consent to Greville's joining his redding party to Keswick; the lad is a good lad, but he is young and a bit idle; at least, his love of fun carries him away, and I am afraid he has not worked quite hard enough."

"Mr. Greville is not fond of putting aside his own duckweed," put in Alison, mischievously, for there was nothing she loved better than to tease the old man about his grandson, who was literally the apple of his eye.

He roused up directly at her irony. "Come now, that is too bad to say that of the lad when he fights all your battles for you, and never lets any one say a word against you."

"Now, Aunt Di, please don't interfere. I do mean that Mr. Greville Moore will never kill himself with overwork, unless he dies from too much cricket or lawn tennis."

"You naughty child," but there was no mistaking the fun in his voice now. "I shall report all your hard speeches to Greville when I see him; do you think a fine young man is to slave and toil all his best years away? A little harmless fun will not hurt him; he is strengthening his mind and his muscles at the same time."

Alison and her aunt exchanged amused glances at this. They both thought highly of the young man, who was indeed a sweet tempered, honest fellow, with plenty of good in him, though hardly up to Miss Carrington's idea of "thorough;" indeed, he was a favorite with most people; but it was droll and at the same time almost touching to see Mr. Moore's implicit faith in his grandson, who was verily the old man's Benoni and Benjamin—"the son of his sorrow"—as well as the "son of his right hand."

CHAPTER III.

People said Miss Carrington's Wednesdays were always fine, that she had better fortune in that respect than other folk, and certainly the weather favored her on this occasion, for it was the very perfection of a June afternoon, with plenty of sunshine and freshness to mitigate the heat.

These Wednesdays were very popular in the neighborhood. Miss Carrington was a charming hostess; she had just the right knack of entertaining people; she welcomed them heartily, put them at their ease with themselves and other people, then left them to be as free as her own butterflies. The little wicket gate between Moss-side and Fernleigh was always set open on these occasions; Miss Carrington's lawn was devoted to lawn tennis; when they had finished their game the young people were welcome to stroll through Mr. Moore's garden, and make themselves at home in the cozy nooks and shady seats with which it abounded.

As a general rule, Mr. Moore seldom mingled with the guests; his habits were those of the recluse. A few of his old friends who were sure of their welcome, and one or two of his younger favorites, would sometimes cross the threshold and keep him company in the cool shaded room.

To these he would speak of his boy, recounting endless anecdotes of his prowess and courage, and often making mention of his pupil Alison, or as he called her, Sunny, for the young girl had been a veritable sunbeam to her old tutor, making his darkened hours pass more quickly by her ready sympathy and aptitude for learning.

On this afternoon he was not alone. A young man in a light gray summer suit, with a sunburnt, handsome face, was standing by the window looking at the knots of people already gathering on Miss Carrington's lawn, with a humorous, half-vexed expression in his wide-open blue eyes.

"What a lot of people!" he grumbled. "I believe all Riverston is there; there are three boats full, and two sets of lawn tennis forming, and I do not know how many more; there goes Miss Merle—Miss Alison, I mean. What a bore, grandfather, that I forgot all about Miss Carrington's Wednesday, and I shall have to run up to London to-morrow."

"Why, the more the merrier. Is not that the opinion of young folk like you?" returned Mr. Moore, smiling. "Now, if I said that I wanted you all to myself for this one day you have spared me that would only be an old man's selfishness, and I should be ashamed of myself for giving it utterance. But you are not generally so unsociable, Greville."

"There is a regular crowd," returned the young fellow, still more pettishly. "I shall not be able to speak to Miss Carrington, or to Miss Alison either; and you forgot, grandfather, that I shall be off to Keswick the day after to-morrow for six weeks at least."

"I am not likely to forget that, my boy. Well, it is a pity if you are not pleased, for they are going to keep it up unusually late; there is to be music on the lawn. Sunny has been telling me all about it. The moonlight is so clear that Miss Diana has given in to the notion, and young Hepworth has brought his cornet. If I were you, lad, I would just make the best of it, and join in merrily with the rest."

"And leave you sitting here alone, grandfather? And I thought we should have just one of our old evenings on the river, and I should row you and Miss Carrington, and her niece to the Long Island."

"Nay, lad, I am not likely to be long alone; the vicar will be in by and by for a chat, and most likely Mrs. Hendrick and one or two others. Miss Diana will drop in, just to tell me how things progress, and Sunny, too; she never neglects me. Come, come, it is not like you to sulk, boy; I want to hear you laugh with the others; it will make me feel young myself. And, Greville," with a sudden tenderness in his voice, "we have shaken hands, but until I feel you I shall not believe my boy is really with me."

The young man's cloudy face cleared in a moment, he left his place at once, and dropped down on one knee beside his grandfather's chair, and a sort of laughing light came in his eyes.

"You foolish old granddad," he said; "you have not grown a bit wiser." And then he knelt patiently while the thin, wrinkled hand passed softly over the merry face, and felt the broad, stalwart shoulders, and then rested lingeringly on his head.

"Heaven bless you, lad, you are strong and broad-shouldered like Gerard; you are every inch as fine a man as your father. Grow like him, my boy. Though he was my own son, I will always say there are not many like him; there, I must not keep you from the young folks to listen to an old man's maunderings. Tell Sunny that she is to be good to you, as you have not many hours at home. Oh, there's Mrs. Hendrick's step on the gravel; she has stolen a march on the vicar. Now you can leave me with an easy conscience."

It was evident Greville needed no further bidding. He rose to his feet at once and strolled out into the veranda, casting comprehensive glances over both gardens; then, satisfying himself that a certain broad-brimmed hat belonged to the person for whom he was in search, he went leisurely through the little gate and tracked it by sundry winding paths to the river bank.

A little group of girls was gathered round a boat. They were evidently playing at hide-and-seek with their would-be escort, to the mischievous glee of a young Etonian of tender age, as befitted jackets and turn-down collars.

"Come along, girls," he shouted. "Lettie and Dora, why don't you jump in? And, Miss Alison, you promised to steer. Quick, quick!"

"Oh, Mr. Greville!" and her bright face looked brighter still at the unexpected sight of her old friend. "What does this mean? Mr. Moore never hinted at your coming. I do not believe Aunt Diana knows, either."

"I thought I would just run down and have a look at you all before I started for Keswick," returned the young man with assumed carelessness. "I forgot all about Miss Carrington's Wednesday Populars; never mind, I have just arrived in time for the fun. How do you do, Miss Dora? Miss Lettice, I should hardly have known you; you have so grown. Well, what's the matter, Jack?" for the boy was grumbling audibly.

"Only Fortescue and that other fellow will be down upon us directly, and the girls made me promise to get under way before they came to spoil everything. Lettie and Dora want to pick forget-me-nots on the Long Island—there are quantities on the east side, where we had our picnic last year."

"All right, I'm your man. Miss Alison, if you will be good enough to steer, Jack and I will soon row you across." And suiting his actions to his words, Greville assisted the girls into the boat; and promptly taking an oar, they were soon gliding down the river.

Now and then they passed other boats with which they exchanged greetings, and once, as they came to a reedy island, a swan came out with ruffled plumage and angry and stretched neck, and would have pursued them, only Jack threatened her with his oar.

"I suppose there are some young ones in there," observed Greville, thoughtfully; and then he let them drift a moment as he contemplated the scene. The broad gleaming river flowing so smoothly between its banks; the meadow land dotted with groups of cattle worthy of the brush of Vicat Cole; the girls' happy faces—faces that had been familiar to him from boyhood, for Dora and Lettice Morville had been old playfellows of his; their simple summer dresses—all made up the adjuncts of a pleasant picture that he might carry away and remember.

In a few minutes they had landed, and Jack, who was the hero of the hour, for it was he who had planned this little excursion, was leading them proudly to the little sheltered island, where the ground was blue with the tiny flowers; and in another moment they were all busily at work. In the intervals of his labor, Greville found time for a sentence or two with Alison; and by and by he induced her to rest for a moment on a mossy log, that had lain there for years.

"I suppose we must be going back now," observed Alison, regretfully, as she watched the others' busy movements. "Aunt Diana will want me to assist her with the tea. She knew we were coming, for Jack was put in charge of us; but she told us not to be long. Dora and I have been wanting to come here for days."

"It is a bore going back to the other people," returned Greville, lazily; "there is a host of things I wanted to consult you about. I have an idea! I will get Miss Dora to take my oar, and I know Miss Lettice loves steering, and then we can manage to get a little conversation." And as things were arranged after this fashion, Greville was soon engaged in an animated account of his last term's doings.

Their return was hailed with delight by the young people, who were gathered on the lawn. While Dora put their treasured forget-me-nots in the water, Lettice and Alison hurried into the studio, where they knew Miss Carrington would be busy over the tea table; and Greville, after exchanging greetings with his friends, followed them more leisurely.

"Well, girls," observed Miss Carrington, brightly, "you see you have your work before you; all those good folk to serve with tea and strawberries. By the bye, Allie, a little bird tells me that Greville has put in an appearance. Why, bless the lad, there he is," as Greville's amused face suddenly confronted her, and her hands were grasped, and then detained.

"Miss Carrington, I mean to have a good look at you. I have not seen any one so worth looking at since I left home."

"Go away, you foolish boy," was Miss Carrington's response to this. "I am too busy to listen to your flattery;" but her gray eyes softened as they rested on the young man's handsome face. She had known him from boyhood. It was she who had closed his dead mother's eyes, in whose loving arms the little fellow had often nestled in those first sad days when the stricken household were too much engaged to care for the lonely child; when he would follow his dear Clara, as he called her, all over the house, with uncertain, toddling footsteps, to mend some broken toy, or help him out of some tiny difficulty; and he was dear to her now, dearer even than Alison.

"I am going to stop and help you," returned Greville, with gay defiance of her mandate. "Is that cup of tea for Mrs. Morville? She is sitting so cosily in the honeysuckle arbor with old Miss Effingham, that it seems a pity to disturb them."

"Old Miss Effingham, indeed!" ejaculated Miss Carrington, "you disrespectful boy, when you know she is my contemporary."

"Miss Carrington, you will never be old in my eyes," was the gallant reply. "I think you grow younger every time I see you."

"Humph, I hope not. I should be sorry to live forever in this sort of world, unless you young people improve it very much. Now, Greville, you know our rules for these Wednesdays. This is Liberty Hall; if the ladies like their meal al fresco, there are plenty of gentlemen servitors to gratify their whims. Now, take this tray of tea and strawberries to the honeysuckle arbor, and I will get ready another for your grandfather and Mrs. Hendrick. Jack, what have you done with your sister Dora? We want all hands just now."

After tea the tennis nets were taken down and the notes of a cornet began to make itself heard; then singing began in earnest, and Miss Carrington and her elder guests joined in the part songs. Greville and Alison had been singing together, and when Alison was tired they strolled down one of the paths in his grandfather's garden. Just now it was deserted, and they had it to themselves; this was the opportunity Alison wanted, for she began at once:

"Mr. Greville, I do hope you mean to work when you are at Keswick; Aunt Diana said the other day that she knew how disappointed Mr. Moore would be if you failed to take your degree. And I am afraid"—hesitating, as though she feared to give him pain—"I am afraid, from what you told us in the boat, that you have not done much this term."

"What makes you think so?" he asked, rather shortly.

"Your own words," she returned, so softly that his man's pride could not take alarm. "Please do not be offended with me; we have always spoken the truth to each other; but all this cricket, tennis, boating and riding about must have hindered work. Aunt Diana says—may I go on?"—a little timidly.

"Yes, yes," rather impatiently.

"Aunt Diana says—and you know how wise she is—that though your grandfather has set his heart on your taking a good degree, he will never tell you so, or let you know if you disappoint him. It is just because he is so kind and generous, and gives you full liberty that, she says, you owe him a grand return—that your work and all you do must be for his sake."

"I see, I see," returned the young man hastily. He had flushed a little over her words, as though they had gone home to his conscience. "Yes, grandfather is far too good to me. I do not half deserve to belong to the dear old man. I'll make a clean breast of it, Miss Alison. I have not worked as I ought, and that is the truth and the whole truth."

"Yes," he returned a little gloomily, "it is a pity; but I will promise you one thing"—his manner changing into earnestness—"I will work this summer. I will turn over a new leaf and try and make up for lost time. When I come back in August you shall not have to find fault with me."

Ah, he did not know that when August came he should no longer find Alison there.

STUDIES SPEED OF ANIMALS.

For fifteen years Joseph Olshausen, a European engineer, has been studying the speeds of many kind of animals. Man reaches remarkable velocities, but only by artificial aids, a good pedestrian's rate being a sixteenth of a mile in twelve seconds, while a German soldier marches three miles an hour and five miles quickstep. The greatest speed of an athlete thus far noted is the initial velocity of 893 inches a second of a broad jumper.

The averager swimmer's rate is thirty-nine inches a second, the oarsman's in an eight-oared barge is 197 inches and the skater's is nine to ten yards, while the runner on skis has made twenty-four yards a second and the jumper on skis has reached almost forty yards. The record on a bicycle is sixty-six yards a second. The horse makes long gallops at six miles an hour, the fastest dog—the Russian wolf hound—shows seventy-five feet a second and the gazelle attains eighty feet a second.

Aided by winds the ostrich is the fastest runner, sometimes making ninety-eight feet a second. In measured flights the Virginia rainpiper has a record of 7,500 yards a minute and the European swallow has exceeded 8,000 yards. The slowest creatures are snails and certain small beetles, a healthy snail's highest speed being five and one-half inches an hour.

For fractions of a second certain small creatures have almost incredible speeds, a mouse of the African description jumping ten feet at the rate of 900 feet a second, while the common flea jumps with an initial velocity of 800 feet, or ten miles a minute.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Rear Admiral Dayton, of the United States navy, is now living in South Bend at the Oliver Hotel. He was born in that city. His retirement will take effect on October 25.

While conversing with a neighbor and remarking how well he felt, Ambrosia Light, aged 58, a well-known contractor of Evansville, fell dead. He had just eaten a hearty meal.

While boring a well at the County Infirmary near Madison, a strong flow of gas was struck at a dept of 98 feet, causing a suspension of operations. When lighted, flames shot up eight feet.

Louis Rail received word recently of the drowning of his brother, Otto Rail, formerly of Terre Haute, while fishing at Montevidio, Minn. The message gave no details. Rail was a member of the police force when he lived in Terre Haute.

Roy Smelser, a farmer youth of 18, held at Rushville on the charge of making counterfeit money, tells the police he was doing it "for the fun of teh thing." Roy has made a number of clever inventions. The bogus coin consists of nickels and quarters.

The crop of cow peas in Boone County is estimated at 10,000 bushels. There are several machines engaged in shelling the crop. The quality is exceptionally good. They are selling on the local market at $1.00 a bushel, but many growers are holding for a better price.

Sol Frank, while fishing in a small lake three miles west of Petersburg, landed a six and one-half-pound black bass. He was using only an ordinary cane pole, and City Councilman Lige Bailey, who was with him, caught the fish by the gills as he drew it toward shore and safely landed it.

Milton Speicher, farmer near Warsaw, raised 4,500 bushels of onions this year, and sold them at an average price of 34 cents a bushel. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company has sent a switch engine to the north part of the county to care for the heavy shipments of onions.

While tending a kettle in the back yard of her home in Oakland City, Miss May Schenck allowed her dress to catch fire. She ran screaming around the house, but her sister's presence of mind saved her life. The flames were smothered with a blanket. The girl's burns are serious.

Mrs. Erastus Eaton, aged 61 years, was burned to death last week at Noblesville. While starting a fire in the cook stove to get supper, her dress became ignited. She ran out of the house and the breeze fanned the flames until her clothing was burned off. Mrs. Eaton lived only two hours. She was the widow of Jonathan Eaton, a Civil War veteran.

Huntington will soon have an auto transit system instead of a city street car system, if the application to be submitted to the Huntington Common Council for a franchise receives favorable action. The city is scattered and industries are distributed about in such a manner that such a system is proposed. John C. Curtis, now receiver of the Cincinnati, Bluffton & Chicago railroad, is back of the move.

George Williams, of Shirley, who invented a metallic railroad tie, has refused an offer of $55,000 for his rights. Officials of the New York Central Railroad Company were in Shirley last week and arranged with Mr. Williams to test the tie. A joint will be put in on the Michigan division of the Big Four at Shirley. The tie is believed to be superior to the Carnegie tie now being tested by this company.

Two large barns near Anderson were destroyed by fire last week. A barn on the farm of William Stevenson was burned, with a loss of about $2,500. There was no insurance. A horse and a cow were burned. George Heaton had been smoking in the barn, and it is supposed that sparks from his pipe ignited the hay, causing the fire. The barn of E. H. Matthews was also burned. The loss was $1,000, with $900 insurance. Two serious field fires near the town of Lapel destroyed a large amount of fencing and considerable timber.

Edward Clark, of Shelbyville, has been bothered with chicken thieves for several weeks, and he hit upon a plan which has probably ended it. A few days ago he obtained a stick of dynamite, which he placed under a small peach tree, the roosting place of several chickens. Two iron pegs were driven in the ground and a crowbar was laid across the pegs. Strings were attached in such a way that when touched the crowbar would fall, strike a small cap and ignite the stick of dynamite. This was done an evening or two ago, and many feathers were found under the tree, which showed that a thief had entered and got hold of a chicken when the trap worked. It is thought that Clark will have no more trouble with thieves.

Within ten minutes after she had been granted a divorce at Plymouth, Mrs. Edith E. Brockus, of Bourbon, was united in marriage to Clyde Kittinger, of Syria, Ohio, where they will reside.

Mrs. Israel Yaney, of Kirkland Township, Adams County, was thrown from her buggy in a runaway accident and sustained a broken arm. Her husband and little child, who were driving with her, were painfully bruised.

Contracts were let recently and work is to commence immediately on extensive additions to the big plant of the Maxwell-Briscoe Motor Company in Tipton.

The sixth annual sale of Poland China hogs was held by Ray & Livezey at their stock farm, north of Newcastle. Forty-eight hogs sold at an average price of $17 a head.

Officers Clark and Kickman, of the Linton police force, found a complete set of burglar tools near the I. S. depot recently. The articles were wrapped in a sock and hidden under the lumber.

John Murnan, living near Milan, while using a disc harrow, was seriously injured. His team ran away and the harrow was dragged over him, cutting his thigh to the bone and otherwise injuring him.

The Sunday schools of the various churches in Columbus were permitted to resume last Sunday morning, after having been closed for two weeks. The schools were closed because of an epidemic of diphtheria.

Thieves broke into the Tabernacle Christian church in Columbus and stole Bibles, hymn books, a clock and some clothes which had been donated to the Ladies' Aid Society for distribution among the poor.

The Milan factory of the J. Willer Canning Company, of Cincinnati, has closed. It had been in operation about six weeks. The failure of the tomato crop, as well as other crops, is the cause of the shutdown.

In excavating for the new business block to be erected by the New Brothers on the site of the Old Guymon House in Greenfield, a sand bank was revealed that so far has yielded 1,000 yards of sand of the finest quality.

By reason of the successful remonstrances circulated in Brazil, two more saloons closed their doors, their licenses having expired. This reduces the original number of saloons from forty-six to fifteen, and two more will close this month.

Edgar Faught, a coal miner 24 years old, has filed suit against the Crescent Coal Company for $10,000 damages for injuries received while working in the defendant's mine last May. A piece of slate fell from the top of the mine, breaking his collar bone and crushing his right leg below the knee.

Henry Kling, a merchant, was seriously injured at Linton by a team's becoming frightened at an automobile. He was in a wagon which was delivering a range. He fell from the wagon and the stove fell on him. His right leg was broken and badly crushed, a bone protruding just above the ankle.

Several hundred men will be placed at work in Ball Brothers' fruit jar factory in Muncie within the next few weeks, adding materially to the large force that is now employed there. The entire No. 1 factory has been overhauled in the last few months, and improvement costing $100,000 have been made.

The Roberts-Conner Veneering Company at New Albany recently began operating double turn and the employes will work in day and night shifts for an indefinite period to get out orders that have been received from furniture factories throughout the country. About fifty men are on the pay roll.

Because Earl Easterday, 12 years old, would not get out of Byers Bros.' poultry house in Logansport when ordered, but danced around and taunted Charles Stout, the manager, the latter picked up the youth and threw him out the door. The lad landed on the ground, and his collar bone was broken Stout has been arrested.

Suit for $1,000 damages has been brought by Dr. and Mrs. D. F. Randolph, of Waldron, against the Waldron Natural Gas Company. The complaint filed states that the plaintiffs are the owners of shade trees in front of their property and six of them have been killed and the water on their place injured by escaping gas from the pipes of the company.

In the circuit court at Huntington a few days ago there came up a motion on a case that was originally at issue in that court in the March term, 1842. It was a foreclosure matter, and the motion set forth that whereas the property had been sold in 1850 under the mortgage, the latter had never been cancelled on the record. Judge Cook ordered the cancellation of the mortgage.

Charles W. Fox and Lorane Dellstreet were married at South Bend by Justice W. B. Wright in writing. They are mutes. "Will you take this man to be your lawfully wedded husband?" wrote the justice. Miss Dellstreet replied "yes" in writing. Fox was asked if he would take Miss Dellstreet for his wife and he replied that he would. The justice, after the proper questions were all answered, pronounced them man and wife, in writing.

Two cases of diphtheria and a new case of scarlet fever have developed in Greensburg. Rigid quarantine is established and every precaution has been taken to prevent the spread of the contagions.

One more saloon, the eleventh since January 10, closed its doors in Newcastle, following the blanket remonstrance. The saloon was that of Thomas Hatfield, which was located in the basement of the Bundy Hotel, and was known as the Bundy buffet.

As an evidence of his friendliness toward Great Britain the ruler of Afghanistan has prohibited the priests from preaching a holy war upon penalty of having their tongues pulled out. He has also ordered that all Afghans who join the rebellious border tribes shall have their feet cut off. The British general, Willcocks, in command of the forces in Northwest India, had reached close quarters with the Mohmand tribesmen. The brother of the ameer, who is trying to usurp the throne, is avowedly an anti-British. The Mohmands, who are the chief cause of the trouble, are a great tribe half in Afghanistan and half in British jurisdiction. British authorities can hardly ask the ameer to control his half when the British are totally unable to control those on their side of the border.

The subcommittee of the American monetary commission created by Congress has finished its study of the financial system of England after a series of conferences at London with Lord Rothschild, the permanent secretary of the treasury, and other financiers. During the past week the subcommittee has been sitting at Paris to study the French banking system. Senator Aldrich, with Prof. Andrews of Harvard, will proceed to Berlin to arrange for several special articles on the German system, and other members will return to the United States.

A committee of the House of Commons has reported in favor of changing the hours of the summer work day. The bill proposes that all clocks in the United Kingdom shall on a certain date each spring be advanced eighty minutes from the solar time registered at the meridian of Greenwich. The effect will be to make everybody begin work earlier in the day and get through earlier, thus having more daylight leisure after the day's work is done. In the fall when the days shorten the clocks will be set back again at solar time. Both changes would be made in the night when most people are asleep.

"To be or not to be, that is the question" with the political candidate.

The wealth latent in weeds, garbage rubbish and ash heeps is no doubt great. It has been often said and with truth, that the French would live luxuriously on the wastage of American tables. There is no doubt that we in this country are laboriously wasting fortunes in material that will, in future generations, be utilized and turned to account. For example the useless cornstalk has been found, by recent experiments of chemists in the Bureau of Forestry, to be of decided value. It has been long known that alcohol can be manufactured from cornstalkes, but it has only recently been discovered that fine grades of paper can be made from it at a cost almost as low as that of making wood pulp paper. The chemists in their experiments used the "soda-cooked" process. The pulp from the cornstalks was made in from two to two and a half hours; while the preparation of wood pulp, as is known, requires from twelve to fourteen hours. The cost of the wood paper pulp is $13 a ton and it is estimated that the new cornstalk material will not cost more and may probably cost less than that with further improvements in its manufacture. It is estimated that the supply of trees for wood pulp will soon be exhausted and it is interesting to know that we will still have the foundation of reading matter in the heretofore useless and even troublesome cornstalk.

In spite of the fact that "pigeon-toed" has become a term of reproach, most out-door living races "toe in" when they walk, as is almost ludicrously obvious in our native Indian tribes. If this, then, be the case, it is obvious that we do not push off directly from the point of our shoe, but from the side of the sole opposite the ball of the foot on the outer side if we "toe in," and on the inner, or great-toe, side if we assume our carefully-acquired drill-sergeant gait and "toe out." Hence the broad, shovel-shaped, flat-boat toe is not only an offense to the eye, but a hindrance to efficiency in rapid and enduring walking. It by no means necessarily follows that anything which is ugly is on that account hygienic. This intoeing, bent legged gait, by the way, is not only being adopted in our gymnasia and schools of physical training, but even by the army drill-masters, particularly the French.

This pointed toe must, however, be "whittled" off only on one side, and that the outer. Anything which tends to make the inner side of the shoe other than perfectly straight, and deflects the great toe outward, is crippling to the last degree.—Saturday Evening Post.

Bad Backache

Is it necessary? No. It can be prevented and relieved, when caused by female trouble, by taking a medicine with specific, curative action, on the female organs and functions, which acts by relieving the congestion, stopping the pain and building the organs and functions up to a proper state of health. Try.

WINE OF CARDUI
WOMAN'S RELIEF

"I suffered for 18 years," writes Mrs. Malinda A. Akers, of Basham, Va., "with various female troubles. I had such a backache that it drew me over, so I could not stand straight. The doctors could not help me, so I took Cardui, and now I feel like a new woman."

The Devil.

"For years we have all been told, and some of us have believed, that the drama is going to the dogs. There is now no doubt that it has gone to The Devil". Recently all over the country The Devil, a play of course, has been advertised to appear in opera houses. Just a few weeks ago, the newspaper men of the country were flooded with advertisements from newspaper unions desiring to furnish the thrilling story, The Devil, in plate matter, to run in their issues. Many papers did welcome his Satanic Majesty and gave him more honor and space than the brave little "devil" who toiled so patiently in the back room. Daily papers have printed it and journals have commented upon it, until this story of human weakness has permeated every corner of our land.

Now comes the theatrical stock companies and produce the story on the stage. A business proposition with them, don't you know. The result has been and is that hundreds of people are going to The Devil every night. The material, old time Devil was really becoming a thing of the past. Clergymen used to mention him with great awe and much apprehension; later they explained him as a figure of speech and now he does not figure in their speech at all. Poor forgotten monster, of a Puritan Age—what must have been the shame of his downfall! But now, Old Nick, has come back to his own, and unlike a prophet, he has found honor in his own country.

How To Vote.

Every year many young men have their first experience in voting under the Australian ballot system. It is important that the first voters be carefully instructed, to the end that their votes may not be multified through imperfections.

When the voter enters the election room he must first get his ballot and blue pencil from the Polling Clerks. After entering a booth, if he desires to vote a straight ticket he makes a cross, thus x, within the large circle at the head of ticket, containing the emblem of his particular party. If he does not desire to vote a straight party ticket, he does not mark in the circle at the head of the ticket, but makes a cross on the small square to the left of the name of each candidate for whome he desires to vote, on whatever list of candidates it may be. If the large circle at the head of the ticket is marked with a cross or otherwise, and the ballot is marked with a cross or otherwise at any other place it will be void and cannot be counted unless there be no candidate for some office in the list printed under such marked device, in which case the voter may indicate his choice for such office by making a cross on the square to the left of the name of any candidate for such office on any other list. No mark of any kind may be placed upon the ballot otherwise than above described. After the ballots have been marked, fold them separately, so that the face of each cannot be seen, and so the initial letters of the names of the Polling Clerks on the back thereof can be seen, Leave the booth and hand your ballots to the Inspector, the pencil to the Polling Clerks, and immediately leave the election room.

With the election but one week off, the political parties are in for a busy week and there will be several large meetings during the rest of the week. Candidates are around making their last call before the fatal day, each one thinking that he has a fair show to win.

The voter should think seriously before marking his ballot as it means much to him. Do as you think you had ought to do and then you will be satisfied. The voters of today are becoming more independent in their voting on county and township ticket which is right.

Vote for the best man to run our home affairs. Don't vote for a man not sufficiently qualified to fill the office to the credit of the people.

Sleep

Sleep is nature's rebuilding period, when the energy used by the brain, muscles and organs is renewed. If you lose sleep, your system is robbed of the strength sleep should give. Continued loss of sleep multiplies this loss until you become a physical wreck. Dr. Miles' Nervine quiets the irritated nerves and brings refreshing, invigorating sleep. Nervine contains no opiates, and therefor leaves no bad after-effects.

"For over two years I suffered untold agonies; my friends thought I was going crazy. I could not sleep nor rest at all. I tried different doctors, but failed to find relief. My head would ache all the time; I was like one drunk; could not concentrate my mind, and was so restless and worried that sleep was out of the question. After taking one bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine I felt wonderfully changed. I am now on my third bottle and am gaining all the time. I can lie down and sleep like a child, and am able to do my work."
MRS. MAY SCOTT, English, Ind.

Your druggist sells Dr. Miles' Nervine, and we authorize him to return price of first bottle (only) if it fails to benefit you.

GENERAL ITEMS

The long season of dry weather has greatly affected the shoe and rubber trade, as most any old kind of shoes do in a long dry weather period.

Butler is to have another bank. Walter I. Snyder of LaFayette, Ind., has been working the new business for some time and enough stock has been subscribed to start it.

Fish creek, running from Hamilton lake to the St. Joe, crossing DeKalb and Steuben counties, is to be enlarged and made into a Letter drainage for the farmers along the route. The improvement is now being surveyed.

The editor of a country paper received the following query:—"Can you tell me what the weatner will be next month?" In reply he wrote, "It is my belief that the weather next month will be very much like your subscription." The inquirer wondered for an hour what the editor was driving at, when he happened to think of the word "unsettled". He went in the next day and squared up his account. Ex.

In his seeking tour through the state Thomas R. Marshall, the democratic candiate for governor of Indiana is accompanied by his wife and she proves to be a valuable traveling companion to him in the way of winning friends. A woman of rare grace and ability to adapt herself to all conditions, pretty, and a good conversationalist, she greets, with her husband, the many men and women who gather to receive them as they journey from place to place.

The extent of the "muck" fires in this part of the state will no doubt prove a serious loss to onion and potato growers. A large area of muck land has been burned over and the soil, owing to the extreme drouth has burned to such a depth as to render the lowlands practically worthless for farming untill the water level is lowered. The loss is quite serious to a number of farmers who have made good money in raising onions and potatoes.—Waterloo Press.

Deputy Sheriff J. D. Raub, in addition to other duties, was busy last week posting notices in each of the thirty seven precincts of the county for the general election to occur on Tuesday, November 3. In addition to this he is required to notify the holding of such election. This duty he finished Saturday. In a few days the county chairman of the democrats and republicans, Messrs. Baxter and Brown, will recommend the deputy sheriff's for the elections, two for each precint. Each chairman recommends one and these the sheriff then usually appoints. Deputy Sheriff Raub will then have another big job on hand, as it will be his duty to notify these sheriffs of their election. There will be seventy four of them.

Thomas S. Wickwire, of Ashley, has brought twelve separate suits in the Steuben Circut court against the Wabash Ry. Co. for damages claimed by parties who have built property in that town, and who claim they have been damaged by the removal of the Company's shops from that place. There are three suits in his own name aggregating $3,700; Robert B. Johnson two for Charles G. Parnell for $1,000; $3,200; Adam E. Hamman, $500; William Plaster, two for $1,400; George W. Crosley, $600; Joseph H. Weaver, $1500 and Matilda Plaster, $140.—Steuben Republican.

Last Wednesday, Wm. Shuler, who was hauling gravel from a pit near Cedarville, met with quite an accident He was in the act of loading his wagon, when the embankment, which was several feet high, gave way and came upon him, covering him completely with the exception of one hand. A farmer and his boy happened to be close by and when they saw what had happened the boy was sent hurriedly to the school-house near by for aid. In a short time the man was taken from the bank and carried to the house near by. The man is improving.

SPENCERVILLE NEWS.

A Department of the ST. JOE NEWS for the Spencerville People.

Rain, Rain.

The earth is no longer as dry as a weather beaten tank just free from a thirty day detention in the county incarceration hotel. No longer does its tongue hang out like a hound's after a forty mile chase over the burning sands nor does the afore mentioned lapping article feel like a bunch of cotton or a bath towel full of warts. The reason for all this is perfectly simple. It rained late Friday afternoon and evening—a nice, gentle little dropping of the moisture globules from the overcast skies, that no more satisfied the thirsty earth than a pinch of salt on his beefsteak satisfies an old sea-dog who hasn't smelled the briny for many moons. Still the showers helped a whole lot. So unusual was the little downpour that many people wandered about in the rain simply for the singular sensation that it produced. Much of the great supply of dust which has suffocated the cities and country for several months melted into mud at the onslaught and was vanquished—for the time being. Should the next succeeding days produce further rainfall it is confidently predicted by the local prognosticators that the backbone of the drouth will be broken. Only once, since August 13, up to the present date has the country experienced a rain and that was on September 27. The drouth has been unprecedented.

A Close One.

On last Saturday evening our Basket Ball Team accompanied by a few fans went to Harlan to play with the High School Team of that place. The game was played in the open air with the grounds in damp condition and the Arc lights were also in poor condition. The game was full of ginger from beginning to end, the first half being won by Spencerville, by a score of 4 to 3. Harlan took the lead in the second half, but Spencerville by ardent playing tied the score just as the whistle sounded "time out" making a score, 9 to 9. The first team making two points would then by official rules be winners. Another scirmish lasting 15 minutes took place in which time both teams made one apiece, ending in a goal throw by Wearley winning the game for Harlan to the score of 10 to 12.

Mr. Wearley has played with Spencerville in the three years of his school attendance here, and became a "Rapid Firing Gun" in the profession of Basket Ball, having made all or nearly all points made by Harlan. Of course all defeated teams bring forth excuses for their unlucky outcome but Spencerville can truly and conscienciously say they were beaten by their own element. The game with the exception of a small bit of rag chewing and roughness was a nice clean game and we invite the Harlan High School to except the engagement on election day, as they will be well treated in all respects.

A Pleasant Gathering

The Steward families have in years past been accustomed to holding reunions but of late they have not held them as some were not in a position to attend. Adelbert Steward of Russell, Kan., came last week to visit his relatives here a week, and on Sunday it was planned to have a reunion at the home of Lydia Jane Steward in honor of him. Those present from out of town were:—Eva Jane Reed, Meese Chapel; Rosella Wilson and two children of Norris Chapel; James Furnish, Arthur Steward, wife and baby of the County Line.

Those from town were:- Pernettia Steward and family, Sam and Wall Steward accompanied by the families. A very enjoyable time was had together and it was one that will not soon be forgotten.

POPULAR PULPIT

WITHERING RESOLUTIONS.

By Henry F. Cope.

"And when the sun was up they were scorched; and because they had no root they withered away."—Matthew xiii., 6.

The teachings of Jesus are universal. One does not have to be a farmer to understand the parable of the sower; he finds it written in his own experience. Despite the efforts of many to mystify this story it is plain to us all, because many good words and hopes have dropped into our hearts while few of them come to good fruitage.

Every man has known the joy of receiving the good seed. Like a gift from heaven has come the germ of good, the vision of some high possibility that has formed itself into a noble resolution in the mind. Ideals have become our possession and in the moment when the infinite sower seemed to pass our way, we have determined to endeavor to realize them.

For a while our good resolutions thrived; we lived up to them. Then some day when we suddenly needed them we found they had withered away. The husbandry of our hearts is a long record of good seed gone to waste, withered after a brief period of flourishing. How can one do better? What is the secret of keeping good resolutions and making them fruitful?

Our good intentions fail because they do not strike deep enough into our hearts, into our affections and interests. Motive is lacking. You never can keep good resolutions simply by rules and regulations. We need to root our resolutions deep in good reasons. Conviction is mainly a matter of thinking through a thing until the truth is clear cut and has become our own first hard possession.

We may begin a good course on impulse, but we never will maintain it except on reflection, reasoning and conviction. The more you think through your own conduct thrash out with yourself its motives, outline its results, the more clearly will your goal be visioned. Let plans of high and difficult action strike their roots deep into your thinking.

The habit of the right life is the best fruitage of all good resolutions, and habit is simply action repeated. It is always better to do right habitually than it is to have to make a separate decision and act of will each time. Yet one only comes to doing right habitually by frequent repetitions of right action voluntarily.

Fruitful resolutions strike out new roots in every possible action. The only way to do a thing right at all is to do it right always. Seize every opportunity to realize your resolutions. Do the thing in the best way even when a poorer way would seem to suffice; do the thing determined on always, even unnecessarily, until it becomes habitual.

If you would become courteous then practice courtesy under all circumstances, even when it seems as though you might take off the tension a little and live a little less thoughtfully of others. If you would become unselfish practice the deeds of the self-giving life down to the least details of living. The only way to keep the life moving up is to keep it all moving up all the time.

Good habits have a wonderful fructifying power. They bear fruit quickly. They grow all througth the life. The life of truth and goodness is not, as we sometimes think, a weary, tedious business of watching an innumerable number of actions. It is simply the life that steadily sets itself toward the good that yields ever to higher life.

The seed sown anywhere comes to life and increases as it seizes every power of life in the warm earth and the sunshine and shower. The life that would come to its fullness must seek out its food everywhere, it must choose its environment and atmosphere, it must appropriate to itself everything that will help and avoid as far as possible all that hinders.

It is no use hoping to be good by dreaming of goodness. The desirable life is the fruitage of endeavor. It cultivates friendships that lift, it finds inspiration and nourishment in thoughts and sights and sounds that leave the life stronger, sweeter and with greater desires for the best. It does the deeds that it desires. It pays the price of perfection.

WHAT FRIENDSHIP IS.

By John K. Le Baron.

The truest test of friendship lies not in how much my friend will do for me, but how much would I gladly do for my friend.

Most essays, poems and perorations on the subject of friendship treat it from the selfish viewpoint, while in truth an attachment that rests upon such a foundation is not friendship at all. Where "graft" gives even a slight tinge to the motive it is an insult to call it friendship.

The most unselfish friendship I have ever known was between a man of culture and wealth and a worthy individual who, in the scale by which the world measures men, was rated very much his inferior. The man of culture and education once declared "I owe much to my friend. He has given me the opportunity to prove what good there is in me. He has taught me the most valued lesson I have ever learned—that the only true happiness comes from making others happy. Should I not count as my friend one who has taught me this?"

The world is full of false friendship of the sort which seeks those from whom it expects favors and cools when the hope of the friendship which, as Cicero expresses it, is "more inclined to confer a favor than to claim any return."

We sometimes find men enfettered by the experiences of life, questioning the existence of such a thing as friendship. They do not analyze the question, but class all friendship as fickle and all friends as false. This is manifestly unjust.

"The only way to have a friend," says Emerson, "is to be one." That is the very essence of friendship.

I have little regard for that doctrine which commands us to always seek the companionship of our superiors. Carried to its logical end that theory takes from friendship all that is ethical and leaves only the selfish.

True friendship is not satisfied to be always the recipient. It is a fountain from which must flow the great stream of brotherly love and obligation, else it loses all its significance and becomes one of the baser passions.

Dr. Van Dyke says: "It is with rivers as it is with people, the greatest are not always the most agreeable nor the best to live with. Diogenes must have been an uncomfortable bedfellow * * * and you can imagine much better company for a walking trip than Napoleon Bonaparte."

No nature is wholly devoid of virtues. If heredity, environment or misfortune has cast one in a false mold it is not the mission of friendship to shun such an unfortunate. Friendship should reach down and lend a hand and the benefit resulting will be mutual. In this attitude of universal friendship the standards of our ambition are not lowered.

The great men of the world—especially the great ethically and spiritually—have not sought the palace and the castle. They have moved among the lowly. They have proved themselves worthy of being the friends of their superiors by showing themselves to be friends of their inferiors.

If friendship imposes upon us the obligation of associating only with our superiors, it puts it up to us to determine who are superiors are. It is not always an easy thing to judge.

If every man would try to be a friend to his fellows—and friendship, remember, is made up of little things—it would make the world vastly better than it is and every man would be happier.

In friendship there should be no selfishness; in selfishness lies the source of our bitterest sorrows.

Let's be friends.

SHORT METER SERMONS.

Courtesy always gives more than it costs.

No nation is any greater or better than its homes.

People who make trouble always talk of their trials.

True fruits are not unwilling to be hidden by the leaves.

The man who can be bought always thinks he cannot be caught by his buyer.

He cannot make much of himself who thinks of making the most only for himself.

It is not the fact of the salary but the motive in the service that stamps the hireling.

Lots of sour people would be tolerable if they did not prate so much about their honey.

You can teach a congregation to enjoy sermons of nothing but wind, but they will die of their education.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't rely on self-sufficiency and expect efficiency.

Don't miss getting the truth by expecting something that looks learned.

Don't forget that the proof of a faith is not in its prestige but in its present power.

Don't shrink from cleaning earth's alleys if you would be trained for the streets of gold.

Don't forget that the last man to improve the world is the one who is satisfied with himself.

Don't fail to learn that from the grind of drudgery comes at last the glorious divine spark.

Don't make the mistake of getting so little good out of your own faith that you see no good in any other.

Don't fail to appreciate that one of the best prayers for peace is the restraint that waits until the apples are ripe.

Smiles of The Day

Couldn't Fool Father.

Stern Parent (as daughter comes upstairs at midnight)—What made that young man stay so late?

Pretty Daughter—Why, we—er—got to discussing politics, and didn't notice the flight of time.

Stern Parent—That story doesn't go, young lady. People who discuss politics make a lot more noise than you two did.

Wanted It Fresh.

Mrs. Newed—Excuse me, but do you sell ice here?

Dealer—Yes, ma'am.

Mrs. Newed—Well, I want 10 cents' worth. By the way, how long have you had it in stock?

Dealer—Since last winter.

Mrs. Newed—Oh, that won't do. I want some that is fresh.

After the Refusal.

Nell—You can't say I ever gave you encouragement.

Jack—Yes you did, you led me to believe your father was wealthy.

A Slight Jolt.

"According to this magazine article," said the conceited author, "it is a great trial to be the wife of a genius. What do you think about it, my dear?"

"Well, perhaps it is," rejoined his wife. "A genius is no doubt cranky in some ways—but of course I don't know anything about it."

Great Idea.

"I think," said the young physician, "that I'll confine myself strictly to office practice."

"That's a good idea," rejoined his friend the druggist. "People who are able to walk to an office are generally strong enough to get well in spite of a doctor's advice."

Information Wanted.

Mrs. Neurich (entering studio)—You are the artist who paints miniature portraits, I believe?

DeAuber—Yes, madam.

Mrs. Neurich—Well, what'll you charge for painting a life-size miniature of my daughter?

A Little Flighty.

"He showed you his flying machine?"

"Yes, and I criticised it."

"What did he say?"

Didn't Want to Risk It.

Daughter—Shall we invite Dr. Bigfee to our "at home?"

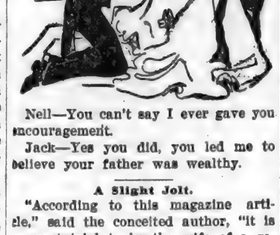
Mother—I think we had better not. He's so absent-minded he might charge it on the bill.

Wasn't So.

"I understand that your husband had a hard struggle when a young man?"

"That's just one of his jokes; he didn't struggle; he fell in love with me at first sight."—Houston Post.

Immune.



Kid—Carry your grip, mister?

Farmer Barns—No consarn ye! Ye look innercent enuff, but I can't be too blame careful of bunko steerers, b-gosh!

Intimate Friends.

First Hello Girl—Do you know Mr. Ringer?

Second Hello Girl—Not by sight; only to speak to.

Great Thought.

The Bridegroom—Hello, what's this? All the bills for your trousseau! Why, I thought your father paid these.

Bride—It is customary, dear. But he thought you would rather pay them and not give him the humiliation of borrowing the money from you.

Seeing Is Believing.

He—Did you know I had become an actor?

She—No. All I heard was that you had gone on the stage.

Just Like Iron.

Wife—John, there must be a lot of iron in your system.

Husband—Why do you think so?

Superstition.

"I guess I'll have to admit that I'm superstitious."

"Oh, I wouldn't be that way."

"You wouldn't?"

"No. Whenever you begin to get superstitious it's a sure sign you are going to have bad luck."—Philadelphia Press.

Vast Difference.

"Money," said the cynic, "is the real trouble in life."

"It never impressed me as being anything like trouble," sighed the man who was broke.

"And why not, sir?"

"Well, it is very easy to borrow trouble, but did you ever try to borrow money?"

Thought It a Proposal.

"I have come," she exclaimed suddenly, "to take your name." And the young man remembered it was leap year and jumped two feet.

"To take my name, miss?" he stammered. Oh, er—that is, this is so sudden."

The Only Way.

"Is there any method that will enable a man to understand a woman?" queried the innocent youth.

"The only way to understand a woman," replied the home-grown philosopher, "is not to try. Under these circumstances she will reveal herself sooner or later."

A Different View.

Criticus—I visited DeAuber's studio yesterday.

Artless—He's what they call an impressionist, isn't he?

Criticus—So I was led to believe; but after viewing his work I have come to the conclusion that he is a depressionist.

In Doubt.

"Is your son-in-law, the duke, a good conversationalist?"

"Well," answered Mr. Cumrox, "he's willing enough. But my foreign vocabulary is limited. I can never feel sure whether he is talking about his pedigree or thinking up a menu for dinner."—Washington Star.

Souvenirs.

Gunner—Where have you been, old man?

Guyer—Just back from Pittsburg.

Gunner—Indeed! Did you take in the town?

Guyer—Oh, no, just part of it. Swallowed several quarts of smoke, a peck of soot and a bushel of cinders.

Stupid Waiter.

Bert—The very thing. Gass-on! Gass-on!

Taking Chances.

Charles—I heard the other day that Gerald is going to get married.

Edward—Well, why shouldn't he? He's comfortably well off.

Charles—That's just the whole point. Why doesn't he remain so?

Hard on Patient.

Young Surgeon (in hospital after having just removed the patient's leg)—Does the operation meet your approval, doctor?

Young Surgeon—Why, what's the matter?

Getting at the Facts.

"Say, paw," queried small Tommy Toddles, who was perusing a book of proverbs, "is it true that barking dogs do not bite?"

"I never knew one to bite while he was barking," answered Toddles, Sr.

It Was Heavenly.

"Oh, isn't it heavenly!" exclaimed Miss DeGush, referring to Miss Poundem's piano performance."

Fly in the Ointment.

Mrs. Homer—Mrs. Neurich seems to have refined tastes.

Mrs. Caller—Yes; but she has such an unrefined way of bragging about them.

Niche.

"Well, how does it feel to have a niche in the temple of fame?"

A Good Thing.

"Are you in favor of the young Turkey agitation?"

A Big Bathtub.

A summer urchin, witnessing the phenomenon for the first time, yelled shrilly: "Ma, look quick! Some one has pulled the plug out of the ocean!"—Washington Herald.

HAVE EGG SHAPED HEADS.

Queer Fashions Among the Natives of the New Hebrides.

The egg shaped heads of some of the natives of Malekula, in the New Hebrides, were once thought to be naturally conical. For that reason scientific men decided that the Malekulans were in the lowest rung of the human ladder, says the National Geographical Magazine.

Later it was found that the conical heads were produced as the Chinese women distorted their feet, by binding them in infancy. The egg shaped head is still fashionable in Malekula, where some extraordinary results are achieved.

The conical shape is produced by winding strong sennit cord spirally about the heads of the young babies and tightening the coils from time to time. A piece of plaited mat is first put on the head and the cord is coiled over this, so as to give it a good purchase. The crown of the head is left to develop in the upward and backward fashion that is so much admired.

One fears the poor babies suffer very much from the process. The child I saw was fretful and crying and looked as if it were constantly in pain; but the mother, forgetting for the moment her fear of the strange white woman, showed it to me quite proudly, pointing out the cords with a smile.

She had a normally shaped head herself and it seemed that she had suffered by her parents' neglect of this important matter, for she was married to a man who was of no particular account. A young girl who was standing beside her had evidently had a more careful mother, for her head was almost sugar-loaf shaped. It is interesting to know that this well-brought up young woman has married a chief.

ASTONISHED THE DOCTOR

Old Lady Got Well with Change of Food.

A great scientist has said we can put off "old age" if we can only nourish the body properly.

To do this the right kind of food, of course, is necessary. The body manufactures poisons in the stomach and intestines from certain kinds of food stuffs and unless sufficient of the right kind is used, the injurious elements overcome the good.

"My grandmother, 71 years old," writes a N. Y. lady, "had been an invalid for 18 years from what was called consumption of the stomach and bowels. The doctor had given her up to die.

"I saw so much about Grape-Nuts that I persuaded Grandmother to try it. She could not keep anything on her stomach for more than a few minutes.

"She began Grape-Nuts with only a teaspoonful. As that did not distress her and as she could retain it, she took a little more until she could take all of 4 teaspoonfuls at a meal.

"Then she began to gain and grow strong and her trouble in the stomach was gone entirely. She got to enjoy good health for one so old and we know Grape-Nuts saved her life.

"The doctor was astonished that instead of dying she got well, and without a drop of medicine after she began the Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

SALMON IS A FIGHTER.

Gamy Fish Furnishes About the the Best Sport in the Maine Lakes.

JUGGLES WITH THE HOOK.

He must be a dull fellow whose heart does not leap at the talk of salmon, says the New York Post. Not the dark red, tinned variety, but that white-fleshed marvel of litheness and wile indigenous to the cold waters of the Maine lakes.

Digging out from the mass of blankets, one turns his head and peeks through a fair crack in the roof out upon the steel-blue surface of the lake. "Nothing could be smoother than that," thinks the men, placidly, when suddenly, right at the camp door, a splash, a crystal shower of drops, and a ten-pound salmon flashes his lavender sides in a playful leap.

The angler no longer cares to lie drowsing. Breakfast? Breakfast must wait! In a breathless ten minutes he is in the boat and pulling gently over the spot where the fish appeared; the same fish is now probably three miles away, chasing a school of life-loving smelts. An hour later the unrewarded angler breakfasts comfortably—on salmon? Bless your heart, no; on canned beans and salt bacon, very salt bacon.

However, on another day the fisherman took his breakfast of salmon—caught by another man—leisurely; then he sat on the bank and smoked meditatively, watching the other fish vainly. Then he set up his rather stiff six-ounce rod, picked the medium silk-enameled line through the rings and tip, gathered all his bric-a-brac about him, even to his own specially designed gaff, and started from the bank to the spot where by all laws of imagination there should be big gamey fish a-feeding.

On the way he put a few split shot on his line above the leader, and affixed an artificial single-hook minnow, pale yellow in color. Then he put out line, lots of it, not less than 300 feet, and laid his rod down on the boat, settling back to a somewhat one-sided conversation with the guide. Bethinking him of his pipe, he had just filled it and was applying the guarded flame, when, zip, zip, whee-ee! Overboard went the pipe, upside down the pouch, as the now excited man dived for the eluding butt of his bending rod.

In another instant the tip would have snapped; but the man saved his rod, and now for the fish! Here was no stolid carp or leaping bass. Not a sight of it did he get until twenty minutes of alternate reeling and giving line had passed. Then a broad silver belly turned lazily almost underneath the boat, and the fish started out for another long run, with indescribable power and velocity, to the tune of a screaming reel. Again the man and the fish fought, straining the slender tackle to its danger point; but it was of trusty make; even the leader knots had all been gone over carefully before the leader was put on, and the man knew to an ounce how far he could go.

After many rushes, long and short, the salmon went down forty feet into the dark depths and lay there, giving powerful tugs every few moments. Gradually the tugs decreased in vigor and frequency, the fish came to the top, stood on his tail on the top of the water, shook his head as a spirited horse will when fretted by the bit, threw the hook from his mouth, and swam easily slantwise down into the green depths. Thereupon the man, who was a self-contained fellow, loosened the cords of expression, even to volubility. As soon as he felt easier, he explained to the guide, who as an unprejudiced observer already knew more about the matter than the disappointed angler, just how the fish was lost.

"If I had kept a taut line on him when he was dancing out of water I'd have had him in the boat now! Where is he? How far will he go?" cried the man excitedly. "I guess you won't see that fish again for some time," said the guide. "He got a hole tore in his lip while he was a-tuggin' of ye down below thar. It wouldn't hev made no difference whether ye had a taut line or not when he jumped out o' water thar; he was a 'tarnal smart fish. I guess he's been hooked afore an' knows his business 'obut's well as ennybody round here."

The next time the fisherman didn't give his fish a chance to sulk and tug. A four-pounder came to gaff in twelve minutes—which was "drawing it fine"—and a six-pounder, late in the afternoon, in fifteen minutes. At nightfall it grew very cold, for the "ice was just out," and the waves were now too choppy for successful fishing. So the pair went ashore and dined off bacon and salmon steaks, red and tender.

During that week, without arduous labor overtime, the man took a dozen or more fine Sebago salmon, buried them under loose leaves before the camp door at the foot of a tree where the frosty ground would preserve them well, and, when it came time to take the stage from Mason's camp at South Casco to Portland, the guide wrapped them in hemlock boughs, wound them well with coarse twine, and handed them to him as tenderly and affectionately as a mother gives her babe into the keeping of a rich maiden aunt, and said: "Come again next year, I'll let ye know when the ice's out."

For months afterward, when the man slept, he dreamed of cold, clear mornings on the blue lake; saw the frost glisten on the wet line; heard the woodpecker hammer on a big dead tree and dreamed of losing his pipe overboard as the reel screamed—only to find his frosty lake a ray of winter sunshine, his woodpecker an industrious kitchen maid, pounding as is her habit, and the screaming reel a very common alarm clock, telling him to get up and go a-fishing in the tide of commerce for his daily bread.

"SPORTSMEN."

Sickening tales of game slaughter in the far North, much of it for the mere love of killing, are contributed to the Toronto Globe by a Dawson correspondent. In all the thousands of miles from Vancouver to the Arctic Ocean and from Edmonton to Dawson the country is dotted with hunters at intervals of from twenty to one hundred miles apart. From this it will be seen that the game has no way of escaping, as there is no stretch of more than a hundred miles where the crack of the gun is not heard. With nearly every one it is a case of doing his best to kill all he possibly can, even if most of the game goes to waste, and decays on the ground. The Indians are the only men who regard the protection of game as a necessity.

I have been in the Northwest for eleven years, writes the Dawson correspondent, and have traveled from east to west and from north to south, and have seen slaughters of large game on several occasions that would make Buffalo Bill's buffalo killing, which is famous the world over, look like child's play.

The first of these killings I witnessed toward the head of the Klondike River in 1898, when a herd of caribou came upon a hunter's camp, and he killed the herd to the last one. It numbered over three hundred. I must say to the man's credit that he let nothing go to waste, as he was within reach of Dawson, and disposed of it all. The thing most to be condemned was the killing of the females.

Three years later I was up in the same vicinity, and found a hunter and his partner camped toward the head of a gulch with very steep slopes and thousands of feet high. These gulches are used in winter by the traveling caribou when they descend to the lower lands in search of feed. It happened one day that a large herd came down this gulch, and the hunter saw them as they descended from the high barren hills.

Once down in the gulch there was no retreat, as the snow was too deep and the slopes too steep to climb. He had them corralled, advanced within shooting range, and killed the entire bunch just for the sport of seeing them fall. He had no means of getting them out of there, and practically the whole herd decomposed on the ground. On his way to Dawson he killed a moose weighing nearly a ton. By this time the hunting season was closed, and he dared not bring the moose in; and this animal, also, lay and decayed.

A year ago last winter I was up the White River. The upper half is on the American side, and I met a hunter who had just returned from killing a whole herd of caribou. How many hundred there were in the herd no one knows, not even the slayer, as he never went near many of them. His aim was to see how many he could kill, and the consequence was that he did not get a piece of meat that was fit to eat.

He followed the herd on snow shoes for three days, shooting all the time, till the last one was dead. Then only was his bloodthirsty appetite satisfied. When he returned, the fourth day, the first ones, that were nearest his cabin, had already begun to taint. Had he killed for only one day, he would have had more than he could possibly have used in any way.

As He Loved Himself.

"This doctrine of 'love thy neighbor as thyself' may be all right in theory," said the egotist, "but I don't think it would work."

"No, it wouldn't do for you to go in for it," replied the man who knew him. "You'd have to be entirely too demonstrative."—Philadelphia Press.

Sermons of the Week

Getting Good.

Unity.

When the bishops, clergy and people unite, there is no such word as fail, for they form a triple cord which cannot be easily broken.—Cardinal Gibbons, Roman Catholic, Baltimore.

Mankind.

Our personal success in work for God depends much upon our methods, for we hope to deal with men as we find them and not as we would desire them to be.—Rev. George Adams, Methodist, Brooklyn.

Tainted Love.

A man ought to be a Christian regardless entirely of considerations of gain. It is a tainted love that loves or pretends to love God for a consideration.—Rev. John Flagg, Presbyterian, New York City.

Immoral Conditions.

If in the future you find the grass growing in the streets of a beautiful place it won't be because that place is less ideal, but because of immoral conditions prevailing there.—Rev. J. A. Peaks, Baptist, Narragansett Pier, R. I.

Truth.

The truth is food for the human soul, by which it grows and becomes strong and noble. Truth is instrumental. It is through a knowledge of the truth that we find freedom and peace and strength.—Rev. John W. Rowlett, Unitarian, Atlanta.

Life's Tableland.

Most people look upon middle age as upon an oasis. They call it a rich tableland, harvest-clad, sloping backward toward a desert named infancy, sloping forward toward an unproductive desert named old age.—Rev. N. D. Hillis, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A Prophecy.

The number of pure and undefiled people of to-day is a prophecy of what humanity will come to, it will be a harvest of souls. The antidote of modern pessimism is found in the house of God, and the gospel will be universally diffused.—Rev. C. F. Aked, Baptist, New York City.

A Benefactor.

In the personality of the man who knows how to use knowledge and money is the spirit of godliness and love. Such a man is equipped to be a benefactor to humanity. Love, working through personality, uses what a man has for the benefit of mankind.—Rev. N. Boynton, New York City.

Spread the Gospel.

A wonderful change would be wrought in the world if those who knew the joy of being followers of Christ would go forth and tell it to each one they met. The world would soon realize that the Christian life was a vital matter and would be changed.—Rev. J. W. Baer, Presbyterian, Brooklyn.

True Discipleship.

Immorality stands already and sufficiently condemned, but a shallow life must also be contemptible. It is for this that the church must stand in modern life, if it would win not only those who are weak but those who are morally strong. To sacrifice not only the evil but also the good—this is true discipleship.—Rev. Clayton J. Potter, Congregationalist, Simsbury, Conn.

Wall Street.

The Wall street men are good men, and there are fewer scoffers than one would think. Money is not all. Tourists from all over the country are surprised that in the heart of the financial district, where everything is supposed to be concentrated upon gain, there are to be found men who want to hear religion preached.—Rev. William Wilkinson, Evangelist, New York City.

The Eternal Mystery of Life.

Life, whatever its external expression, is a part of the great riddle of the universe. We know that life has its origin in life. It is not an accident, it is not self-created. We call the source of life God, but that is not a solution of the problem. It is but a confession that we cannot understand; it still remains the eternal mystery.—Rev. Guy Arthur Jamieson, Presbyterian, Tottenville, N. Y.

Rescuing the Fallen.

There ought to be readiness among Christian people to provide an easy rescue of those who desire to escape from the awful slavery in which they are bound. Many of these victims are as much sinned against as sinning, and with a little of the Redeemer's pity, and some exhibition of Christ's spirit may make it possible for many enslaved girls to find a road back to self-respect and purity and godliness.—Rev. Charles E. Guthrie, Methodist Episcopalian, Washington.

Disease Result of Thought.

There is a vast deal of suffering and disease in the world which is the product of men's thoughts. But if a disease is caused by the mind it is certainly reasonable to believe that it can be cured by the mind; to give the sufferer a new outlook upon life, to inspire courage and hope and faith, to renew the forces of the will, to turn away the mind from conditions which have caused nervous overthrow will bring physical cure.—Rev. C. Waldo Cherry, Presbyterian, Troy, N. Y.

BABY'S ITCHING HUMOR.

Nothing Would Help Him—Mother Almost in Despair—Owes Quick Cure to Cuticura.

"Several months ago, my little boy began to break out with itching sores. I doctored him, but as soon as I got them healed up in one place they would break out in another. I was almost in despair. I could not get anything that would help him. Then I began to use Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, and after using them three times the sores commenced to heal. He is now well, and not a scar is left on his body. They have never returned nor left him with bad blood, as one would think. Cuticura Remedies are the best I have ever tried, and I shall highly recommend them to any one who is suffering likewise. Mrs. William Geeding, 102 Washington St., Attica, Ind., July 22, 1907."

We Cannot Sing the Old Songs.

"What I can't understand, and what all foreigners traveling here can't understand about you Americans is your indifference to your own songs," said a German-American. "You have plenty of good songs that are typically American, but nobody knows them. You try very hard to learn the German lieder and students' songs and the folk songs of France, Russia and Italy, and even Scottish and Irish ballads, but somehow you think it shows provincialism and poor musical taste to know your own songs. Such a sentiment doesn't exist anywhere else in the world. You get a band of Germans or Frenchmen or Russians together and they can sing their native songs for hours without either words or music. They are learned by heart from generation to generation. It is a shame that you Americans can't do the same thing. Last night I was at an informal affair made up of Germans and Americans. They kept a young German chap hammering away at the piano half the time. After a while he switched from the songs of his own country and struck up 'Old Kentucky Home.' There wasn't an American in the crowd that could sing more than two lines of it. If I were an American I'd try to put into the hands of every child a book of the best American songs and see that he learned to sing them."—New York Press.

A New Amphibian.

Several examples of a zoological paradox—a fish which would be speedily drowned if placed in deep water—have just been added to the collection at Regent's Park. This is the African walking fish, which spends the greater part of its existence upon the mud banks of tropical rivers. Its method of progression has been described by naturalists as the "hop, skip and jump" variety, and when journeying inland, as it does over long distances, it climbs by means of the breast fins over the roots and even into the boughs of trees. These curious creatures, which belong to an important group known as lung fishes, form a connecting link with the higher forms of life, the air bladder being converted into what is practically a lung. When the rivers dry up in the hot season they bury themselves in the mud, breathing in the air like a frog or a newt. In Australia there are several varieties of lung fishes, one of the largest, which is much esteemed as an article of food, sometimes attaining a length of six feet.—Daily Graphic.

A DEMOCRATIC SPEECH.

Hon. L. Ert Slack came to St. Joe yesterday from Garrett where he made a noon hour speech, arriving here in an auto at 1:30 o'clock. He was around meeting some of his democratic friends before speaking at the Opera House. The speech began at 2:05. The Chairman, Miles Baxter introducing the speaker. Mr. Slack proved himself an able entertainer at his subject by holding his audience attention for almost two hours. After speaking he was driven to Butler in an auto wagon accompanied by Rep. Knisely to speak there this evening. The crowd was exceedingly large considering the busy times of the farmers. The speaker was well pleased with his audience and his cordial welcome here and especially by the ladies. The Blackburn band enlivened the spirit of all who were present.

The L. L. C. meeting which was held at the home of Mrs. C. A. Patterson last wednesday night was of unusual interest. The subject for the evening being "Home". First on program was the singing of "Home Sweet Home", by the club. This was followed by a paper by Mrs. Addie Filley "The Old Fashioned Home", which was listened to with much interest as she portrayed the old fashioned home and the manner in which our fore-mothers were compelled to manage the affairs of the home. This paper was followed by a lively discussion. Next on program was a paper by Mrs. Delora Curie, "The Club Woman as a Wife and Mother." Which showed careful preparation and was greatly enjoyed by all present and was followed by general discussion. Reading, The First Quarrell, by Tennyson, was given by Mrs. Jennie Secaler. Roll Call, quotations Home. After business the club adjourned feeling that the evening had been pleasantly and profitably spent.

Relieved of his Money

Dr. and Mrs. Bowman were at Ft. Wayne last week in attendance to the Medical association which met there. Mrs. Bowman states that the Dr. was relieved of his pocket book which contained nearly $60 besides some notes and other valuable papers. This was not discovered until they returned home.

Quarterly Meeting.

Sunday was a day of especial interest to the St. Joe Circuit of the Methodist Protestant Church. The Quarterly Meeting and communion service was held at the Concord Church. There was a large attendance and much spiritual interest was manifested. Financial reports show a healthy condition. The people are much encouraged, and are anticipating a successful year.

Accidently Injured

Monday afternoon of this week, the hay bailers were busy at work on the farm of George Wade, west of town. The bailer was set so that it was necessary to pull the bales back into the barn with a horse. Mr. Wade was in the act of hooking on a bale, when the horse started, pulling his left hand into the pulley, tearing it from the thumb back a distance of about 4 or 5 inches. Dr. J. H. Lake was called immediately to dress the wound. It was found necessary to take about 15 stitches. The thumb muscles were all torn loose and the skin over the back of the hand was all torn off, making a very bad wound. The hand is getting along fine.

K. of P. Reception.

A very cordial reception was given by the K. of P. lodge and their families, on last Thursday evening to J. S. Sailer and family, who are about to leave our city and take up a new home in the sunny south-land, Texas. The evenings program was opened by the singing of the Opening Ode, after which Dr. B. S. Sheffer, in a few well chosen words in behalf of the lodge expressing his sympathy for the lodge loosing such a stately Knight as Mr. Sailor. Miss Ruth DeLong favored the audience with a recitation, followed by a duett by Vera and Flossie Copp, which they rendered in their usual pleasing manner. In the absence of B. F. Walter, H. W. Krabill was called upon to address the audience upon the subject of "Friendship that Extends Beyond State Lines." His talk was eloquent and he held the attention of all. The Mesdames Blanch Leighty and Lenore Kagey, with Flossie Copp at the organ sang a very pretty duett. Rev. Mc Cain was to have given a short talk on Pythianism but owing to his absence C. A. Patterson was called upon to address the audience. Carrie Bleeks sang a solo followed by the reading of a short story on Pythianism by Mrs. W. C. DeLong. The main thought or thread which was brought out was that of friendship and patriotism. A chief emblem of the order. The evenings program was brought to a close by the singing of America.

The ladies at this junction prepared the luncheon. The tables were arranged in the form of a triangle which was appropriate for such a meeting. The luncheon consisted of coffee, cake pickles, bananas and ham sandwitches. Everybody enjoyed the evening royally.

Reception.

The Rebekah lodge of this place gave a farewell reception to Clinton Webb and wife, last Friday evening. A large crowd was present and an enjoyable time was had. Refreshments consisting of coffee, pickles and sandwitches were served. A Rebekah pin was given Mrs. Webb as a token of love. Mrs. Edith Abel was presented with a fine large quilt which was made by the lodge.

Served Dinner

The ladies of the M. P. church held dinner and supper in the rink building Tuesday and it was well patronized, clearing over fifty dollars. The ladies served the meals to the election boards and the general public. Their meals were first class and everyone had plenty to eat. The hall was lighted up in the evening by George Milliman, and in fine shape. The hall was open late and oysters were served.

A Good Show.

The Cooper Musical Comedy Co., came to town, Monday morning from Auburn for an all week stand at the opera house. The people are advertising medicine. The chief attraction is their show which is the best that ever struck St. Joe beyond a doubt. The people are right and large crowds are in attendance. Their medicines are exactly as they represent them and are selling a good deal of it. One cannot help but enjoy themselves while there. Mr. Cooper himself, is a wonder in music being able to play any instrument without any difficulty. The house will be crowded every night beyond a doubt and standing room will be at a premium.

Will Bridge Sink Hole

The bridging of the Bungesink hole will be done by Cleveland VanAuken, son of Cal VanAuken, DeKalb county bridge inspector. This sink hole is located about three miles east of Auburn. It has been giving considerable trouble and has been dangerous to cross. Soundings have been taken and the muck found very deep, too deep to allow filling to be done without great expense. The plan suggested to overcome the danger is to build a bridge 132 feet long and lay it immediately upon the ground. It will not be set on piling, merely lie on the ground. The theory is that with this support the roadway will be reenforced sufficiently to make it perfectly safe to drive across. As it is the treacherous spot is not considered so extremely dangerous only during wet weather and then a person crossing does not know whether he will see the other side or the bottom side. The bridge as planned and contract let to construct will cost $400.

The Election

This morning the news of the election was circulating among the people and to the sorrow of a great many. In our county Mr. Bryan polled 3,960 and Taft 2,261 votes, making a majority of 1,699 for Bryan. Marshall 2,726 and Watson 2,307 making a majority of 419 for Marshall. Cline received 695 and Gilhams 731 votes, making Gilhams 36 of a majority.

The above is the last report received before going to press. It is however a settled fact that Thomas R. Marshall will be the next governor, running strong in the twelfth district. Mr. Taft is to be our next president but by what majority is not known as the returns are slow in coming in.

The county went democratic and that from 300 to 600 votes. John D. Fetters won in the race by 41 votes and George Wade by 8. We have been unable to find out as to the county ticket only that it was democratic. The returns are slow in coming in and we are compelled to go to press without them. This was a shock to the people as they had figured on sort of a mixture this year.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

Fire Destroys Summer Cottages.

The greater portion of the thickly housed summer colony at Salisbury Beach, Mass., was wiped out by a fire which destroyed more than one hundred cottages situated along the beach front of the Merrimac river. Practically all of the business houses had been abandoned for the season and the damage was estimated at $100,000. After the flames had raged for three hours the combined fire fighting forces of Amesbury, Salisbury and Newburyport, together with the half dozen life savers from the Salisbury beach station and a little band of volunteers, pulled down several cottages standing between the burning area and the larger hotels and dance halls and in this way prevented the fire from reaching that section.

Prince Henry Takes Flight.

Count Zeppelin's air ship made an ascension at Friedrichshafen, with Prince Henry of Prussia and Captain Mischke as passengers. The air ship started in the direction of Ueberlingen to the northward of Lake Constance and made its way against a strong northwest wind at the rate of thirty-seven miles an hour. Count Zeppelin himself was steering. The air ship, which was at an altitude of six hundred feet, soon disappeared behind a gray bank of clouds.

Wealthy Chinaman Dies.

Chang Chung, since the assassination of "Little Pete" the unofficial though no less powerful mayor of San Francisco's Chinatown, died at San Francisco, Cal., following an attack of pneumonia. Chung, who was one of the wealthiest orientals on the Pacific coast, was head of the Sam Yup Tong and directed to a large extent the intricate policies of his countrymen in several cities. Two of his four wives were with him at the time of his death.

Two Men Killed by Train.

While attempting to avoid a freight train on the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton railroad, Charles Case, 47 years old, and his nephew, Bert Bailey, 19 years old, stepped in front of the Indianapolis accommodation train No. 38, at Muhlhauser, south of Hamilton, Ohio. Both were instantly killed. Case leaves a widow and five children.

Vein of Coal Found.

The vein of coal discovered a few days ago at Bloomfield, Ind., while workmen were drilling for water has been found to be of a good quality. Since the vein was discovered at a depth of only 130 feet, other holes will be drilled to learn whether or not there is a field of sufficient area to justify the sinking of a shaft.

Coffee Lowest in Years.

With March contracts selling at 5 cents in New York City, the market for coffee futures was at its lowest level since 1904, and it was claimed that, considering the increased surtax and the exchange rate the returns to the Brazilian planter are less than at any time since contracts sold at 3.55 cents in 1903.

Three More Counties in Ohio Vote Dry.

Temperance forces in Ohio have won three more county option elections as follows: Green County, dry by 750, 27 saloons; Williams County, dry by 1,726, 19 saloons; Trumbull County, dry by 900, 72 saloons. A total of 1,045 saloons have been voted out under the new county law to date.

Trooper Goes Up for Life.

Private Michael Bereham, of the First Cavalry, who ran amuck at Camp Stotzenberg, near Manila, P. I., last May and killed four of his comrades, was sentenced to life imprisonment by the trial court before which he appeared.

Big Cotton Mills to Resume.

The West Huntsville Cotton Mill plant at Huntsville, Ala., will be put in full operation next week, giving employment to several hundred people. The mill has been closed for some months.

Misses Mule; Kills Son.

James Thorn, a farmer near Russellville, Ala., while attempting to run a mule out of the yard, picked up a small stone and threw it at the animal. He missed the mule and hit his 2-year-old son, killing him instantly.

Wrights Get the Medal.

The British Aero Club has awarded its gold medal to the Wright brothers, of Dayton, Ohio, for their remarkable achievements.

FROM THE FOUR QUARTERS OF THE EARTH

PHYSICIAN LEAVES PRISON.

Dr. Goddard, Who Murdered Laundryman in 1897, Given Liberty.

Dr. Jefferson D. Goddard, whose trial and conviction for the murder of Frederick Jackson, a laundryman of Kansas City, April 2, 1897, was sensational, was released the other day from the State prison. After three trials he began a twenty-year term in the spring of 1901, but a commutation and good behavior credit set him free. Dr. Goddard shot Jackson in a hotel after the men had been on bad terms for a long time because of Dr. Goddard's friendship for Mrs. Jackson. During the trial Mrs. Jackson and her youngest daughters assisted Goddard in every way and after he had begun his penitentiary term they helped to obtain a commutation from Gov. Dockery. Mrs. Jackson still conducts a laundry, owns much real estate and is estimated to be worth $250,000. The foundation of the estate was laid by Jackson, who came from Illinois twenty years ago as a poor man.

TAFT'S SON SAVES YALE HALL.

Leads Classmates in Bucket Brigade to Prevent Spread of Fire.

Fighting flames in Vanderbilt Hall, one of the buildings of Yale University in New Haven, Conn., Robert Alphonse Taft, son of the Republican presidential candidate, and his roommate, Henry Payne Bingham, the Yale quarter back, prevented what would have been turned into an ugly blaze for the firemen to quench but for their prompt work. The fire started in the room next to theirs. It is occupied by their classmates, A. B. Gilbert of Mount Kisco, N. Y., and Wilbur Fisk Davis of Meriden, who were absent at a recitation. Young Taft and Bingham broke into the room, closed a window which they found open and which was fanning the flames into a fierce blaze, and poured water on the fire. When the firemen arrived Taft and Bingham had the flames well under control, and a swish from the city chemical engine completed their efforts.

"OTHER WOMAN" AT WEDDING.

"Here Is Your Son, Now Take Him," She Declares to the Bridegroom.

All Fall River, Mass., is awaiting developments in aftermath of the church wedding which was brought to a sensational climax there Sunday by "the other woman," who brought with her the child, a 4-year old baby. As the bridal couple, Charles J. Reagan, a banker, and the former Miss Mary Chadwick, a leader in the younger social set, were walking down the aisle after the wedding, a heavily veiled woman, leading a boy, stepped before them. "Here, Charles Reagan, take your child and keep him—you and your wife. I have kept him four years." The bridegroom recognized the woman and called her name, Miss Sullivan, in a cry. The bride went home and Reagan departed from the city with the boy.

Noted Missionary Dies.

The Rev. Dr. Hiram Bingham, the noted Congregational missionary, who underwent a surgical operation at Johns Hopkins hospital recently, died there Sunday. Dr. Bingham was a missionary in the Gilbert islands and reduced the native language to writing. A gasoline schooner named the Hiram Bingham, for mission work in the island, was launched at San Francisco on the day he died.

President Is Fifty Years Old.

President Roosevelt was 50 years old Tuesday. To all who ask him how he feels to be near the end of his term, while still a young man, the President says: "I have had a splendid time in the White House. I have no regrets. I have done some things. I have lived, and am counting the days that must elapse before I go out. Oh, then there is a year in Africa."

Typhoid Rages in Montreal.

An epidemic of typhoid, which has been prevailing in Montreal for several weeks, is assuming serious proportions. All the city hospitals are filled and are refusing additional patients. Private physicians are overrun with calls. So far the number of deaths have been comparatively small. The bad water supply and impure milk are given as the causes.

Kaiser's Medal for Maennerchor.

As a token of his appreciation Emperor William of Germany has sent to Dr. Lettenbaur, the German consul of Cincinnati, a magnificent solid gold medal to be presented to the Columbus Maennerchor upon the occasion of the celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of that organization.

Six Men Die in Blizzard.

Six herders and 20,000 sheep grazing on the Cumbers mountain range in Rio Arriba County, 140 miles north of Santa Fe, N. M., are reported to have perished in the blizzard which has raged in that section for three days. The storm was the worst in years and snow is from five to ten feet deep.

Doctors Blamed for Epidemic.

An alarming epidemic of scarlet fever and diphtheria "back of the yards" in Chicago, is attributed to the failure of physicians to report cases, among which were three in the family of Alderman Golombewski.

Arrest Fugitive Broker.

Broker Wallace H. Hopkins, who disappeared from Chicago last April, mourned by investors in his mining stock and merger scheme, has been arrested in Seattle.

CUBA HAS MANY FRIENDS.

Minister Quesada Surprised During European Visit.

Gonsalo de Quesada, Cuban minister to the United States, has left Paris for Washington. He has completed a three months' tour of the Canary Islands, Portugal, Spain, Italy, Switzerland and France and has investigated the matter of sending emigrants to certain parts of Cuba. In a Paris interview the minister said he was surprised over the universal feeling of good will toward Cuba. He spoke with the prime ministers of all the countries he visited and heard nothing but the highest praise for the attitude of the United States toward his country and the hope was expressed everywhere that the island soon would become a self-governing republic. A feature of Senor de Quesada's journey was the banquet tendered him by the civil and military authorities of Santander. It was the first time such an honor had been shown a Cuban official in Spain.

BOASTS OF 500 BURGLARIES.

Prisoner's Voluntary Statement Investigated by Chicago Police.

Charles C. Nagel, 23 years old, is being held at the North Halsted street police station in Chicago while the police investigate his voluntary statement that he is responsible for over 500 burglaries in various parts of the country. He was arrested at the Lessing apartment building after he had been seen by one of the tenants to secret himself on a rear porch. Nagel told the police that his home is in Milwaukee and that he has traveled over a great part of the United States. He is said to have admitted that he gained a living by committing burglaries, but was unable to give the locations of all the places robbed by him in Chicago. The young man talked willingly concerning his many burglaries and boasted that he was responsible for more "good jobs" than any other one man. He will be held while the police seek to verify his confession.

"AD" GIVES WIFE HYSTERICS.

Letter to Husband in Feminine Hand Boosts Patent Medicine.

Protest has been made to the United States government by an angry father in the middle West who would have certain forms of advertising now in use in that part of the United States condemned and forbidden the mails. His complaint states that his son-in-law is traveling in the far West. Last week a letter came for him addressed in a feminine hand. Opening it, his wife read: "Dearest—After you left me yesterday I remembered that I had forgotten to tell you to——" After reading this far the wife went into hysterics, and has not yet recovered her normal condition. Had she continued she would have found that the letter was an advertisement and that it told of the merits of a certain patent medicine. The governmen can suggest no remedy.

DEATH RECALLS LOTTERY LAW.

Former Governor Miller of North Dakota Expires.

The death of former Gov. John Miller of North Dakota in Duluth recalls the famous fight against the Louisiana lottery in North Dakota. Mr. Miller led the fight against the lottery, and the story is told that a representative of the lottery came into Mr. Miller's office and laid down a suit case containing $200,000. "That is yours if you will permit the lottery to enter North Dakota," he said. "My price is higher than that," said Mr. Miller, and threw him out of the office.

Shooter Sues for Damages.

Dr. James W. Simpson, the New York dentist who shot and killed his father-in-law, Bartley T. Horner, in Northport, L. I., and was acquitted at Riverhead about a year later, has sued for $10,000 damages his mother-in-law, Mrs. Ella T. Horner, who on July 13 last, at Northport, shot him when he tried to enter her home to speak with his wife.

Lake Boat, Wrecked, Burns.

Missing its way in a smoke pall over Georgia Bay, the steamer Iroquois, with seventeen passengers and a crew of five, smashed on West rock. Twenty minutes later it caught fire from an overturned cook stove. The persons aboard owe their lives to the prompt response of a rafting tug to the signals of distress.

America to Have Three Cardinals.

A dispatch from Rome to a London news agency says the Pope has decided that a special consistory shall be held for the nomination of new American cardinals after the reorganization of the American diocese, and that the United States shall have three cardinals.

Cause of Financial Rascality.

The cause of the epidemic of bank failures, says Edward P. Moxey, federal bank examiner, are New York, the Great White Way, high finance and the laxity with which some judges enforce the law.

Two Mexican Rebels Must Die.

After trial at Torreon, Mexico, Lazo and Nobleda, leaders of the Mexican revolutionists, who raided the town of Viesca in Mexico last June, have been sentenced to be shot and twelve accomplices each sentenced to fifteen years in the penitentiary.

Boy Hunter Kills Brother.

REPORTS 627 EXECUTIONS.

The Rech has made public the official statistics of executions in Russia during 1907 on sentences imposed by the military district courts. The total is 627, and thirty-four victims were soldiers and 543 civilians. These figures are considerably below the earlier inofficial estimates, based on condemnations reported in press dispatches. According to the official classifications 453 persons, or more than 70 per cent, were hanged or shot for murder or robbery accompanied by violence, sixty-two for mutiny or other offenses against military discipline, fifty-one for crimes against the State and four for desertion. The Baltic provinces took the lead in the number of executions with 134. This was due to the stamping out of the insurrection. The Kiev region was next with eighty-four executions. Odessa counted up sixty-nine, Warsaw sixty-five and Moscow fifty-nine.

MYSTERY IN BANK SHORTAGE.

Cashier Agreed to Make Good $1,250,000 if Not Arrested.

William Montgomery, cashier of the Allegheny National bank up to the time it was closed last May, following the discovery that $1,250,000 of its cash and securities were missing, was placed on trial in the United States District Court in Pittsburg on an indictment charging embezzlement of $469,000. William L. Folds, who as bank examiner discovered the shortage and filed the charges, testified that the day he discovered the shortage Montgomery acknowledged his guilt. Folds continued: "Montgomery asked me how much the shortage was. I told him, and then he asked me if the matter could not be kept quiet. He said he could raise the money. I asked him how, and he replied that it made no difference. He said he wouldn't care to make it good if he was to be arrested."

RIDERS THREATEN WHOLE CITY

Declare Intention of Killing All Who Live at Trenton, Tenn.

Dr. T. J. Happel of Trenton, Tenn., says an unsigned letter was found on the stairs to his office which contained many threats against Trenton. The letter was full of profanity and declared it was proposed to make away with the men and women, both whites and negroes. The letter said the town would be visited the last of this month, and that the people would soon be drinking water in hell. On the back was the picture of a horse and rider. Judge Joseph E. Jones of Dresden, judge of the Fourteenth Judicial Circuit, convened his court in special session for the purpose of investigating the outrages in the Reelfoot Lake vicinity resulting in the death of Captain Quentin Rankin of Trenton. The grand jury was selected and retired to begin its deliberations.

Find a Shortage of $60,000.

Experts appointed by the Attorney General to investigate a shortage of $35,000 in the San Francisco city treasury, found that the total amount of the shortage is $60,000, of which $14,000 is due to the State. The shortage occurred during the term of City Treasurer Bantels, whose term of office covered the period just previous and subsequent to the great disaster of 1906.

Death Calls Ossian Guthrie.

Ossian Guthrie, one of the oldest and most interesting of Chicago's old settlers, died Sunday after an illness of fifteen weeks. He was 82 years old and death was due to a combination of years and kidney trouble. Mr. Guthrie was known as the "father of Chicago's drainage system," and as one of the most enthusiastic geologists and engineers in the middle West.

Allegheny Cashier Is Guilty.

William Montgomery, former cashier of the defunct Allegheny National Bank, which failed some time ago for over $1,000,000, who was placed on trial on two indictments charging the embezzlement and abstraction of $469,000, was found guilty as indicted by a jury in the United States District Court in Pittsburg.

Hurricane Sweeps Nicaragua.

A cable from Bluefields, Nicaragua, says: "A disastrous hurricane swept the coast of Nicaragua last Friday to Sunday, destroying the towns of Rio Grande and Prinzapulka, and doing considerable damage to the interior. There was much loss of life."

Found Slain in Woods.

The body of John Denny, Jr., aged 23 years, was found in a woods near Upper Providence, Pa., under conditions which strongly point to murder. A large hole had been torn in the lower portion of his face by a charge of shot.

Canadian Liberals Win.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Canadian liberals have been returned to power, though their majority is reduced from 66 to 40.

Warns Roosevelt Against Perils.

An African expert warns President Roosevelt of deadly perils of jungles and declares man of chief executive's age has only fifteen chances in 100 of returning alive.

Pastor Held as Bigamist.

The Rev. Dr. F. E. Toms, a Baptis evangelist, was arrested in Larned, Kan. on a charge of bigamy brought by the Rev. F. W. Gookin, pastor of the Larned Baptist church. Toms came from Tecumseh, Neb.

GAY LIFE BANKS' DEATH.

"Great White Way" Declared Cause of Epidemic of Failures.

Gotham's Rialto—that portion of the white light district of Broadway which begins somewhere along 24th street and ends somewhere the other side of Long Acre Square—came in for a castigation at the hands of Edward P. Moxey, expert bank examiner for the United States Department of Justice. Mr. Moxey's business is to flit about the country and peer unexpectedly over shoulders of cashiers of national banks here and there in order to find out if their cash balances are all right. Mr. Moxey recently found a number of these gentlemen with cash balances all wrong and put them in the penitentiary.

"You mean the 'Broadway,' New York?" he was asked when he sad said New York was the couse of it all.

"I mean the 'Broadway,' New York," he answered, quietly. "I mean the gorgeous hotels and restaurants, the bars, gambling houses, the myriad of theaters, palatial apartment houses, turning night into day. I mean the flood of money in New York upon which this life is borne along, the craving for vast incomes by which alone such a life can be lived.

"To say that even a bare majority of the tens of thousands of men who nightly swell the crowd of amusement crazed spenders, who live in $5,000 apartments and whose touring cars congest the streets, are doing this with money which is honestly theirs is absurd. They are not earning this money; they are either juggling other people's cash or they are gambling with their own.

"When you can go into a restaurant at 2 o'clock in the morning and behold $50,000 worth of women's gowns at the tables and $3,000 worth of food in process of consumption, something is wrong. And when you observe $50,000 worth of automobiles waiting to take this one supper crowd to their homes—or elsewhere—you may be sure there is queer bookkeeping somewhere."

"It is not only this sort of life in New York but in a more sinister way the sight and example of it which are bringing about a degradation of sense of common honesty throughout the country. That American asset, the 'New England conscience,' has become an object of jest. And, as I said, New York is to blame.

"The young banker and business man of the smaller community comes to New York. He is taken in hand by his business acquaintances here and shown about town. His hosts spend money on a scale which dazzles him.

"He wonders how his friends manage to share in this prodigality, and bit by bit he finds out. They tell him funny stories of transactions, which, reduced to a proper financial analysis, are defalcations pure and simple, or at best plain gambling. 'Everybody does it,' they say; 'it's a part of the game,' and back to his home town goes the young banker filled with dreams of sudden wealth and all the gay life that goes with it.

"Too often this person starts to lead a gay life before he has got the sudden wealth. He sees the rich customer of his bank riding up to the door with a big deposit or to get a letter of credit for a trip abroad. Perhaps he tells himself, it isn't the customer's money at all. Why, then, shouldn't he manipulate it for his own gain? Why isn't it anybody's to play with who can get his hands on it? The life he has seen and the methods he has learned are destroying his sense of property.

"He is somehow getting it into his head that this money placed in his keeping is a sort of common property, and that as long as he can keep his books looking technically right he may juggle with it for the benefit of his own personal pocket. He really comes to believe, seriously, that this is so."

WOMAN A COOK, NOT A VOTER.

"To be able to mind her own business and get busy," is the panacea, somewhat briefly and laconically expressed, for the restlessness and disquietude of American women, according to his excellency, Mgr. Diomede Falcono, apostolic delegate to the United States, expressed at Archbishop Glennon's residence in St. Louis.

"Do you think the modern woman would be happier were she to become more of a factor, politically and publicly, in order that she may rear better statesmen and men of affairs?"

"I think she should attend to her husband's home and take care of her children and see that their dinner is well cooked. If she will see to her own business and be busy in her house she will be happy."

Prohibition Cuts Arrests.

At the recent meeting of the League of American Municipalities, Mayor Joyner of Atlanta gave figures from the court and police records of that city, showing a falling off of more than 50 per cent in the number of arrests for drunkenness and misdemeanors attributable to drink since the establishment of prohibition.

Doctors Testing Condemned Food.

It has just been learned that a most exhaustive study of the effects of the use of deadly acids in the preservation of canned foods has been going on in New York City for the past four months. Three physicians and an expert chemist have subjected themselves to experiments soon to be made public. The men are Doctors Lucas, Ringer and Harvey and Chemist Edward O'Brien. They have each taken 60 grains of the much-talked-of benzoic acid, yet show practically no ill effects so far.

CHICAGO.

The Weekly Review of Chicago Trade, published by R. G. Dun & Co., says:

Statistical comparisons now begin with the week a year ago when the depression started. Further evidence of sustained recovery is furnished by increasing payments through the banks and a commercial mortality which is lower than the corresponding weeks of 1907 and 1906.

Distribution of finished products and general merchandise exhibits a wider volume, although variable weather retards a seasonable absorption in leading retail branches here and at the interior. Agricultural reports are more gratifying, corn being in good condition and rains ample for the completion of winter wheat seeding.

The markets for the principal grains show decline in values and the aggregate movement here is smaller, but flour sales remain exceptionally heavy, and there is strong buying of both provisions and live stock on improved supplies.

Wholesale markets disclose a lighter attendance of outside buyers and house dealings in the staples are less active, although the comparison with this time last year is not unfavorable in textiles and fabrics, clothing and footwear.

Manufacturing generally advances as well as expected, especially in iron and metal working, but the underlying conditions form a healthy basis for improvement in the near future.

Delayed contracts were closed this week for considerable tonnage of structural steel and rails. Rolling stock is now in better request, more cars being requisite to meet the expanding freight offerings.

Money is in abundant supply and rates for commercial paper average about 4½ per cent for choice needs. The outgo of currency to move crops has slackened, and there is quiet in investment operations, commitments being mainly suspended until the election is over.

Bank clearings, $250,023,574, are 6.3 per cent under those of corresponding week in 1907. Failures reported in Chicago district number 18, against 21 last week, 28 a year ago and 21 in 1906. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 5, against 2 last week, 6 a year ago and 7 in 1906.

NEW YORK.

Retail trade still reflects the influence of warm weather and the approach of election breeds conservatism as regards heavy buying and the projection of new enterprises. However, there is more doing and more confident buying of raw material by manufacturers, who apparently forecast a change for the better in the latter part of this year or the early part of next.

The large movement of wheat to market is responsible for the optimistic tenor of reports from distributive centers in the Northwest. Effects of the drought are shown in almost total suspension of steamboat traffic on the Ohio river and its tributaries, the holding up of large quantities of coal along that stream, the prevalence of destructive forest fires and the low stage of water supplies. Reports as to collections vary, being best in the Northwest and poorest in the South.

The situation in textile lines is interesting and not without encouragement. While jobbing trade is confined largely to small immediate shipment or filling-in orders, there is fair activity in the Chicago district and farther west, where the breaking of the drought has helped sentiment.

More interest has been developed in the iron and steel market, and considerable new business has been done in the East in basic pig.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Oct. 22 number 237, against 244 last week, 220 in the like week of 1907, 184 in 1906, 178 in 1905 and 180 in 1904. Business failures in Canada for the week ending with Oct. 22 number 31, which compares with 29 last week and 39 in this week last year.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

Aunt Diana

The Sunshine of the Family

CHAPTER IV.

It was finally settled. Alison felt that duty called her home, and soon the day came when she had to part from Aunt Diana. It was a sad leave-taking, and the tears were in Alison's eyes long after the train steamed slowly into the Chesterton station. Alison gathered up her numerous articles of traveling gear, and looked out with some eagerness, but Roger's tall figure was nowhere in sight, and, much disappointed and perplexed, she gave a porter instructions about her traveling boxes.

"Will you fetch me a cab, please?" faltered Alison, feeling ready to cry again at her loneliness, and wondering at Roger's unkind desertion, and then all at once she encountered a pair of round blue eyes, very wide open. She started; yes, there was the wide mouth, the droll, freckled face that she remembered so well; of course it was Rudel, grown, but not otherwise altered, grinning affably at her.

"Why, Rudel," she exclaimed, reproachfully, "why did you not speak to me? I was looking for Roger, and nearly passed you by."

"Oh, but I should have hallooed all in good time," he returned, with another grin, shaking hands with her, but refraining from any warmer fraternal greeting.

As soon as she was seated in the cab he got in after her, and proceeded to put down both windows. "You would not like me to go outside, I suppose," he said, in a good-humored, dawdling voice; "these cabs are so stuffy they make a fellow feel queer."

"Go outside if you like," returned Alison, willing to humor him, but rather disturbed at the boy's coolness.

"Oh, it does not matter," was the contradictory response; "we have not far to go, and cabby is so unusually stout there would not be room for Otter. Oh, by the bye, Roger told me to tell you that father told him that somebody else must come to the station, as he could not be spared. Roger was awfully put about, for he said I should be no help, and I have not been much, eh?" with another grin that threatened to became a laugh.

"I wish dear old Roger could have come, but I am glad to see you, too," was Alison's police reply. "I thought you would have kissed me after two years of absence."

"Oh, I never kiss girls," reddening visibly.

"Not your own sisters?" exclaimed Alison, in a grieved voice. "Oh, Rudel, you used not to be so stiff and unkind."

"I ain't one or the other," rousing up at this reproach. "I think it is first-rate—your coming, I mean—and you are no end of a brick to do it, and," with a sudden burst of confidence, "I shouldn't mind giving you a kiss now and then, when you wanted it particularly, if you would promise not to tell Missie; I would not give her one—no, not if she were to ask me on her bended knees—a stuck-up little minx!"

"Oh, Rudel, for shame! Mabel is as much your sister as I am."

"No, she isn't, and never shall be," growled the lad. "I tell you what, Alison, you are an out-and-outer, and no mistake, and I will help you fight all your battles, that I will, as sure as my name is Rudel, and that is better than ever so many kisses."

"Dear Rudel, I am sure you mean kindly, though you have such a funny way of showing it; but I have no wish to fight any one."

"Oh, but you will be obliged to fight Missie, whether you wish for it or not," was the cool rejoinder; but Alison was spared any further argument on this subject, as they had reached The Holms, and in another moment were driving up the graveled sweep between rows of dusty evergreens.

The Holms was a singularly built house. A square, stone hall, uncarpeted and chilly looking, led to the kitchen and other domestic offices, all on a large scale and unusually roomy; a wide flight of stone steps, differing from the modern staircase by being also uncovered, led to the sitting rooms, dining room, drawing room, school room, and study, all opening on to a narrow corridor, fitted from end to end with books—books literally lining it from floor to ceiling.

As Alison wearily ascended the steps, a thin ladylike woman in a black gown, with a depressed, gentle face, came to the head of the staircase.

"I am so glad to see you, my dear," she said, kissing her affectionately. "Why, I do believe you are grown, Alison; you are taller than I expected to see you, but you are looking pale."

"Oh, that is nothing," returned Alison, hastily. "I am tired with the journey." For just then she did not wish her looks to be too keenly criticised. "Where are the others, Miss Leigh—father, Mabel and Poppie?"

"I am so sorry, Alison, that I am the only one to greet your homecoming. Mabel and Poppie are out; they had an invitation to an afternoon party at the Brownlow's; it is little Stacy's birthday. I wanted Mabel to stay at home and let Poppie go without her, but she would not hear of it."

"Never mind, returned Alison, quietly; but she was conscious of a hurt, chilled feeling as Miss Leigh brought out this lame excuse. This was her return home after two years' absence, and yet Roger could not be spared to meet her at the station, and Mabel could not give up an afternoon's amusement to welcome her sister. Her father was busy as usual; probably he had forgotten her existence at this time.

"You are very tired, my dear," continued Miss Leigh, disturbed at the young girl's sudden gravity and paleness. "Shall I take you to your room, and send you up a cup of tea? I daresay you would like to be quiet a little."

"Thank you," replied Alison, gratefully. Rudel skipped up after her, three steps at a time.

"I suppose you do not want to see Selby now, Alison?"

"No, no," interrupted Miss Leigh, "your sister is tired, Rudel; you had better go down and leave her to rest."

"Oh, I was not talking to you, Mother Leigh," was the boy's rude retort; and as Alison turned round to shake her head at him, she discovered him in the act of making one of his favorite faces at the back of the unconscious governess.

"I say, missus," he observed, when he had sufficiently relieved his feelings, "have you told Alison about her room?"

"No, not yet, Rudel," returned the much-enduring Miss Leigh.

"Then I shall. I call it a mean trick of Missie's; no one but a girl would do such a thing; here she has been and taken your room, Alison, with mother's things in it; and nothing the missus can say will get her to give it up. Missus is awfully wild about it, ain't you, missus?"

"Oh, Rudel! do be quiet," remonstrated Miss Leigh, in the old worried voice Alison knew so well. "What a tiresome boy you are! and I wanted to tell your sister quietly. Alison, my dear, I am very sorry, but Mabel has appropriated your room, and most improperly refuses to give it up. I spoke to your father about it last night, but he only said it did not signify, that he expected you would not mind, as your visit to us might not be a very lengthy one. I think you had better speak to him yourself."

"I will see about it," returned Alison, quickly, anxious to stem the governess' nervous flow of words. "Am I to sleep here to-night?" as Miss Leigh opened the door of a back room.

"I have made it as nice as I can," returned Miss Leigh, apologetically, "but I am afraid you will think it an ugly room; it wants repapering, and the carpet is dreadfully old."

"Oh, it will do very well," observed Alison, quietly; but she looked round her with a sinking heart nevertheless. It was Mabel's old room and very shabbily furnished, and looked over the kitchen garden and the sawmills.

She listened with well assumed patience as Miss Leigh pointed out the various little improvements she had effected. Though Alison did not know it, the easy chair and little round table were taken from Miss Leigh's own room; the fuchsias and geraniums in the blue vase were Roger's gift; and even Rudel had contributed the big green fern that stood on the window ledge.

"Now, I will send you up your tea," observed Miss Leigh at last, when the boxes had arrived, and Rudel had assisted to unstrap them; "there is no hurry, my dear; you will have nearly two hours to yourself to unpack and rest."

Alison tried to answer cheerfully, but her head was aching in earnest now; the tears were very near the surface again, but she battled with them bravely.

CHAPTER V.

A cup of excellent tea was very restorative in its effects, and when Alison had freshened her tired face with cold water, and brushed her disheveled locks, and exchanged her traveling dress for a light, cool-looking, zephyr cloth costume, she felt less reluctance to present herself to the critical eyes of her father and Mabel.

"May I come in?" questioned a voice that she knew at once was Roger's, and in a moment she had sprung joyfully to the door.

"Oh, Roger, you dear old fellow, I am so glad to see you again!" she exclaimed, forgetting all her troubles in the sight of his familiar face. Evidently her pleasure was reciprocated; a pair of strong arms almost lifted her off her feet, and bore her across the room toward the window, and, after a hasty kiss or two, Roger put his hand under her chin and gravely inspected her.

"I suppose you are glad to see me," he observed at length, "as you have been crying evidently at the pleasurable anticipation. So you are sorry to come home, Alison, eh? and yet"—rather reproachfully—"you are wanted very badly here."

Alison's only answer was to lay her face down on his arm; this was a little too much for her jaded spirits, a few more tears would come. Roger had found her out, as she knew he would.

"Come now, this won't do, Allie," he said, with a sort of soothing roughness; "we shall pack you back again to Aunt Diana, if you are going to fret. I looked for rather a different greeting after two years' absence."

"I can't help it," she said, trying to dismiss her tears; "I am tired, and everything seems strange to-night, and I do miss Aunt Diana."

"Yes, she has spoiled you for us; you have grown a dainty little lady, Allie."

"Oh, no; I am not spoiled in that way," she interrupted him breathlessly. "You can not quite understand, Roger; but there is such a mixed feeling. I have wanted you all these two years; you have never been out of my mind a single day."

"Well, I am glad to have you back to scold you properly. What color are your eyes generally, Alison? They are as pink as an Albino's to-night."

"It is my turn to look at you," she returned, trying to pluck up a little spirit. "Why, you have grown a mustache, Roger. How well it suits you!"—but Roger only broke into a merry laugh.

"Did you ever see such a handsome fellow? Really, Rudel and I are marvelous specimens of manly beauty. He beats me in freckles, though, ha, ha!" And Roger quite rocked himself in merriment.

"I like the look of you very much," returned Alison. "Your hair is a little rough—and, oh! your boots are muddy. You have wanted me to keep you in order."

"I don't seem to match you, somehow," he observed. "Do you always look as though you were just turned out of a bandbox? I wish you would take Missie and Poppie in hand; they drive Miss Leigh crazy with their untidiness. Oh, we are a happy family, Allie—nothing but billing and cooing, and that sort of thing going on from morning to night. You might take Rudel and Missie for a couple of love birds, the sweet young creatures are so fond of each other, and as for Poppie and Missie—look, there is a specimen of the home music dulcet strains floating up the staircase. There goes Missie."

Alison's brow knitted with some perplexity as she listened. "Flora, will you go into your own room? I insist on it—you are not fit to be seen in that torn frock," in a sharp, girlish voice.

"What does it matter? She won't mind," in a shrill, childish treble; "you are so cross, Mabel. Do let me come in with you and see Alison."

"No, no; do as I tell you; you shall come in presently. There! you have trampled on my dress and torn some of the trimming, you horrid little thing! I will tell papa if you are so naughty, and then he will not let you come down to tea." Here an expressive roar on Poppie's part interrupted the discussion. Alison, who could bear no more, moved quickly to the door and opened it. A pretty looking, fair-haired girl, dressed somewhat untidily and in bad style, with rather a vixenish expression on her flushed face, was standing just outside Alison's room, and behind her a somewhat plain little girl between eight and nine years of age, rather small in stature, and with a droll, freckled face like Rudel's, only it was just now puckered up with crying—a red, inflamed spot on one cheek was evidently the result of a smart blow on her sister's part in payment for the torn trimming.

"How do you do, Mabel?" she said, with a somewhat cold salute of Missie's cheek. "Please do not prevent Popple coming to me. I could not help hearing, you spoke so loud, and I do not mind one bit how she looks. Come here, Poppie, dear;" but the child, evidently shy and upset by the late fracas, held back in an embarrassed manner, until Missie gave her a rough push. "Why don't you go to Alison, you stupid little thing?" she said crossly, for she was put out at her sister's sudden appearance on the scene.

"Please do not force her to come to me; we shall be very good friends directly," returned Alison, sorry for the poor child's awkwardness. "Come with me, Poppie dear; Roger is in my room, and I will show you the pretty new game I have brought for you."

The child's face brightened in a moment, and she moved instantly to take Alison's hand; again Missie interposed.

"She must change her frock, Alison; tea is just ready, and I hear papa's step in the garden. He will be very angry if Poppie looks rough or untidy; and I can not allow him to be vexed," pursing up her lips with a virtuous expression.

Alison controlled a quick retort with some difficulty. She had fully expected to find Missie a most aggravating little person, or why should Miss Leigh complain of her so bitterly? But the reality was worse than she anticipated.

"Never mind," she said, calmly; "we must not vex papa, must we, Poppie? I will help you change your frock, and perhaps after all we may have time to look at the fish ponds." And without another glance at Missie, Alison made Poppie cheerfully lead the way, as she did not know her room.

As Alison, after dressing Poppie, came down the staircase with the child still clinging to her, Mr. Merle suddenly made his appearance from the study. He almost started at the sight of his daughter, and an expression of pain crossed his handsome, careworn face. In the dim light Alison recalled her mother too plainly to his eyes.

"Oh, papa," she said, hurrying to him, and putting up her fair young face to his. He kissed her kindly, patted it, told her that she had grown into a woman since he had seen her, and questioned her with some interest about her journey.

The dining room, a large, handsomely furnished room, looked sufficiently cozy as they entered it. Missie was in the seat of honor; she gave a little simpering laugh as Alison entered with her father. "I suppose this will be your place to-morrow," she said, for, as Alison replied simply, "I suppose so, but I need not disturb you to-night," a vexed look crossed Missie's face, but as Rudel was already grinning in hopes of a row she prudently disappointed him.

When they rose from the table, Missie's first words were a peremptory order for Poppie to put away her toys and go to bed. This led to a feeble protest on Miss Leigh's part.

"It is not so very late, Mabel, and Poppie has not seen her sister for two years. I think she might wait a little longer."

"I am not going; there now!" observed the child, defiantly, quite oblivious of her father's presence.

"Go it, Pops. I'll back you," whispered Rudel, rubbing his hands; "she sha'n't touch you as long as I am here."

Mabel's eyes flashed. "You horrid, rude boy. Papa——" But here Alison gently interfered.

"You will go to bed now, dear, will you not?" she whispered in the child's ear, "and I will come and tuck you up, and wish you good-night." And thus propitiated, Poppie's sullenness vanished, and she trotted on at once.

Germs Everywhere.

At no instant in any man's life, waking or sleeping, is he free from assaults by swarming myriads of tiny, but powerful, unseen enemies of life—those soldiers of death's dark legions, the germs or microbes of disease. If it were possible to wear spectacles of the magnifying power of high-priced microscopes, we might see the very air we breathe thick with the monstrous shapes of untold billions of bacilli; and that in, or about, or upon the water we drink the food we eat, the hands we shake the car straps we hang to when going to work, the clothes we wear, the hair we comb, the lips we kiss, the cats and dogs we fondle, the books we read—in short, always and everywhere, the armies of death surround us, and incessantly make war upon us. And not only do they attack us from every possible exterior vantage point, but they carry by assault the citadel of life from within the lines of our own defenses. Germs thrive and multiply in the mouth, in the nose, and especially in the intestinal organs. Thus it can be said that not only do we live in the midst of death, but that death lives in our midst. The wonder is, not that we are ever ill, but that we are ever well.—Success Magazine.

Changed His Views.

He—I did when I was a boy—but not now.

Cancer of the stomach causes about 9,000 deaths a year in the United States and nearly 5,000 in England and Wales.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Miss Anna Kennedy, whose funeral was held last week in Shelbyville, was laid away in a shroud of sheer Paris muslin. It was made with her own hands, and took several months to complete. It was embroidered in pink, white and blue.

Because she was forced to change her home thirty-nine times in her married life, Mrs. Jennie E. V. Jarrett has asked for a divorce from James E. Jarrett of Fort Wayne. The couple were married in 1891. Mrs. Jarrett said the family had been ejected from sixteen houses for non-payment of rent and had moved out of others to avoid process.

It is nothing unusual for a corn shredder to jerk an arm off or badly lacerate a hand, but recently while Sam Hollon, who lives east of Petersburg, was shredding corn, the lines to a mule team became entangled in the feeder. The mules were pulled toward the shredder and were being lifted off the ground when the main belt slipped and allowed the mules to escape.

While walking on an electric railway track near Anderson, Albert B. Mead, aged 34, was killed by an interurban car. Mead was facing the car when it approached and he made no effort to escape. He had been ill and his friends say he probably meant to commit suicide. Two years ago he was the Democratic nominee for Surveyor of Madison County. He leaves a family.

While attempting to cross the street in front of a moving street car just as her elder sister had done a short time before, little Bonnie McCalop, the 2-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Irvin McCalop, of Newcastle, was struck by the car and her right arm crushed so badly that amputation was necessary. The action of the child was so sudden that Motorman Niles could not check his car and prevent the accident.

Samuel Sanders, colored, who lives in Orinoco, a suburb of Columbus, found a bundle of switches and a note on his doorstep one morning last week. On one side of a rough piece of paper was a warning for him to move out within ten days and on the other side was written "Citizens of Orinoco, look out; Night Riders." Mr. Sanders is a hard-working citizen, and his neighbors say they respect him highly. No attention will be paid to the threat.

While Mrs. Frank Hinton, 32 years old, accompanied by her 15-month-old daughter and Miss Mary Shaner, was driving down a steep hill near their home, two miles from St. Paul, the horse became frightened and as the buggy turned a sharp curve it upset, throwing out all the occupants. Mrs. Hinton's collar bone was broken and she probably will die; Miss Shaner suffered a broken arm, and bruises and cuts, and the baby was instantly killed.

James M. Smith, an epileptic, aged 41 years, and the son of William H. Smith, of Milroy, was drowned in a gravel pit pond, on the bank of Little Flatrock river, near his home. Smith left home to fish. His prolonged absence alarmed the family and the father began a search. He found the son's hat floating on the water of the pond. Help was summoned and the body found. The drowning is believed to have been accidental. Smith was unmarried.

While preparing a body for burial at the Marion Soldiers' Home recently, A. E. Stuart, a local undertaker, by mistake placed a pair of his own cuffs on the corpse. An hour or two later Stuart missed his cuffs and telephoned to the man who had assisted him at the Soldiers' Home morgue. The man replied that cuffs of that description had been placed on the corpse, which was then on its way to Star City for burial. The undertaker was chagrined at his mistake, for a valuable set of cuff buttons went with the cuffs.

When Willis Boyd died in Columbus some time ago, he was supposed to be a pauper, and David Stillinger, trustee of Columbus Township, issued an order for $26.25 to pay the funeral expenses. Boyd had been an inmate of the poorhouse for some time and all of his medicine and clothing, as well as food, came from the township trustee. After his death it was learned that he had money in a local building and loan association and that he also had a good-sized bank account. He owned a house and lot in Columbus.

Out-of-town distributors of samples and advertising matter will face a fine of from $10 to $50 when they come to Alexandria unless they comply with the terms of a newly-enacted city ordinance which fixes an almost prohibitive license for this class of work. The fees range from $5 a day to $250 a year, and it is considered likely that the house-to-house method of distributing advertising matter, especially from other cities, will be stopped. The ordinance does not apply to distributors who reside or have an office in Alexandria.

On account of the drouth, farmers of Dearborn, Ohio and Switzerland Counties have not sowed more than half the acreage of wheat planted last year. The season is now too late for sowing.

Miss Mary Wilson, of West Terre Haute, is suffering from a peculiar disease. She has been unable to move her jaws for several days. Most of her teeth have been extracted to allow her to take nourishment. The disease is something akin to tetanus.

Robbers operated in systematic fashion in Adams County last week. Four business houses at Decatur, five at Berne and three at Geneva, were broken into on one night, but the loot in each case was small.

Ralph Lane, aged 23 years, weighing just 59 pounds, who sells pencils and collar buttons at the postoffice entrance in Wabash, is the smallest voter in Wabash County. He weighs less than half what the usual small voter will weigh.

Joshua Parker, aged 95, who served as a pallbearer at the funeral of President William Henry Harrison, died at Rockport recently. He claimed to have spanked the late President Benjamin Harrison when the latter was a boy. He was a native of Hamilton County, Ohio.

The safe in the Shirley State Bank, which was burned recently, was expressed to Hamilton, Ohio, in order to have it forced open. It contained $3,500 in paper currency, silver and gold, and the depositors were clamoring for their money. The intense heat of the fire practically sealed the door.

Isaac Edwards was found dead in a cornfield on his farm near Noblesville. When he did not return to the house for supper members of his family went ot a cornfield where he had been at work and found him dead near his wagon. Heart toruble was the cause of his death. A widow and nine children survive.

The 1-year-old child of Harvey Wood of Bloomington pulled a lamp from the table, and sustained burns which may cause its death. The child was enveloped in flames, its neck, shoulders, chest and right thigh being badly burned. The father had gone to work and the mother was in another room when the accident happened.

The box factory of the Lapel Bottle Company was destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $3,000 with no insurance. The factory was of much importance to the town. The box plant stood some distance from the bottle factory, and rain prevented the flames from spreading to the main building. The owners are the Woodwards, William E. Hutton and Wirt Bates, all of Lapel.

The Equitable Building and Loan Association, of Elkhart, which was forced to suspend in 1904 because of the Indiana National Bank failure, will, next week, pay another 5 per cent. dividend. This will make total payments of 80 per cent. and another payment of 10 per cent. is in sight. The association was one of the early and prominent factors in making Elkhart a city of home-owning residents.

John B. W. Davison, a wealthy saloon keeper of Muncie, has been sued for divorce by Mrs. Elizabeth Davison, who asks $10,000 cash alimony, saying her husband is worth many times that sum. The wife charges neglect and other forms of cruel treatment, among these her husband's failures to take her to places of public entertainment. The couple, who are well known, have been married thirty-five years.

By order of Judge Greenlee, of the Madison Superior Court, the plant of the Elwood Heat and Light Company, of Elwood, has been sold by the receiver for $50,000, the only bid made on the plant. E. R. Ester, said to have been a representative of bondholders of the heat and light company, was the only bidder. The receivership was declared and sale ordered to satisfy a judgment of the American Trust and Savings Company, of Chicago, for $364,938.83.

A fire which started from a burning brush pile three miles southwest of Jasper was controlled with difficulty. The fire spread to the surrounding woods and cornfields, and it took hard work to prevent the fire from burning the house and the barn on S. H. Dillon's farm, where it started. An empty house on the adjoining farm, owned by John Kellems, was destroyed. School was dismissed and the pupils and several farmers checked the progress of the flames. Much timber and corn was destroyed.

John Howarth, of Columbus, is believed to be the oldest house painter in the State. He celebrated his eighty-second birthday anniversary recently and is as active as a man twenty-five years younger. His son, Prof. Ira W. Howarth, is a member of the faculty of Chicago University, and is away on leave of absence for a year to fill an appointment from the Governor of Illinois as secretary of the newly created educational commisison there. Professor Howarth decided to come over from Springfield and surprise his father on his birthday. When he arrived in Columbus he learned that the aged man was painting a house for John Clark at Nashville, Brown County. The painter was called home to attend the festivities arranged in honor of his birthday. He hurried through the day's program and went back to Brown County to finish painting the house.

Fifteen deaths have occurred at the National Soldiers' Home in Marion during October, the last one being that of Charles Bartholomew, of Company F, 155th Indiana Infantry. Grave No. 1449.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Strater, who removed from Kendallville to Lyford, Texas, some time ago, are the parents of a baby son, the first white child to be born in the new town of Lyford. They will give the babe the name of his birthplace.

Pulse of the Press

An Iowa woman insists that heaven is filled with pianos. It will be noted that the mechanical players are not included.—New York World.

When the wireless telephone comes into general use "Central" can put away forever that tiresome old chestnut, "The line is busy."—Boston Globe.

Pugilist Nelson got only $7,568 for whipping another man. However, there really are people who habitually do useful things and don't get so much in a year.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Somebody has started a new religion and reduced the Ten Commandments to seven. Before we pass judgment on his religion we want to see which of the ten the man cut out.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Birthday celebrations in honor of Tolstoi are discouraged by the Czar. The literary man in politics does not find anything like the encouragement in Russia that he enjoys in this country.—Washington (D. C.) Star.

A lady novelist writing a political story wants information as to how a political convention is conducted. Generally speaking the convention is opened with prayer and conducted with five aces and a razor.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

It has been said that there are no baldheaded men in the asylums for the insane. We suspect this is true; at least, save for rare and unimportant exceptions. This is an important thing for the anti-baldheads to speculate upon; it may well furnish them food for serious and earnest thought.—Washington (D. C.) Herald.

It has been for many years notorious that modern chemistry has been prostituted to the service of adulteration. May not an appeal be made to the more conscientious professors of one of the greatest modern sciences, and may they not be asked to bring their learning and their proficiency into the field for the assistance of honesty and fair dealing?—London Times.

It is unfortunate that there should be an election for State, county or municipal offices in any State the day, or even the year, of a Presidential election or congressional election. These offices have to do with the nation, and the public mind should contemplate the issues presented untrammeled by the bickerings, the jealousies and the factions of local politics.—Washington (D. C.) Post.

The influence of the temperance campaign in Great Britain has been greater than anyone could have imagined. The average consumption of beer in ten years has fallen from thirty-two to twenty-seven gallons per head, while the consumption of distilled liquors has decreased to less than one-half. While the population increased 4,000,000, consumption fell off 9,000,000 gallons.—The Independent.

One of the latest arrivals home from Europe reports that in all his numerous tours abroad he has never noted such a dearth of travelers from the United States. Many of the largest hotels in France, Switzerland and Italy have remained practically empty all summer. The testimony of travelers is somewhat conflicting on this subject, but the weight of the evidence indicates an off season for tourists abroad. We've been economizing.—Boston Herald.

It has just been learned that twenty-two members of the "Ilchinhoi," the pro-Japanese organization of Korea, were killed by Japanese gendarmes at Korea, Cholado, Korea, a few days ago. The affair has been kept quiet.

During the sessions of the British Church Congress at London Socialism was the leading topic of discussion and the trend of the talk was distinctly favorable. The archbishop of Melbourne told of the good effects of collectivist legislation in Australia and the Rev. Algernon West declared that since Socialism was bound to come it would be so much the worse for the church and the nation if Socialism came without the church.

Zia Bey, former head of the Turkish secret service, who was known as the butcher of Sultan Abdul Hamid, has succeeded in escaping the vengeance of the new regime, and is safe in London. He brags of the numbers of high officials who were executed by his orders. He says he wishes the new regime well, and regrets that his record forbids hope of forgiveness. Izzet Pasha, the fallen minister of the Sultan, is also safe in London, but most of the officials of the old regime are now in prison at Constantinople.

Marius Fransini, who was at one time minister of war for Portugal, made an unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide. Senor Fransini is a prominent progressive, and his attempt to kill himself has created much speculation in political circles.

Emanuel Lasker, of New York, retains his title as chess champion of the world. At Munich he won with surprising rapidity the sixteenth and last game of his contest against Dr. Tarrasch, of Nuremburg. Of the sixteen games played Tarrasch won three, and five games were drawn.

Emma Goldsman says "I am a follower of Satan", we are glad to hear it and if she catches him we predict he will find his equal.

A baloonist the other day, fell four thousand feet and was not hurt. Evidently baloonning is not so dangerous a sport as stepping on a banana peel.

The estate of the late John Alexander Dowie, alias Elijah the second, it is said, is about four millions less than nothing, as is the mushroom religon founded by him.

A woman who had not heard from her husband for a month walked a distance of one thousand miles carrying thirty five pounds of baggage, to find him. Our wager is two to one that he isn't worth it.

Mr. Roosevelt's annual proclamation advancing the price of turky 10 cents a pound will be issued about the middle of the month. He will urge us to give thanks that 55,000,000 cubic feet of earth were excavated at Panama in October.

The wife of the Republican candidate for representative in Columbus, Indiana, has declared that she is for his opponent and that she will use her influence to have him elected. This is certanly a striking example of a man losing his home district.

The War Department has ordered the Ladrone Islands in the Phillipine group to be known here after as the Marianne Islands. It is said the natives objected to the name Ladrone as it is Spanish for robber. It is probable that they are well satisfied to be known now as the Mary Ann's.

The election was held on the 3rd and the trusts held an all night prayer meeting on the 2nd. Mr. Bryan cast his vote for Mr. Taft at Lincoln. Mr. Taft returned the courtesy at Cincinnati. Mr. Rockefeller received the news at Cleveland. The quadreunial ass who wheels another quadreunial ass through town on a wheelbarrow started from the west end of town at 8:00 o'clock on the morning of the fourth, followed by 90 boys and the Foolkiller. The complete returns will be in by the 15th of the month. The annual show-down between city and country life will be complete by the 20th, when the farmer will have his cellar stocked with potatoes, turnips, kraut, honey, nuts, hams, sidemeat, souse, popcorn, pickles, pigs' feet, applebutter, lard, sweet potatoes and sorghum, and the city man will enter the winter with his cellar stocked with ten tons of hard coal and two gas meters.

There are some of us who escape lynching in this great country and this may account for the fact that so many of us are not aware that more murders and outrageous crimes are committed in this great country than in any other country in the world and also that capital punishment by linch law is more prevalent here than elsewhere at all. The boast that we are the freest, greatest and best governed country in the world incessant whenever Americans are gathered together Yesterday a lawyer was taken from his bed and hung in Tennessee. A few days ago there was a race riot at the foot of Lincoln's monument in Springfield, Illinois. Today a New York posse is scouring the woods for a man who if he is caught will be hung without trial. Lynch law is confined to no locality but may be invoked in any part of the United States and will continue as the only means to justice so long as the law's delay and the pusillanimity of jurats fail to punish crime.

Agonies Of Pain

Never give up, and think that all women, yourself included, have to suffer pain.

Thousands of women have written to tell how they have cured their womanly ills, and relieved their pains; and over a million have been benefited, in various other forms of female disease, during the past 50 years, by that popular and successful female remedy

WOMAN'S RELIEF

"I believe I would now have been dead," writes Mrs. Minnie Lambe, of Lebanon Junction, Ky., "if it hadn't been for Cardui. I had suffered with bad cramping spells, pains in my back, sides and arms, and awful bearing-down pains. Now these pains have all gone, as a result of using Cardui."

Push Your Town Along.

The town which grows and out stripes competition and in the long run makes its citizenship prosperous and happy is the one which runs plump over its moss back citizenship, says an exchange The town which grows has to build public roads where the party most to be benefited won't help it; it must build school houses and churches even though wealthy citizens refuse to suscribe; it must be liberal in providing entertainments; must go out and build up other people's property; the town which succeeds must be built up by the poor folks; the rich are usually contented with existing conditions. Don't become discouraged when your rich neighbor who is to be directly benefited refuses to take hold of and suscribe to a town improvement. Just go ahead and strain yourself beyond your means even, and you will to see the day when the town builders will be in the saddle. What becomes of the obstructors we don't know and need not care to know; sufficient that they get run over and ane lost to sight in the busy rush of a prosperous city where the men of energy and liberality knock down all juicy plums.

Log Cutting Began

The West Unity (O.) manufacturing Co. began cutting the timber recently purchased of Harry Kees, on Wednesday, October 21. James Smith and Marshall Andress are doing the cutting and Harry Kees is hauling the logs to the tracks ready for shipment. The timber is mostly ash, cottonwood, ulm, sycamore and some hickory. Mr. Kees has made a rough estimate as to the amount of ash timber in the woods which he thinks will reach 40,000 feet. Among the lot there is one ash tree of an unusual large size. In a 24 ft. cut there was 1,054 feet of lumber, the one log being valued at $50.00. The whole tree contained 2,115 feet of the best kind of lumber. Before the log cutters began their work it was necessary that the small timber be cleared away and in doing this 180 cords of wood was cut. Mr. Kees says that he will probably have 2,000 cords of the best kind of wood for sale this winter.

Our H. S. Organized.

Last Friday afternoon after their entertainment the High School organized electing; Herbert Sherer '09 president, Ethel Leighty '08 secretary and Adrin Wasler '10 treasurer. They also selected colors, choosing orange and black. The idea of organizing was to get the High School on a big bases, as they intend to hold a series of entertainments this winter for the purpose of decorating and improving the High School room which has always been so bare and poverty looking. The school board have their hands full so the students decided to go about it in this way. As the H. S. is very small this year they are figuring to quite an extent on the Alumni's aid. And since it is to the interest of every graduate or ex-student of the H. S. to have the old school improved as much as possible, we believe they are justified in their expectations. These entertainments should be highly encouraged by the people of St. Joe and vicinity as there is not only the financial benefit derived from them but they are very instructive to the pupils, a successful attempt gives them self confidence and it enables them to get up before an audience without a paralyzed or half swallowed tongue, a thing which most of us would give anything to be able to do. Prof. Ely should be highly commended for getting this interest aroused in the schools as it is something every other teacher has hesitated to do. And we as loyal citizens of this little city should unhesitatingly give him our faithful support. So, keep your eye on the H. S.

Sleep

Sleep is nature's rebuilding period, when the energy used by the brain, muscles and organs is renewed. If you lose sleep, your system is robbed of the strength sleep should give. Continued loss of sleep multiplies this loss until you become a physical wreck. Dr. Miles' Nervine quiets the irritated nerves and brings refreshing, invigorating sleep. Nervine contains no opiates, and therefor leaves no bad after-effects.

"For over two years I suffered untold agonies; my friends thought I was going crazy. I could not sleep nor rest at all. I tried different doctors, but failed to find relief. My head would ache all the time; I was like one drunk; could not concentrate my mind, and was so restless and worried that sleep was out of the question. After taking one bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine I felt wonderfully changed. I am now on my third bottle and am gaining all the time. I can lie down and sleep like a child, and am able to do my work."
MRS. MAY SCOTT, English, Ind.

Up Against It.

George W. Crouse and family left here the last of June with the intention of making a trip to New Mexico by wagon road, with a view of finding a more congenial climate and benefiting the health of the family. The distance to be traveled was a long one but with perserverence and courage the family reached southern Colorado where troubles began to gather. While traveling over mountains and through valleys they first became acquainted with one of Colorado's celebrated sand storms, when the family got lost, and facing this kind of a situation one horse died and the next morning the other was gone, whether wandered away or stolen they did not know. With money practically all gone, team gone and the family lost, the situation was not pleasant to contemplate. Leaving the family, Mr. Crouse set out to find some habitation and was soon rewarded by coming into a good sized town by the name of Alamosa. Here he secured a man with a team to haul them to a shanty about one and a half miles from the town where they are at present located. From here Mr. Crouse wrote to his father for money with which to either come home or complete the journey. The money was telegraphed him last Friday.-Hicksville News.

Mr. Crouse and family were residents of St. Joe for some time.

GENERAL ITEMS

Jacob Gants, a farmer living near Buttermilk Point on Lake Wawasee, accidentally shot and killed his wife on Tuesday morning of last week. Mr. Gants was called to by his wife, to get the gun and shoot a hawk. He had started with the gun and accidentally fell, discharging the gun, the load lodging in the back of his wife's head. Mr. Gants is in such a mental condition that no statement has been made by him.

Mrs. Mary A. Farmer had the misfortune to fall and break her right wrist. She attended the Aikens funeral at Newville and in leaving the church while shaking hands with her friends she slipped and fell with the results above stated. It was a hill side where the accident occurred. She was brought home at once and Dr. Sherman Cook was called and dressed the fracture. Mrs. Farmer is 82 years of age but is doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances.

Beginning at once many of the railroads of the United States will discontinue the placing of folders in hotels and other public places. Hereafter money that is spent in that direction will be partly used in newspaper advertising. The action comes as a means of saving the general passenger agent's association and it has been almost practically agreed to take off most of the traveling passenger agents Several of the large printing houses of Chicago, St. Louis and Buffalo, which have been making a specialty of railroad printing, will almost be forced out of business by the change, as they were largely dependent upon railroad folder work for their sustenance.

It is stated by an official weather man that the summer just ended has consisted of the temperature has exceeded that of any summer for the past thirty seven years. There have been hotter months in by gone years than July and August, but September of 1908 has carried the palm for heat. The average temperature for the month shows that the days have been about 7 percent warmer than those of any preceeding month since the establishment of the weather bureau.

The International Live Stock Show will be held in Chicago, November 28 to December 10, 1908. The success of this great annual show has awakened much interest both home and abroad, and a marked improvement in American flocks and herds has been the result. The object of this movement is to secure better animals for breeding, marketing and exporting, thus encouraging greater consumption of American animals and meats at home and abroad. The "International" has been a triumphant success from its very inception, and each of its series of exhibitions has been an improvement over all previous shows. No progressive farmer should miss this annual event.

POPULAR PULPIT

THE SOUL AND THE SOD.

By Henry F. Cope.

"But I keep my body under and bring it into subjection."—I. Cor. 9:27.

A man's religion is in whatever he esteems most worth while, whatever he sets on top in his life. One does not have to be told to make sacrifices to his God; he makes them to this or that because this or that is his god. The test of any religion is whether the things which it sets up as supreme are those which are rightfully superior to all others and whether their service calls forth the best in the worshiper.

You can find people who pour out the best adoration of their being before steak and onions. It needs little insight to indicate the type of existence to which such worship tends. There are those who lavish all their love on money. Theoretically, at least, we all know the sordid meanness, the dwarfing of soul that results from such a religion.

Yet he would be a fool who should say because meat and money are unworthy objects of worship, "I will have none of either." This was the mistake that many make to-day. They learn that many lose their souls through unworthy loves and they therefore say these things shall have no place in our lives.

Once the ideal religious person was a disembodied spirit. The nearer one could come to the grace, the more the glory of the Creator was established. Since suicide was forbidden, men showed their loathing of the flesh by hovering on the brink of its dissolution. They heaped anathemas on the body. They talked of their bodies as belonging to the devil while their spirits belonged to God.

The modern lopsided religionist talks about his vile body. Often he goes a step farther and affects to deride the intellect, a gratuitous exhibition of pure envy. If he is sincere he is sadly mistaken; the engineer might as well talk about saving the steam by destroying the engine. The one is but the instrument of the other. There can be no holiness with half a man.

No one doubts that the soul is supreme in man. It makes no difference by what name you know this inner life, we all know that it determines all the outer life. The difficult thing is to discover its relations to this so easily apprehended life of feeling. This body, with its passions and possibilities is not ours to mock us, nor for us to destroy. How may we find its right place in the full life?

Everything falls into its right place when we find that which takes rightly the first place in life. When man thinks of himself as the child of the divine, the first, the supreme thing is the life which is his as a spiritual being. This I, this consciousness, separating me from the beasts, sets me beside the throne of the infinite.

Here, within, is the true self; here the enduring life; here, within the walls of flesh, take place the real battles of life; thence issues conduct and here is shapen character. Here is a body and a form that goes on perfecting its fashion of glory or of grossness irrespective of the accidents that may happen to the physical body.

Here, where conscience speaks, where I feel the touch of the divine, where I can apprehend the infinite of whom I cannot reason or debate, here is the soul life, the seat of authority in the right life. Here dwells the I, the personality, bringing the body into obedience, training it to do its will, and compelling intellect to exert itself to carry out the plans of the soul.

Make the lower to serve the higher, the lesser the greater, and the passing the permanent. Set the soul on top. Order the life for its beauty. Perhaps you cannot conceive of this soul in set terms; nevertheless, you can live for its ideals, for the things you know to be best regardless of whether they have market quotations or not.

Cultivate your soul. Think of yourself as a being with unending and infinite life. Make the most of the body that it may the better serve this higher life. Set all the faculties in their places as its ministers. Then all life is seen in new light and much that was mysterious is plain, when seen as ministering to this life of the spirit. The sod becomes the servant of the soul and the true man comes to himself as the son of the great soul of all.

REAPING WHAT IS SOWN.

By Rev. George Clark Peck.

So they hanged Haman on the gallows he had prepared for Mordecai.—Esther vii. 10.

Thus in Shakespearean phrase was Haman "hoist with his own petard." Or, in the more expressive and familiar language of the street, he was "fried in his own fat."

It is a most striking instance of what we call "poetic justice." But it is vastly more than that. It illustrates a fundamental truth of the universe. It declares that a man usually gets out of this world what he puts into it. Haman, choking on the gallows which he had prepared for another man, pictures forth that subtle law by which the whole creation makes response to human life and human action. Ours is indeed a wonderful universe; not so much with respect to the grandeur of its sunsets and the splendor of its stars as for the perfect balance of its forces. Haman's fate was in no sense cruel; it was justly earned.

That law whose application brought him to the gibbet erected for another guarantees all the fruits and flowers which make life worth the living. Nature always answers. Every force works against some other force. Not a leaf moves but in some infinitely delicate measure the stars a billion miles away make response. Not a thistledown floats across a summer meadow but the whole universe is sensitively sympathetic with its errand. Wherever a human hand is lifted in violence or love all beneficent forces are instantly aroused to repel the violence and reward the love. This is the sort of world we live in. Action and reaction, as, Newton discovered, are forever equal.

We commonly find what we are looking for, whether trophies or trouble. "I never saw any such sunsets as you paint," said a friend to Turner. "Don't you wish you could?" was the reply. It is that finer aesthetic sense which makes and proclaims the artist. The instinct of beauty is what Wordsworth carries with him to his observation of the world. And the stanzas which immortalize his name are merely a part of the answer made by nature to Wordsworth's gift to himself.

So with respect to our relations to each other. A Persian proverb says that if we would be sweet we must lie among the flowers. Not only would we be known by the company we keep; we would fain be made by the company we keep. Yet the fact is that it takes more than a holy fellowship to sweeten a sour heart.

What we get from other people i chiefly their answer to what we carr to them. For a man to discover ev in the world about him is not so grea a discredit to the world as it is t himself. When I hear people sneer the integrity of men or the honor women, I am chiefly sorry that suc scoffers have given themselves away. it always night to a blind man.

The world is a mirror reflecting th features we hold up to it. We can a ford to be careless where we live proportion as we are careful what w are. So also in the domain of busi ness. Each man bears his own trade mark.

Merchant and professor walk with a different swing. The automobilist comes to wear the automobile face, yet it is cowardly for a man to blame his own deformities upon the spirit of the age in which he lives. The baneful effects of corrupt business upon a man are chiefly reactions of the man himself. The man who comes uptown spoiled is the man who went downtown ready for the spoiler. Trade will probably make us the sort of folks we are willing to be.

Nor can it be essentially different by and by. Who shall even guess all that immortality may mean? No description has ever furnished a hint of what we shall be. Just one characteristic of the future is clear. Heaven and hell will be the answers to what we are. Not even God can put heaven into an unheavenly heart, and not all demons can prevail to keep a heavenly spirit out of heaven. Still, as we sow, we reap.

SHORT METER SERMONS.

Character is crystalized conduct.

He who fears has his greatest foe within.

He is greatest who gives most of himself to men.

Coals of fire are not intended for roasting purposes.

Paying the price of purity is the best prayer for paradise.

Following your appetites is turning your back on your ambitions.

No man ascends to heaven on whom heaven has not descended.

The saddest thing about some is that they never are touched by the sorrows of others.

Lots of sour people would be tolerable if they did not prate so much about their honey.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't forget that kindness makes all kin.

Don't overlook the fact that character is made in conflict.

Don't expect to be the best friend of humility when you try to humiliate others.

Don't let your desire to get out of the fight be your only reason for praying for victory.

Don't fail to learn that he alone is faithful to old truth who will forsake it for the new.

Don't make the mistake of expecting a front seat in heaven by going there on a half-fare ticket.

Don't forget that the appeal to heroism within wins more men than the promise of heaven beyond.

Smiles of The Day

Not an Up-to-Date Church.

Two colored sisters living in a suburban town met on the street one day and Sister Washington, who had recently joined the church, was describing her experiences.

"'Deed, Mrs. Johnsing, I'se jined the Baptist church, but I couldn't do all the jining here, 'cause they had to take me to the city church to baptize me. You know there ain't no poolroom in the church here."—Success Magazine.

Whyness of the Which.

"But why are you going to be married to him if you don't love him?" queried the friendly friend.

"He says he understands women," explained the bride-elect, "and I've appointed myself a committee of one to convince him that he doesn't."

Theoretical.

Diggs—There goes my friend Wiggins in his automobile. What he doesn't know about governing a wife isn't worth knowing.

Biggs—Indeed! How long has he been married?

Farm Philosophy.

"It 'pears tew me," remarked the

Daughter—No.

Father—Send him a letter of thanks.

Strangers Now.

She—It was very kind of you to name your new yacht after me, Mr. Makinbrakes. What is she like?

He—Well, she's not much to look at, you know, but she's very fast.

Qualified.

Knox—Windig ought to make a successful fisherman.

Blox—Why do you think so?

Knox—He's a natural born liar.

The Limit.

Madam (to the cook)—But this is the limit—you can't cook, and then you complain because the table is poor!

"The Law."

Parents of Wayne, a suburb of Philadelphia, are required to report promptly any case of contagious disease, in compliance with the regulations of the local board of health.

"Dear Sir—This is to notify you that my boy Ephraim is down bad with the measles as required by the new law."—Harper's Weekly.

The Ones He Backed.

Unlucky Bettor—Can't tell you the names of the horses that won, but I can tell you the names of the horses that lost.

Delays Are Dangerous.

His years exceeded the allotted three score and ten, but he was a capitalist with more dollars than sense.

"Ah, my dear," he murmured to the fair girl by his side, "I could die for you!"

"Then let us hurry to the minister's at once," replied the practical maid. "I don't want you to give the undertaker a job until I have the right to inherit."

Contradicted.

Dinks—Can't he, though? Don't I get up at 7 o'clock six mornings every week against my will?

Good Start.

"What's your name, my boy?"

"Ah ain't got time to tell yo' all of it, but it starts out Alexander Rastus Nebuchadnezzar Absalom Marmaduke——"

Virtually Lost.

Tom (at the wedding)—The bride cried as if she had lost her best friend.

Jack—Well, hasn't she?

The Reason.

Tess—Why did you break your engagement with Tom?

Jess—We'd hardly been engaged a week when he started to take me to moving picture shows and buying soda water instead of taking me to the theater and to supper afterward.

Sure of It.

Wife—John, is that you?

John—Must be; I just left Smith next door.

The Reason.

Riggs—I understand that you encourage your son to practice on the cornet.

Griggs—Yes, sir. He's only been playing two months, but to-day I bought the house next door to me for one-half of its value.

The Young Doctor.

Grace—Dr. Violet is practicing now, isn't he?

Ethel (blushing)—Yes.

Grace—What are his hours?

Ethel—From 8 to 10:30 usually, but when pa's out he stays later.

Meaning the Steer.

A Popular Sign.

The Boss—Where is the "Back in ten minutes" sign?

The Boy—The man next door borrowed it, sir. He said he was going to the ball game.

Same Old Story.

Said She—I saw your automobile standing in front of the city hall yesterday, but I didn't see anything of you.

Said He—Oh, I was in my usual place—under the machine.

The Real Thing.

Blyson—Rhymer is quite a genius, isn't he?

Plunket—Yes, indeed. His wife now takes in washing to support him.

Contrary Sex.

Tom—I'd give anything if I could only convince Miss Peachly that I love her.

Jack—And why can't you convince her?

Tom—Because she knows I do.

Only Drawback.

Kinwood—How do you like your new suburban home?

Barquis—Fine. There's only one drawback to it.

Kinwood—What's that?"

Heroic Treatment.

Mrs. Key—I wish my husband would give up smoking.

Mrs. Ell—Why don't you break him of the habit, as I did mine?

Mrs. Kay—How did you manage it?

Mrs. Ell—Appointed myself as purchasing agent and bought all his cigars.

Information Wanted.

"Say, paw," queried small Tommy Peckem, "what is a king?"

"A king, my son," answered Peckem, Sr., "is a person whose authority is practically unlimited, whose word is law and whom everybody must obey."

"Paw," continued Tommy, "is mamma a king?"

Homeless.

"Have you no home, my boy?"

"No. We're house cleaning."

Value of Silence.

Little Willie—Say, pa, what is a politician?

Little Willie—What is a statesman?

Proof.

Jigson—So your grandfather lived to be 90 years old, eh. Did he retain possession of his faculties until the end?

Jagson—Can't say. His will hasn't been read as yet.

Mean Man.

Mrs. Stubb—Now, women are not impulsive, like you men. They always measure their words.

Mr. Stubb (with a sigh)—Oh, if some of them would only give short measure!

About the Size of It.

"No man can tell what he can do till he has tried," remarked the moralizer.

"Yes," rejoined the demoralizer, "and there are lots of men who can't tell even after they have tried."

Moscow will soon have a belt line railroad, nearly nine miles in length, tapping all the present lines that radiate from the city and serving a number of factories now distant from any line.

The Italian government is experimenting with small fish found in Barbadoes waters, which are said to feed on the larvae of small insects which spread malaria, in an effort to prevent the disease.

In trying to find a dustless road material experts of the Department of Agriculture are experimenting with combinations of blast furnace slag with asphalt or tar and of refuse molasses with sand, rock dust or earth.

To burn out weeds between rows of cane or other crops a Hawaiian planter mounted a gasoline tank on wheels and from it led a number of pipes terminating in burners, from which the cane was protected by sheet iron shields.

A little book, called "The Care for the Goat," has recently attracted some attention in England. The writer urges that great advantage would be found by small proprietors, laborers and rural residents in keeping goats, "the poor man's cow." Goat's milk, he says, often possesses twice the richness of cow's milk, is very valuable for children, and may be practically guaranteed as free from the bacillus of tuberculosis. Goats are cheap and cheaply kept, since they readily find food and they demand little room.

A curious result of the great California earthquake of 1906 was the permanent displacement of large areas covered by the triangulation of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, so that the lengths and directions of the lines joining the stations were sufficiently changed to diminish the value of the triangulation as a framework for future surveys. During the past year a new triangulation has been made over the disturbed area, and corrected positions have been determined for 61 of the old stations between Point Arena and the neighborhood of Monterey Bay.

A few years ago much interest was aroused in Berlin by "Kluge Hans," a horse that was able to perform many feats which seemed to show its possession of extraordinary intelligence. Among other things "Hans" would reply to questions by nods of the head, resolve arithmetical problems, apparently understand words by reading them, indicate the date, distinguish inharmonious chords in music, and so forth. Many learned men examined the horse, and were puzzled to explain the phenomenon, although none believed that it possessed quasi-human intelligence. A book has now been published about "Kluge Hans" by Oskar Pfungst, who was charged by a scientific commission to investigate the animal's performances. Since the horse could perform its feats in the absence of its master, Mr. Pfungst concludes that it must have taken its cues from unconscious movements of the heads and eyes of questioners. But even this implies that "Hans" was a very smart horse.

Czarina Is Shy.

The czarina of Russia is said by people who know her well to be very shy, and to usually sit with her eyes cast down. When she does look up on being addressed or wishing to speak to any one, she scarcely ever does so without a quick glance and flush of shrinking diffidence. You then cannot help thinking what a pity it is to so constantly hide such large and beautiful eyes as hers. Soft and brilliant blue gray they are, and fringed with long dark lashes. Exceptionally tall and slight, she is noted for the marvelous fineness of her proportions, and her face is beautiful in its Greek contour of feature, especially in profile, when one sees the continuous straight line of forehead and nose to perfection. Her expression has been described by a celebrated artist who had the honor of painting her portrait as one of "singularly sweet wistful sadness." Her hair, which is bronze-gold in shade is luxuriant and long, and in its striking beauty makes a fitting crown to the charming ensemble of face and figure.—Russian Dispatch.

Women and Men.

"Do you know the thing that strikes me as most remarkable here in Chicago," said the visitor from the old country, "is this: You see such tall, exquisite and beautiful women with such little puny, insignificant men. I was at the Auditorium the other day. Really, it was distressing. The women looked like fair, white ships of sail being towed along by tugboats."

Plausible Theory.

"The Italian girl graduate can't very well say, 'Beyond the Alps lies Italy.' Wonder what she does for a substitute?"

"Says, 'Beyond Ellis island lies America,' maybe."—Kansas City Times.

Must Have Been.

"Why do you think that the man who tried to hold you up was an amateur?"

"Because, when I grabbed him he hollered, 'Police! Help!'"—Houston Post.

A Unique Endowment.

If any man of wealth is in search of something besides libraries and colleges to endow, a humble suggestion is held in the article taken from a magazine published by the American Association for the Teaching of Speech to the Deaf. The object under consideration, the only endowed flagstaff in the world, is that belonging to the Royal Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, at Margate, England.

This staff was erected the first year of the reign of King Edward VII., in commemoration of his accession to the throne. The cost was defrayed by the pupils and friends. The collection taken was so large that it enabled the purchase of twenty flags.

Even after the staff and the flags were paid for, forty pounds remained in the treasury. This sum was invested for an endowment fund, and the interest is used every other year in painting and repairing the pole and tackle.

Some of the various flags bought are as follows: The Royal Standard, which is flown on the King's accession day, his birthday and his coronation day; the Stars and Stripes, run up on Roosevelt's birthday and election day; the German and French flags, used on the Kaiser's and President's birthdays; appropriate banners for St. David's, St. Patrick's and St. George's days; the Union Jack for the anniversaries of famous battles, and flags for the church high festivals.

PUZZLE SOLVED.

Coffee at Bottom of Trouble.

It takes some people a long time to find out that coffee is hurting them.

But when once the fact is clear, most people try to keep away from the thing which is followed by ever-increasing detriment to the heart, stomach and nerves.

"Until two years ago I was a heavy coffee drinker," writes an Ill. stockman, "and had been all my life. I am now 56 years old.

"About three years ago I began to have nervous spells and could not sleep nights, was bothered by indigestion, bloating, and gas on stomach affected my heart.

"I spent lots of money doctoring—one doctor told me I had chronic catarrh of the stomach; another that I had heart disease and was liable to die at any time. They all dieted me until I was nearly starved, but I seemed to get worse instead of better.

"Having heard of the good Postum had done for nervous people, I discarded coffee altogether and began to use Postum regularly. I soon got better and now, after nearly two years, I can truthfully say I am sound and well.

"I sleep well at night, do not have the nervous spells and am not bothered with indigestion or palpitation. I weigh 32 pounds more than when I began Postum, and am better every way than I ever was while drinking coffee. I can't say too much in praise of Postum, as I am sure it saved my life." "There's a Reason."

I AM A MOTHER

How many American women in lonely homes to-day long for this blessing to come into their lives, and to be able to utter these words, but because of some organic derangement this happiness is denied them.

Every woman interested in this subject should know that preparation for healthy maternity is accomplished by the use of

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Mrs. Maggie Gilmer, of West Union, S. C., writes to Mrs. Pinkham: "I was greatly run-down in health from a weakness peculiar to my sex, when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me. It not only restored me to perfect health, but to my delight I am a mother."

Mrs. Josephine Hall, of Bardstown, Ky., writes: "I was a very great sufferer from female troubles, and my physician failed to help me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound not only restored me to perfect health, but I am now a proud mother."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

NEW DISTRICTS AND NEW RAILWAYS.

To the Editor—Sir: Doubtless many of your readers will be pleased to have some word from the grain fields of Western Canada, where such a large number of Americans have made their home during the past few years. It is pleasing to be able to report that generally the wheat yield has been good; it will average about twenty bushels to the acre. There will be many cases where the yield will go thirty-five bushels to the acre, and others where fifty bushels to the acre has been recorded. The oat and barley crop has been splendid. The prices of all grains will bring to the farmers a magnificent return for their labors. An instance has been brought to my notice of a farmer in the Pincher Creek (Southern Alberta) district, where winter wheat is grown, who made a net profit of $19.55 an acre, or little less than the selling price of his land. Thirty, forty and fifty bushels yields are recorded there. The beauty about the lands in Western Canada is that they are so well adapted to grain-raising, while the luxuriant grasses that grow everywhere in abundance makes the best possible feed for fattening cattle or for those used for dairying purposes.

The new homestead regulations which went into force September, 1908, attracted thousands of new settlers. It is now possible to secure 160 acres in addition to the 160 acres as a free grant, by paying $3 an acre for it. Particulars as to how to do this and as to the railway rates can be secured from the Canadian Government agents.

"The development throughout Western Canada during the next ten years will probably exceed that of any other country in the world's history," is not the statement of an optimistic Canadian from the banks of the Saskatchewan, but of Mr. Leslie M. Shaw, of New York, ex-Secretary of the United States Treasury, under the late President McKinley and President Roosevelt, and considered one of the ablest financiers of the United States. "Our railway companies sold a good deal of their land at from three to five dollars an acre, and now the owners are selling the same land at from fifty to seventy-five dollars, and buying more up in Canada at from ten to fifteen."

The editor of the Monticello (Iowa) Express made a trip through Western Canada last August, and was greatly impressed. He says: "One cannot cross Western Canada to the mountains without being impressed with its immensity of territory and its future prospects. Where I expected to find frontier villages there were substantially built cities and towns with every modern convenience. It was formerly supposed that the climate was too severe for it to be thought of as an agricultural country, but its wheat-raising possibilities have been amply tested. We drew from Ontario many of our best farmers and most progressive citizens. Now the Americans are emigrating in greater numbers to Western Canada. Seventy-five per cent of the settlers in that good country located southeast of Moose Jaw and Regina are Americans. Canada is well pleased with them and is ready to welcome thousands more."

Night Doctor Only.

An uptown doctor has a new idea. He practices at night only. He found that so many night cases coming on the top of his office hours and visits wore him out, so he determined to save his energy for the night work, which paid best anyway. He says he finds patients prefer having a doctor who is fresh and wide awake instead of one who is tired out after a day's work.—New York Sun.

Declared Off.

Said He—Darling, we have been engaged for six months. Don't you think it is about time we were getting married?

Said She—Well, I'm willing to be married just as soon as you can provide me with a home.

Said He—That being the case, I suppose I am to consider the engagement broken.

FADS OF FAMOUS PEOPLE.

Roscoe Conkling was an excellent amateur boxer.

Danton was the most noted card player of his day.

William the Conqueror was immoderately devoted to dog-fighting and bear-baiting.

15 YEARS OF SUFFERING.

Burning, Painful Sores on Legs—Tortured Day and Night—Tried Many Remedies to No Avail—Cured by Cuticura.

"After an attack of rheumatism, running sores broke out on my husband's legs, from below the knees to the ankles. There are no words to tell all the discomforts and great suffering he had to endure night and day. He used every kind of remedy and three physicians treated him, one after the other, without any good results whatever. One day I ordered some Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Resolvent. He began to use them and in three weeks all the sores were dried up. The burning fire stopped, and the pains became bearable. After three months he was quite well. I can prove this testimonial at any time. Mrs. V. V. Albert, Upper Frenchville, Me., July 21, 1907."

KEPT GETTING WORSE.

Five Years of Awful Kidney Disease.

Nat Anderson, Greenwood, S. C., says: "Kidney trouble began about five years ago with dull backache, which got so severe in time that I could not get around. The kidney secretions became badly disordered and at times there was almost a complete stop of the flow. I was examined again and again and treated to no avail and kept getting worse. I have to praise Doan's Kidney Pills for my final relief and cure. Since using them I have gained in strength and flesh and have no sign of kidney trouble."

Would Not Pay Charges.

He was an impecunious nobleman with air castles in sunny France. After much deliberation he sent the following note to the pretty heiress:

And the heiress penned the following:

"Dear Count: Express yourself any way you wish except C. O. D., as you are not worth the charges."

A Cure for Hog Cholera.

When a hog shows any symptoms of this disease, he should be isolated at once and the pen fumigated in order to save the other hogs if possible.

Mix one part Sloan's Liniment with two parts milk in a bottle and give every sick hog a tablespoonful of this mixture night and morning for three days. Sloan's Liniment is a powerful antiseptic, kills the disease germs, soothes all inflammation and acts as a tonic to the animal.

A. J. McCarthy of Idaville, Ind., says: "My hogs had hog cholera three days before we got Sloan's Liniment, which was recommended to me by a neighbor who was using it with success. I have used it now for three days and my hogs are almost well. One hog died before I got the Liniment, but I have not lost any since."

Mr. G. W. Balsbaugh of Peru, Ind., writes: "I had four pigs that were coughing and were not doing well. I gave them some of Sloan's Liniment and they got better at once."

Uncle Ben Liked Her.

A Kansas City girl recently married a man who lives in one of the smaller near-by towns and went there with him to live. The bridegroom was naturally eager that his relatives should like his bride and as one, an old farmer, voiced no complimentary opinion in his hearing he at last asked:

"Uncle Ben, what do you think of my wife?"

One Fourth of July night in London the Empire Music hall advertised special attractions to American visitors. All over the auditorium the union jack and the stars and stripes infolded one another, and at the interludes were heard "Yankee Doodle" and "Hail, Columbia," while a quartet sang "Down Upon the Suwanee River."

Then came the turn of the human encyclopedia, who advanced to the front of the stage and announced himself ready to answer, sight unseen, all questions the audience might propound.

A volley of queries was fired at him, and the encyclopedia breathlessly told the distance of the earth from Mars, the number of bones in the human skeleton, of square miles in the British empire and other equally important facts.

There was a brief pause, in which an American stood up. "What great event took place July 4, 1776?" he propounded in a loud, glad voice.

The human encyclopedia glared at him. "Th' hincident you speak of, sir, was a hinfamous houtrage."—Everybody's Magazine.

Start in Life.

"Young man," said a rich and pompous old gentleman, "I was not always thus. I did not always ride in a motor car of my own. When I first started in life I had to walk."

"You were lucky," rejoined the young man. "When I first started I had to crawl. It took me a long time to learn to walk."—Democratic Telegram.

Answered.

"I want to know," said the caller, "if you can tell me whether or not hazing has been abolished in our institutions of learning."

"Has the millennium come yet?" snapped the information editor, turning again to his desk.

Many people do not understand what an inch means when a rainfall is computed in inches or fractions of inches. An acre is 6,272,640 square inches. An inch of water on an acre is therefore 6,272,640 square inches. That amount at 227 cubic inches to the gallon equals 22,000 gallons 220,000 pounds or 100 tons. An inch of rain in other words is rain falling at the rate of 100 tons to the acre. An average of about 225 inches of rain falls each month during the summer. There was a month or so, however, in this vicinity this summer that there was not 2 25 inches of rain fell.

Miss Edna Bryson of Tustison, Mich. is the guest of Edd Berry and family.

Saturday night being Hallow e'en, the boys certainly enjoyed themselves. Everybody on Monday morning were busy washing windows which were covered with soap. They took Mr. Baker's fence wire and made a pen, then took Kinsey's pig and had it placed comfortably in the pen when found the next morning. Boys will be boys. No particular damage was done.

Pioneer Dead

After suffering for many months from tuberculosis, Ephraim Wyatt, of Auburn, succumbed at the age of fifty-eight years. He was well known throughout the county, especially in Union township, and until a few months ago was employed at the Boyd factory of that place, always found to be a reliable and steady man at his post. The immediate relatives are the widow and several children who will miss the companionship of a husband and father. Funeral services conducted at 10 o'clock Tuesday at the late residence. Interment at the cemetery at Spencerville.

C. S. Sailer and family left Thursday evening for South Huston, Texas. His goods were stored in one of the rooms of his house here until they have fully decided what they wish to do. He intends to work there until they are settled. If the country does not suit his family they will probably return.

Culture Club.

Mrs Dr. Bowman was hostess to the Culture Club, last Wednesday evening. Mrs. J. D. Leighty was leader. The club sang America for the opening song. The lesson for the evening "The Reaper and the Flowers" was then read and discussed and many brilliantideas were expressed The principal thought derived was, that, as Longfellow sat one morning, with tearful eyes, writing this beautiful poem, he was filled with inspiration and his thoughts were of heaven, and heavenly things, teaching us in this lesson to "Set not our affections upon the things of the earth." A very interesting paper was read by the leader, on "The State Federation of Women's Clubs,,, Fifteen members responded to roll-call, the quotations being from Longfellow after which the meeting adjourned to meet in one week at the home of the president, Mrs. Mahlon Baker. The hostess then treated to fine apples.

Returns Home

Mrs. H. M. Widney and daughter returned from North-east Carry, Maine, last Wednesday. Mr. Widney remained for a couple of weeks hunt The party was afraid that the river was going to freeze up so the ladies left, as it was necessary that they travel about eighteen miles on this stream If they had stayed they would have been compelled to walk over-land a greater distance than this so they concluded that the women would all leave for home. Mrs. Widney is feeling quite well over the trip.

Services

Rev. J. L. Barclay, President of the Indiana Conference of the Methodist Protestant church, will pay his annual visit to the St. Joe charge Nov. 14 and 15, preaching at Concord, Sunday morning; Fairview, Sunday at 3:00 P. M., and at the Lutheran church at St. Joe, Sunday evening. The public is cordially invited to attend these services. J. C. McCAIN, Pastor.

The Christian Sunday School will observe "Boys and Girls Rally Day" sunday evening, Nov. 15th. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend this service.

A very pleasant meeting of the W. H. & F. M. S. of the Lutheran Church was held at the home of Mrs. Jennie Sechler last Saturday afternoon. It being the annual Thank Offering Meeting a special program had been arranged and a number of guests invited. Rev. Dressel was present and gave one of his usual pleasing talks. After the rendition of the program light refreshments were served. At a late hour the members and guests departed feeling that a profitable afternoon had been spent.

Mrs. F. H. Bishop

After an illness extending over a period of nearly a year, Mrs. F. H. Bishop passed away at Buffalo N. Y., where she had gone for medical treatment. A diagnose of her case by the physician disclosed a cancerous tumor and that a surgical operation was the only means to her aid. She bore the operation heroicly, but in her wasted condition the spark of vitality was at too low an ebb and the spark of life gradually grew fainter and three days after the end came. Mr. Bishop who was with her brought his loved one to St. Joe to the home of his parents Mr. and Mrs. M. T. Bishop. The funeral was held Monday afternoon from the Lutheran Church, conducted by the pastor Rev. F. A. Dressel assisted by Rev. J. C. McCain of the M. P. Church. The remains were laid away in Riverside Cemetery.

OBITUARY

Martha L. Tustison was born near St. Joe, Indiana, October 21 1877, departed this life Novembe, 6 1908, aged 31 years and 16 days. In 1889 under the pastorate of Rev. J. S. Nelson, she gave her young heart to Jesus and united with the Lutheran Church to which she held allegiance until death transferred her to the church triumphant. In Octeber 1901 she was united in marriage with Franklin H. Bishop. Their seven short years of married life were happy ones, marred only by the ravage of a hidden disease. Every care, every effort were put forth so generously to bring back the health so valiantly fought for, but the frail body was too weak to assist the courage of the brave little woman and her spirit took its flight to its eternal home, to be united with mother and sister who had gone before. Husband, father, brother, a host of relatives and friends, are left to mourn their loss.

CARD OF THANKS

We sincerely thank all friends who assisted in the burial of our loved one.

Fears Poisoning.

Through his attorney, Charles Emanuel, of Auburn, Gerry Wasson, of Concord township, Friday filed a divorce case asking that he be freed from the defendant, Frances Wasson. Among the allegations accompanying the document. It is claimed that for some time, in fact ever since the marriage of this couple, the defendant has been guilty of cruel treatment of the plaintiff, having resorted time after time in calling the plaintiff vile names and using most shameless profanity in her addresses to him. Furthermore the husband claims that on one occasion his wife threatened to kill herself and her husband by poisoning, and that ever since it has caused more or less uneasiness whenever in her company. Also, it is alleged that the wife refused at first to commence housekeeping, thus preventing the plaintiff from having a home of his own, and finally on the 28th of January last she left this county and went to Michigan, where she has remained ever since.

The plaintiff is a resident of the township mentioned and is a horseman of considerable ability.

Swallows Pins

While sewing one day last week, Mrs. Roseberry Wiers accidently swallowed three pins, which she was holding in her mouth, as women are accustomed to doing. Two of the pins were coughed up immediately but the third one had caught and she was unable to remove it. Drs. Lake and Bowman were called but their efforts were in vain. On Friday she went to Auburn and four physicians tried to remove the pin but failed. Then on Saturday evening she to Ft. Wayne to a specialist but with no good results, the pin going down her throat. She is distressed at times caused from the pin.

Election Notes

Everybody is glad it is all over.

Some fellows already have their eyes on 1912.

St. Joe was alive to the situation and stayed up late to get the returns.

There were not many stay-at-home voters this year. Not more than a half dozen can be found in this territory.

Incubators For Sale.

Them practically new Banta incubators, 240 egg size, for sale at a remarkably low price. You know their record of last year, three settings with an average of 75 per cent for the three times used—and they are in perfect condition—complete with thermometer, luster and extra trays. If you are interested let me know or call at my mother's house, first door east of White's hotel and see the machines for yourself. Don't forget the price will be made right if you want a first class hatcher, investigate this.

C. A. Woodcox.

Edward Tiffany, wife and son, of Plinkstaff, Ill., returned to their home last Friday evening. Mr. Tiffany was formerly a resident of this county, living about three miles east of town. It had been twenty-five years since his being here and he made the statement that he was lost, so much improvements being made all over the country and especialy in St. Joe. He has been traveling considerable through the south and he states that in all of it he has not found a town that is equal to our little city. This is the truth, and seems to be the opinion of strangers, and we are proud that this can be said of us.

To the Trade!

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Three People Run Down on Bridge.

While crossing the Nickel Plate railway bridge over the St. Mary's river in Fort Wayne, Ind., three persons were run down by a switch engine with the result that one is dead, another probably fatally injured and the third seriously though not fatally injured. The victims were: William Ault, 715 St. Mary's avenue, injured about the head and body; died while on a stretcher en route to the hospital. Mrs. William Ault, wife of the dead man, right thigh broken and internal injuries about the abdomen and back; will recover. Mrs. William Dowden, of 830 St. Mary's avenue, fracture of the right thigh bone; fracture of the right collar bone; fracture of the right jawbone; fracture of the skull, back of the right ear, and internal injuries; is in a critical condition. Mr. Dowden, husband of the injured lady, was walking in advance of the others and was able to get out of the way of the car.

Burglars Blow Safe.

Burglars dynamited the postoffice at Lowell, twenty miles south of Hammond, Ind., and got away with stamps and money amounting to $800. Postmaster H. M. Nichols summoned H. A Farley, of Crownpoint, to come with his bloodhounds, and they were put on the trail. The robbers effected an entrance through a rear window and performed their safe-cracking successfully as the robbery was not discovered until 7 o'clock in the morning. W. M Sheets, an undertaker, who lives above the postoffice, heard a muffled explosion, but thought it was thunder.

Pair of Daring Hold-Ups.

Two hold-ups of exceptional daring were committed in San Francisco, Cal. In the shadow of the Fairmount Hotel, W. L. Edwards, a mining man of Los Angeles, was stopped at the point of a revolver held by one of two men who forced him to give up his money and jewelry, amounting to $500. Later a lone masked bandit entered a Battery street saloon, where eight men were standing at the bar. Lining all the inmates against the wall, the robber looted the cash register of its contents, about $65 and escaped in the darkness.

Mother and Son Found Dead.

Mrs. F. Voit and her son, J. Nelson Voit, a Wall street broker, were found dead in their rooms in a large apartment hotel on Upper Broadway, New York City. The mother had been shot in the head and her body was in her bedroom, while the son was lying suffocated by gas on the floor of the bath room, with a pillow under his head. The door to the bathroom was locked, which was held as evidence of probable suicide on his part following the death of his mother, possibly at his hands.

Voted at Seventeen National Elections.

James H. Foxworthy, the oldest man in Rushville, Ind., has voted for President for the seventeenth time in his life. Mr. Foxworthy's first vote was cast for William H. Harrison in 1840 at the age of 18. He was then a resident of Kentucky, and the State law permitted any member of the State militia to vote at that age. In nearly every instance his choice has been successful. He voted for Taft.

Court Limits Mule's Load.

There is a limit to the weight a Georgia mule should be made to haul, and this limit was fixed by Judge Broyles in Atlanta Police Court, at 2,500 pounds. Judge Broyles fined G. B. Walker $5.75 because Walker's mule was caught by an enterprising policeman in the act of hauling a load of 4,032 pounds.

Julia Carney Dead.

Mrs. Julia Carney, author of "Little Drops of Water" and various popular poems and hymns, died at Galesburg, Ill., after a long illness. She was born in Lancaster, Mass., on April 6, 1833.

"Nick" is Re-Elected.

Nicholas Longworth, Republican, son-in-law of the President, has been re-elected to Congress from the Second Ohio District.

Well-Known Man Dies.

Henry F. Griswold, once a leading business man of Chicago, and founder and ex-commodore of the Chicago Yacht Club, died in San Diego, Cal. He had been ill only a few days. He was 72 years of age. He had been a resident of San Diego since 1893.

Former Cuban President Dead.

Taft's Majority Over Bryan...139

SENATE.

Republican 60
Democrat 32

HOUSE.

Republican 220

Majority on Party Division Is 49.

William Howard Taft has been elected President of the United States, and James S. Sherman Vice President, according to the early returns, by a vote or 311 to 172 in the electoral college, thus giving a majority over Bryan and Kern of 39. Taft has sixty-nine more than the number required to elect, but falls short of Roosevelt's total of 336 four years ago. Taft has a plurality of the popular vote in the entire country of about 1,000,000, against Roosevelt's 2,545,000 in 1904. The next House of Representatives is Republican, and the Republican party will remain in control of all branches of the government after March 4 next.

Of the States called doubtful or debatable in the campaign, Taft carried nearly all. His majority in New York State may reach 188,000, he carried Ohio by about 75,000, and Illinois by 175,000. Indiana was extremely close, the majority for the head of the ticket ranging from 5,000 to 15,000, according to the returns at 3 o'clock Wednesday morning. The returns indicate that the far western mountain States of Colorado and Montana have given Bryan their electoral votes, but Taft has carried Idaho.

Bryan made a much better race for the presidency than he did in either of his other campaigns, gaining both in electoral and popular votes, but has made no serious inroads upon the Republican hold on the presidential office He has done better in the West than in the East. In the West he has won his own State and other States which were for Roosevelt, but in the East he has made no headway, and the majorities against him there are almost as large as they were in 1900. Where he did gain was in States where there were Republican factional fights or a temperance struggle over the State ticket involving the electoral ticket as well.

Hughes Carries New York.

Some of the State fights were in doubt on the face of the early returns. Hughes carried New York by a majority less than half as great as that of the presidential candidate.

The returns from Ohio and Indiana came in with provoking slowness, but the early figures indicated that Taft had carried Ohio by anything from 10,000 upward. Whether or not Governor Harris or Judson Harmon had carried Ohio for Governor could not be determined till the full returns were in. Early indications were that the Democrats won the governorship, as the cities were against Harris on the temperance issue.

Indiana returns were also indefinite, but it was believed Taft had carried the State by a small plurality, the majorities ranging from 5,000 to 15,000. The Republican losses are somewhat heavy in the cities, due in part to the labor vote, and the early returns from the country districts were meager. There appeared to be no doubt that Marshall, Democrat, had been elected Governor of Indiana, and the indications were that the Democrats had won control of the Legislature.

While Taft carried Michigan by a majority estimated at about 100,000, at midnight Tuesday the election for Governor was in doubt, with Hemans (Dem.) leading Governor Warner (Rep.) by 7,000 to 10,000. Many country districts in which Warner expected a heavy vote had not reported. There were no indications of pronounced Democratic gains in the Legislature.

Wisconsin has given Taft its normal Republican majority of 100,000. This is a falling off from the 150,000 of 1904, but is the usual Republican plurality. Governor J. O. Davidson, Republican, has been re-elected, but his vote is behind that of the head of the ticket, owing chiefly to the fact that he was not indorsed by Senator La Follette. Eight Republican Congressmen have been elected, two are in doubt, and one Democrat is elected. The Legislature is Republican.

In Minnesota, where there was a bitter fight for Governor, Johnson appeared to have won by a small majority, although Bryan was beaten in the State by considerably over 60,000 votes This fact is thought to put Johnson in the forefront of the Democratic candidates for the nomination four years from now.

Missouri went for Bryan, and Hadley the Republican candidate for Governor, could not overcome the normal Democratic majority. The indications were that Senator Stone had succeeded in the primary election, thus defeating the ambition of Governor Folk to become United States Senator.

Cummins Wins in Iowa.

Iowa has gone for Taft, but by a majority much reduced from that given to Roosevelt four years ago. The early returns indicated that Governor Cummins had received a majority of the Republican vote, and will therefore be indicated as the choice of the Legislature United States Senator to succeed the late William B. Allison.

In Illinois incomplete returns indicated that Taft's plurality in the State will be more than 185,000, and that Governor Deneen has returned to the Statehouse for a second term by a margin of between 35,000 and 45,000. In Chicago a terrific slashing of the ticket on the part of the "irreconcilable" element in the Republican party, which lined up with the Stevenson managers on a vote-trading proposition, made Deneen run behind the head of his ticket. Stevenson captured the city by a margin of 6,721 votes. The majority against Deneen in Cook County, however, was made up in the country districts in the State.

New York City affords one of the greatest surprises of the election. Instead of giving Bryan the 100,000 so confidently claimed by Democratic managers, Taft actually carried the metropolis. This is the second time a Republican candidate for President has carried New York City, McKinley having a plurality of 61,000 in 1896. Four years later Bryan carried the city by 36,000, and in 1904 Parker carried it by 38,000. Two years ago Chanler carried it for Lieutenant Governor by 139,000, and this year the Democratic leaders felt sure of from 90,000 to 110,000 for Bryan. Even the Republicans conceded the city to Bryan by 65,000.

Hearst's Independence party did not change the result in New York State, but it did contribute materially to keeping down the Bryan vote. Hisgen polled upward of 30,000 votes in New York City, most of which would likely have gone to Bryan. The Hearst candidate for Governor of New York, Shearn, did not get enough votes to have saved Chanler if all had been cast for him.

The much-talked-of Bryan landslide in the West did not materialize. Taft's pluralities in Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, Michigan and other States of this region are much reduced from the Roosevelt figures of 1904, but are still comfortably large. Nebraska alone seems a sort of Democratic island in the Western Republican sea, Bryan's plurality in his home State being estimated at 8,000.

There are no breaks in the Solid South, Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina and other States in which some thought Taft had a chance, returning about the normal Democratic pluralities.

The New Congress.

The Republicans have a majority in the House of Representatives, and all the prominent members of the House who were candidates for re-election were returned. Joseph G. Cannon was elected in his Illinois district, and he will undoubtedly be chosen Speaker in the organization of the new House.

The Senate will show a slight falling off on the Republicans, there being indicated a Republican membership of 59, with 33 Democrats, which means a Republican majority in the upper house of Congress of 26.

Twenty-nine States will cast their electoral votes for Taft, leaving but seventeen State votes for Bryan. At the same time the Republicans have increased their supremacy in the national House of Representatives, while in the United States Senate they have retained their present majority. Speaker Cannon and Representatives Payne of New York and Dalzell of Pennsylvania have all been re-elected, so that the lower House will continue under its former regime.

While in the end the results bore out the predictions which had been made by the Republican managers, there were a host of surprises. In New York the most hopeful expectations of the Republican campaign managers were surpassed. In Massachusetts the Democrats were defeated by a plurality of 120,000, while in New Jersey they had a margin of 85,000, a gain of more than 5,000 in excess of the vote for President Roosevelt four years ago.

But after this has been said the returns reveal a merciless slaughter of the vote piled up by Roosevelt and Fairbanks in the last campaign. Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois, Kansas, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Ohio, and Indiana each contributed its share to the onslaught on the Republican total of four years ago, so that while the party has succeeded in giving its candidate a comfortable majority in the electoral college, the popular vote has been whittled down in amazing proportions.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The weekly review of Chicago trade published by R. G. Dun & Co. says:

Successful bond flotations this week, particularly a city loan at a premium, and a lower average discount on commercial paper testify to further monetary ease. Trading defaults furnish a disappointing feature, but pre-election interest interferes but slightly with business activities, and trade conditions gather strength.

More seasonable weather gives the necessary stimulus to an adequate distribution of necessaries, and there is larger buying in the leading retail lines here and at interior points. Food products, apparel and footwear move freely, while recovery appears in furniture, carpets, jewelry and art wares.

Buyers attend the wholesale merchandise districts in numbers comparing favorably with this time last year, mail orders come forward steadily from the western territory and dealings advance in spring goods.

A sharp gain is seen in demand for Christmas novelties, this business having an encouraging outlook in contrast with a year ago. Dry goods departments report more acute scarcity of some materials now urgently called for to replenish stocks, and much of the buying reflects a disposition to cover further needs for the winter.

Shipments reach a good aggregate in woolens, linens, knit goods, men's and boys' and horse furnishings, while cotton flannels and wet goods and shoes are moving better than at this time last year, when these latter lines were restricted.

Reports from the agricultural sections continue to be reassuring, the future trade, corn husking, wheat seeding all showing good growth. Cattle shippings thus far have been [illegible] heavy at prices averaging [illegible].

Country bank deposits [illegible] all previous records, and [illegible] withdrawn from this center, indicating increased purchasing power, which must soon influence manufacturing. Mercantile collections show slowness on fresh bills, but country settlements [illegible] ran prompt.

Bank clearings, $23,036,515, are 2.8 per cent under those of corresponding week in 1907 and compare with $218,611,650 in 1906.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 48, against 18 last week, 27 a year ago and 22 in 1906. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 13, against 5 last week, 8 a year ago and 5 in 1906.

NEW YORK.

Unsettled weather and pre-election quiet are in evidence this week, as affecting trade at a great many cities. Except at Chicago and New York, where some good business has been done in wholesale lines for spring, first and second hand distribution has been confined to filling-in and immediate shipment proportions.

Current distribution as a whole is still reported below last year at the corresponding date, except at a few points in the Northwest. Perhaps the most active line at wholesale is that of cotton goods for spring.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Oct. 29 number 239, against 231 last week, 223 in the like week of 1907, 163 in 1906, 160 in 1905 and 200 in 1904. Business failures in Canada for the week number 32, against 31 last week and 23 in this week last year.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

CHAPTER V.—(Continued.)

"Papa, dear, you will not go into the study to-night," observed Mabel, in a coaxing tone, as Mr. Merle looked at the door, as though he intended to follow Poppie's example; "please come with us into the drawing room, and I will make you so comfortable."

"Very well," was his good-humored answer, as he got up a little wearily from his chair.

Alison waited a moment before she followed them.

"Are you not coming, too?" she asked, as Roger threw himself down on an easy chair.

Roger shook his head smilingly.

"Rudel has got to do his lessons. Missie never admits him into the drawing room of an evening. She says it is not the room for boys. I generally keep Rudel company or go out and amuse myself."

"But not to-night, dear," she returned, gently, and he got up at once.

Rudel looked up rather wistfully.

"I have almost a mind to come, too," he muttered, but as Roger said, hastily, "Better not, Rue, we don't want any rows to-night, Alison is tired," he remained.

Miss Leigh sat bolt upright by the big round table, with her work-basket and a pile of the boys' socks. Mr. Merle had a little table and a reading lamp to himself, and Missie sat on a stool at his feet with a novel on her lap. Alison guessed at once that this was their ordinary position.

"Oh, is that you, Roger? You don't often honor us with your company of an evening," observed Missie, with a toss of her pretty head. "This is a compliment to you, Alison, I suppose?"

"We ought to put our books away to-night," said Mr. Merle, rousing himself reluctantly, and making Alison feel as if he were treating her like a visitor. "Mabel, my dear, suppose you give us one of your little songs?"

"No, indeed, papa," returned Alison, eagerly, "I hope you will go on just the same as though I were not here. Of course I should like to hear Mabel sing, but not if it disturbs you."

"Oh, I always sing to papa of an evening," replied Missie, walking to the piano with much dignity. "Roger, I think you might offer to light those candles for me, but you boys have no idea of waiting upon ladies. You will find them dreadfully rough, Alison."

"On the contrary, I am rather fond of waiting upon ladies," was Roger's nonchalant answer, laying a peculiar stress on the last word that brought an angry flush to Missie's face. "I always wait on you, do I not, Miss Leigh?"

"Yes, indeed, Mr. Roger, I always say you are so kind and thoughtful."

Missie struck a chord sharply. "If you will be good enough to leave off talking I will commence my song," she said, crossly, and as Roger made a low bow and retired she began the prelude of a German song.

Alison listened with much pleasure. Among her other natural gifts, Missie certainly possessed a very good voice, and it had been evidently well trained. Her notes were clear and sweet, and if she could only have got rid of a certain affectation in her style, Alison could have praised her still more warmly.

As it was, her admiration was so sincere that Missie began to thaw for the first time. "I suppose you sing?" she said, a little bluntly.

"Not much. I certainly can not compare my voice to yours," was the modest reply, "but I am fond of instrumental music, and play a good deal.'

"Then you will be able to play my accompaniments," returned Mabel, brightening still more. "Will you take my place, Alison? Papa will like to hear you, I am sure."

"Not to-night,' returned Alison, feeling as though she were not capable of any further effort. "I am rather tired, and if papa would excuse me I think I should like to go to bed."

"By all means, my love," observed Mr. Merle, looking up from his book. "Pussie, dear, I hope everything is comfortable for your sister. Never mind singing to me to-night, if there is anything you can do to help Alison."

"I will come with you and see," returned Missie, a little ungraciously, and though Alison would rather have dispensed with her company, she thought it better policy to accept this faint offer of help. On the landing Missie stopped, and said, rather awkkardly, "I hope you don't mind about the change of rooms, Alison, but as you do not live at home, I thought I could please myself."

"I suppose I have come home to live now," returned her sister, wearily; "but if you do not want to give it up, Mabel, I will try to be content with my present one; I only want things to be comfortable, and to do my best for you all."

"Oh, as to that, we have got along very well," returned Mabel, hastily; "you need not put yourself out on our account. As papa says, I am grown up now—nearly seventeen—and able to take care of myself and other people, too. I hope you are not going in to see Poppie; I think it is a pity waking up the child, and she is so excitable."

"I shall not wake her, but I promised to go and see her," returned Alison, with gentle firmness, as she bade Missie goodnight. Missie need not have troubled herself about her little sister's wakefulness. Poppie was sitting bolt upright in the darkness, waiting for Alison.

"Now for a good cuddle and a talk," she said, stretching out her arms to Alison; "you are a nice old thing to keep your promise." And as Alison sat down on the little bed she forgot her weariness, as Poppie laid her warm cheek against hers, and called her dear, nice Allie.

CHAPTER VI.

Alison was too tired to lie awake a moment after her head touched the pillow, and she woke so late the next morning that breakfast was already over, and Miss Leigh sent up a message by Poppie, begging her to lie still and rest herself, as her father and Roger had already gone to the mill, and she would send her up some breakfast.

"Aunt Diana would call this a bad beginning," thought Alison, Nevertheless, as her head still ached, she yielded to the temptation. The sun was shining into her room, making her feel hot and restless, and she begged Poppie to lower the blind, so that the huge crane might not fret her eyes by its hideous unsightliness. If she could only have shut out, too, its incessant whir and grind! But that was impossible. As she drank her tea she looked round the shabby room with a strange sinking of heart and spirits. "I must wake up every morning to this," she thought, "unless I make an enemy of Missie from the beginning by forcing her to resign my room. Will it not be better to endure any amount of discomfort than to do that? I will ask Aunt Diana what I shall do about it. No, no," recalling herself, "I must act now on my own responsibility. Aunt Diana will think me a poor, helpless sort of a thing if I always want her as a moral crutch to support me."

And with this wise resolution, Alison dressed herself quickly and finished her unpacking, after which she ensconced herself in the deserted dining room and wrote her first letter to Moss-side.

A sweet, brave little letter it was. Alison touched very little on her own feelings; she did not even speak of her changed room. Somehow, she had a notion that it would vex Aunt Diana. She talked of Roger's warm welcome and Miss Leigh's kindness, and tried to make Aunt Di interested in Rudel's and Poppie's droll ways. Missie she barely mentioned, except to say how pretty she had grown and how nicely she sung, and then went on to speak of her father's changed looks. A great many loving messages, a few longing expressions for Aunt Di herself, completed the letter.

The early luncheon hour brought all the family together, but Alison's sense of orderliness and propriety was shocked by Rudel's rough appearance. He came in straight from school with unbrushed hair and unwashed hands, and sat down at the table, until Missie's loudly uttered injunctions, and at last his father's curt command to make himself presentable before he ate his dinner, obliged him to leave the room grumbling; and his return a few minutes later led to a most undignified scene of recrimination between him and Missie, carried on below their breaths with the utmost bitterness, with Poppie listening with both her ears, in spite of Miss Leigh's gentle reminders to go on with her dinner.

But this was not the only source of discomfort to Alison; her father was evidently in one of his gloomiest humors; something had evidently gone wrong at the mills, and, as usual, Roger was bearing the brunt of the annoyance. Alison's heart was full of pity as she heard the angry words that were launched at his unlucky head; in her own mind she was secretly marveling at Roger's patience.

Alison—who was on the verge of tears with suppressed pity, and longing to speak a word in his defense—was moved almost to anger by the unconcern on Missie's face. Evidently she was too used to hear Roger found fault with on every occasion to take any notice of it. She had finished her contest with Rudel, and now sat with her usual self-satisfied look, playing with her rings and humming a little French air to herself.

"Papa, dear," she said, at last, placidly, "do let those stupid sawmills alone; you are only exciting yourself and making yourself ill. Come out into the garden with me and Poppie; it is so cool and shady there." And as Mr. Merle did not at once answer this appeal, she came round to him and touched his arm. "Come, papa," she repeated still more placidly; "you have scolded Roger enough, and it only puts you out. Come with me; I want you." And actually Mr. Merle suffered himself to be coaxed out of the room; and in another minute Alison saw them sitting together under the lime trees, with Poppie playing on the lawn.

Alison turned round to seek Roger, but he had left the room, and Rudel had followed him; only Miss Leigh was locking up the cellarette, and jingling her key basket.

"What does this mean?" faltered Alison. "Why does papa speak to Roger in this way? It is not right, is it?"

"Come with me into the school room," was Miss Leigh's sensible answer to this; "as Sarah will be in directly to clear the luncheon, and we can not talk before her. I must speak to you, Alison; I must indeed." And leading the way to the old room Alison remembered so well, she closed the door in her quick, nervous fashion, and begged Alison to take the only easy chair that the room boasted. "No, indeed," returned Alison, quickly; "Poppie's little stool will do for me. What does it matter where I sit, or whether one is comfortable or not?" she continued, impatiently, as Miss Leigh stood hesitating. "Please rest yourself in that big chair, for you look quite fagged and tired, and I have had a nice rest."

"I think I am nearly always tired," returned Miss Leigh, plaintively. "Is it not dreadful, Alison—about poor Mr. Roger, I mean? If it were not for my poor blind mother, whom I pretty nearly support out of my savings, I do not think I could endure this much longer. My dear," with the tears starting to her gentle eyes, "when one gets to my age one values peace and kind words above everything, and that is just what one can not get at The Holms."

"Do you mean that this sort of thing goes on daily?" exclaimed Alison, turning her flushed face to the governess. "Do you mean," bringing out her words with difficulty, "that papa often gives Roger all this to bear?"

"Well, my dear, one must not exaggerate. Things are not always going wrong at the mills, of course; and sometimes we can eat our meals in peace; but your poor dear father—one hardly likes to blame him to his own child—is very often hard on Mr. Roger. It seems to me as though nothing Mr. Roger can do pleases your father, and as, if Mabel can do no wrong in his eyes. You can see for yourself, Alison, the influence she has over him."

"Yes, I see; but I can not understand it. When I was last at home Missie was only a child, and yet, though she is not seventeen, and ought to be in the school room and under your care, she seems completely mistress."

"She is never in the school room now," returned Miss Leigh, leaning back wearily in the armchair. "Sometimes she comes in to interfere with Poppie and find fault with some of my arrangements. But she has coaxed your father into giving her French and singing lessons with her friends, the Hardwicks, and for months she has refused to open even a history; and yet you have no idea how ignorant she is. Nothing but mischief has resulted from her intimacy with Eva Hardwick. I have spoken to your father over and over again about it, but he listens to Mabel's version of her friend's character, and only the other day he told me I must be mistaken, for Eva was a bright, high-spirited girl, and it was all nonsense what Mr. Roger and I said about her."

"Roger dislikes her, then?"

"Oh, yes; he never speaks to her if he can help it. She is a fine-looking girl; older than Mabel, but vain and empty headed, thinking of nothing but balls and flirtations; and you know how dangerous a friend of that sort is to a girl of Mabel's age. To do Mabel justice, she was not half so vain and fond of dress and finery until she went so much to the Hardwicks. They have completely turned her head, and, worst of all, Eva has taken a dislike to Roger because he refuses to pay her any attention and laughs at all their nonsense; and that sets Mabel against her brother. Mabel always had a temper of her own," went on Miss Leigh, feeling a sort of relief in pouring out her feelings into Alison's ear, "but she was never so aggravating as she is now. You see, my dear, if a girl does not hold her own home as sacred, if she chooses a giddy young companion for her confidante, and retails to her all that passes in her own household, finding fault with her own people, and listening to her friend's estimate of them, she may end as Mabel does, in thinking her brothers rough and unmannerly, and Poppie a disagreeable little girl."

"Do you mean Missie is so dishonorable as to repeat to Miss Hardwick all that passes at The Holms?" asked Alison, indignantly.

"They do not think it dishonorable," returned Miss Leigh, with a quiet good sense which Alison had never credited her. "You see, Mabel calls Eva her bosom friend, and refuses to have any secrets from her. If Eva comes this afternoon, all that passed at the luncheon table between your father and Mr. Roger will be retailed, as a matter of course.

"Even if Mabel were disposed to be reticent for once, Eva, who is of an inquisitive nature, and who completely dominates her, would soon worm the whole thing from her. She has a grudge against Mr. Roger, and nothing would please her more than to hear of this humiliation. I have reason to know, Alison, that it is by Eva's advice that Mabel intends to keep your room. I have heard her say myself that, of course, as your home is with Miss Carrington, you have resigned your privilege here as the eldest daughter, and that there is no need for Mabel to knock under completely. Those were her very words."

"They are together every day, either here or at Broadlands—the Hardwicks' house. But as your father objects to strangers, or, indeed, to visitors of any kind, Eva very rarely spends the evenings here. They were practicing in the drawing room this morning, and afterward they went out together. There is another sister, Anna, a nice little thing, rather pale and delicate looking, but they both snub her. I suppose that makes Mr. Roger kind to her when she comes, for her sister certainly slights her, and Mr. Roger always stands up for every one but himself."

"It seems odd, my saying all this to you, Alison," observed Miss Leigh, after a pause; "for you are young yourself; but you were never flighty and easily led, as Mabel is. I believe she has her good points; she is really very much attached to your father, and will leave Eva sometimes, if he wants her; and in her own way she is fond of Poppie, though she tyrannizes over her. There! Poppie is crying as usual; that is generally the end when she is long with Mabel. I suppose, by that, your father has gone back to the mill. I had better go to her, Alison, if you will excuse me."

Alison had plenty of food for meditation when she was left alone; a very difficult problem was before her to solve. How was she to gain an influence over her faulty young sister?

Fun Is a Necessity.

Most people have the impression that fun and humor are life incidentals, not necessities; that they are luxuries, and have no great bearing on one's career.

Many think of fun as frivolous, indicating a lack of serious purpose in life. There are parents who rebuke their children because they want to have fun and go in for a good time. These parents have yet to learn the great part which fun and humor play in the physical economy, and their influence on the life.

What a complete revolution in your whole physical and mental being comes after seeing a really funny play! You went to the play tired, jaded, worn out, discouraged. All your mental faculties were clogged with brain ash; you could not think clearly. When you came home you were a new being.

A business man, on returning home after a perplexing, exhausting, exasperating day's work, experiences the same thing. Romping and playing with the children, spending a jolly evening with his family or friends, telling stories and cracking jokes, rest his jaded nerves and restore him to his normal condition.

I have been as much refreshed by a good, hearty laugh, by listening to good, wholesome fun—stories, jokes—or by spending an evening with friends and having a good time, as by a long, sound night's sleep; and I look back upon such experiences as little vacations.—Success Magazine.

Joseph Nicholson, a teamster of Waveland, was instantly killed at Crawfordsville, when a log rolled on him. He leaves a widow and two small children. Mrs. Nicholson's first husband was killed in a similar way at Harrodsburg, eight years ago.

Ten citizens of Waveland have formed a private water company and are putting down bored wells to get a supply. A large pressure tank will be put in at a central station, from which the water will be distributed. A gasoline engine will operate the pumps.

The two-tsory brick residence of John S. Hedges, a well-known business man, in Newcastle, was badly damaged by a fire a few days ago. Loss, $2,000; insurance, $3,500. The fire was due to an overheated stove. Several weeks ago the house was damaged to the extent of $1,000 by fire, caused by increased gas pressure and an overheated stove.

Dr. Ralph Tiley has purchased a herd of forty goats, and expects to have his farm in Harrison Township entirely cleared of underbrush within a few months. The goats have been in the vicinity for the last five years and have changed owners ten times. As soon as their owner discovers that there is nothing left for the goats to feed on but tame grass they are lent or sold to another farmer for a similar purpose.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson McLaughlin, of Plymouth, recently celebrated the fifty-seventh anniversary of their marriage. Mr. McLaughlin is 82 years old and his wife is 76. He wore his wedding trousers, which are as good as new. He paid $28 for the suit and after the wedding had but 25 cents in his pocket. He was born in Indianapolis in 1827, coming to Plymouth in 1843. In that season he killed nine deer, fifteen wild turkeys and 1,338 squirrels. He still spends a part of his time hunting and is an expert with the rifle. He was a soldier in the Mexican War.

Myrtle Kurtz, aged 14 years, was internally injured and both of her legs were cut off by a Wabash passenger train at Delphi. The little girl had spent the night in another part of the city and was on her way to get ready for school when the accident happened. A cut of cars on the sidetrack obstructed the view of the main line, and Miss Kurtz stepped from behind the cars on to the main track directly in front of passenger train No. 26, which was running at a high rate of speed. The girl was taken to her home, and physicians say she can not live.

The novelty of holding mayor's court over the telephone was observed at Greenfield and at Cambridge City last week and as a result the city of Greenfield received a check for $20. The amount was for a fine assessed by Mayor John Hinchman against an automobile party, which passed through there hitting the high places and barely missing the mayor and the city marshall. The persons were then held at Cambridge City. They talked to the mayor over the telephone, acknowledged their guilt, left the fine assessed by Mr. Hinchman and went on their way.

The W. C. T. U. of Bloomington has decided to establish a drinking fountain on the public square. The fountain is to be a handsome one and the temperance women have already begun plans to raise money for the purpose.

Mrs. Ed Vesey, of Terre Haute, was awakened at 3 o'clock in the morning by her pet fox terrier scratching her face. She realized that the room was filled with gas and, arousing her husband, they left the house. It was found that gas from a saloon on the first floor was escaping.

The 3-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. James D. Sears, of Bedford, was bitten by a fox terrier, which is thought to be affected with rabies. The dog also bit Mrs. Schuyler Fox. The affair has caused much excitement, and people are taking every precaution to prevent any further trouble.

Freeman Smith, a farmer near Greenfield, found a pearl along Blue river a few days ago while fishing. His foot struck a mussel shell which appeared unusually heavy. He opened it and found a brilliant pearl as large as a walnut. An expert says it is worth from $1,000 to $1,500 in the rough.

While digging a ditch near Morocco, Lewis Guthrie unearthed a part of the skeleton of a mastodon, among which was a tooth that measured nine inches in length and five inches in width and weighed almost ten pounds. The tooth is well preserved. Many other bones of mastodons have been unearthed near Morocco in the last three or four years.

Joseph Bradford, of the First Indiana Artillery, aged 65 years, was struck by a north-bound interurban car and instantly killed at Marion. His body was caught in the front truck of the car and was dragged for a distance of 100 yards before the car could be stopped. Before coming to the National Soldiers' Home, several years ago, he lived in Kokomo.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Logan, of New Salem, have received word that their daughter, Miss Mary Logan, a worker in the India mission field for the last fourteen years, sailed from Bombay for home on the 15th of last month. Miss Logan is recovering from a severe illness, and will be accompanied home by her physician. She will arrive early in December.

As the Rev. Gabriel Karn, of Shideler, 83 years old, was driving home from Eaton in a wagon, he was thrown from the seat when the wagon dropped into a rut in the road. He was fatally injured, being hurt internally. He was found by the roadside by neighbor boys, who carried him to his home. Mr. Karn is well-known throughout Delaware County. He was a United Brethren minister.

The worst case of cruelty which has come to the knowledge of Humane Officer Shine of Indianapolis was investigated in Juvenile Court. It was found that a boy, 10 years old, had taken a sharp piece of glass, with which he cut open a cow's udder. The cut was a foot long. The boy was so small that Judge Stubbs sent him back home with his mother, putting him under the supervision of a probation officer.

In recognition of his long career upon the bench and in token of their personal esteem, Noble County attorneys have presented Judge J. W. Adair, of Columbia City, a handsome Masonic ring with diamond setting. Judge Adair has been upon the bench almost twenty years and is soon to retire. He was originally appointed by Governor Isaac P. Gray to serve the unexpired term of Judge Walter Olds, now of Fort Wayne.

As long as the oldest citizen of Hazleton remembers the strip of willow wilderness, just above the town, has been the roosting place for apparently all the crows which feed on the White river valley corn crop. From 4 until 6 in the afternoon immense flocks of the birds can be seen flying for the "roost." And the number seems always to grow larger, although crowds of men and boys hold a daily massacre of crows, killing hundreds in a single evening with shotguns.

Paul, the 6-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ira Gegg, is dead at his home southwest of Auburn from hydrophobia. The lad was bitten in the mouth two weeks ago by a strange dog, and until a few days ago, no sign of rabies developed. Their physician told the parents that the child could live only a few hours, and a photographer was called to take a picture of him yet in apparently an undangerous condition. A short time afterward he was raving mad, and died in a room locked up alone.

The residents of Fairland have started a movement to incorporate the town, so that they may regulate the speed of trains through the place. The schoolhouse will be left outside the corporation line.

Climbing a tree in an effort to get a pet owl, which had perched high up on a limb, Victor Culp, age twelve years, of Evansville, fell to the ground, broke both his arms and was badly injured internally. Physicians say that he may die.

NOV. 26 AS THANKSGIVING DAY.

President's Proclamation Reviews Prosperity, Urges Reforms.

President Roosevelt has issued the annual Thanksgiving proclamation, pointing out the steady growth of the nation in strength, worldly power, wealth and population, and fixing Nov. 26 as the day for thankful recognition of divine favor. In part the President says:

Year by year this nation grows in strength and worldly power. Nowhere else in the world is the average of individual comfort and material well-being as high as in our fortunate land.

For the reason that in material well-being we have thus abounded we owe to the Almighty to show equal progress in moral and spiritual things. That life is wasted and worse than wasted which is spent in piling, heap on heap, those things which minister merely to the pleasure of the body and to the power that rests only on wealth.

Upon material well-being as a foundation must be raised the structure of the lofty life of the spirit if this nation is properly to fulfill its great mission and to accomplish all that we so ardently hope and desire.

Let us therefore as a people set our faces resolutely against evil and with broad charity, with kindliness and good will toward all men, but with unflinching determination to smite down wrong, strive with all the strength that is given us for righteousness in public and in private life.

Messages from the Dead.

In the Journal of the British Psychical Research Society fuller details are now published concerning the recent statement of Sir Oliver Lodge that, in his opinion, messages had been received from the dead. The messages appear to have been transmitted through the pen of a medium known as Mrs. Hollandrones. As she sat with her mind a blank, her pen produced broken and blurred messages, many of which dealt with the difficulty of establishing communication with the living. One from Mr. Gurney, one of the founders of the society, now dead, read: "A feeling of terrible impotence burdens me. I am so powerless to tell what means so much. I can not get into communication with those who would understand and believe me. The nearest simile I can find to express the difficulties of sending a message is that I appear to be standing behind a sheet of frosted glass, which blurs the sight and deadens the sound, dictating to a reluctant and somewhat obtuse secretary." Living personality is declared to be on a lower plane of spiritual development, which does not receive clear impressions from the higher plane of those who have quitted the prison of the flesh. Immediately after dissolution, says one message, there is an obscuration of consciousness which has led to many failures to communicate with living persons. A message from the late F. W. H. Myers says the period of oblivion was especially long with him, and when he communicates in this way he is "conscious of strain and effort."

Scientists Outvote Koch.

Just before the closing of the International Congress on Tuberculosis at Washington, the members went on record almost unanimously against the theory advanced and defended by Prof. Robert Koch of Germany that tuberculosis is not transmissable between animals and man. The day before that Dr. Koch himself had called a special conference to discuss his theory, and many men of prominence gave their testimony to the effect that consumption can be traced to milk infection. The resolution as adopted is: "That preventive measures be continued against bovine tuberculosis and that the possibility of the propagation of this to man be recognized." This will be regarded as authoritative, at least until the next congress, which it was decided to hold at Rome in 1910. President Roosevelt attended the final session and praised the work of scientists everywhere. The great gathering of scientists before adjournment announced its position favorable to factory legislation, against woman and child labor prematurely, instruction of teachers in personal and school hygiene, college courses in hygiene and sanitation, modern playgrounds and hospitals.

New Propeller a Success.

A remarkable demonstration of the powers of the new American vertebrate propeller was made at New York recently. In a water tank 104 feet long, 42 inches wide and 22 inches deep floated a model of a battleship 13 feet long, 16 inches beam and about 8 inches draft, equipped with the new propeller. A one-half horse-power Eck motor installed in the boat alongside the engines was supplied with direct electric current. At a signal Engineer Riviere turned on the power and instantly the boat gathered headway, traversing the tank in just nine seconds. Then, by a turn of the switch, the boat stopped as if a brake were applied, and with her engines reversed she was speeding back to her starting point—a thing impossible with an ordinary propeller. It is claimed that an ocean liner equipped with such a propeller located amidships would not only be free from vibration, but the propeller working always in solid water would drive her at phenomenal speed with no danger of "racing."

Torpedo Nets a Success.

The new steel nets meant to protect ships from torpedo attacks were found by tests made in Narragansett Bay to be capable of withstanding even the newest type of Whitehead torpedo. Five shots were made at the net at distances varying from 1,200 to 1,500 yards, with the torpedo keyed up to forty knots an hour. The missile failed to puncture the net or damage it seriously.

End of the Coffee Corner.

New York coffee merchants say that the attempts made by three of the Brazilian States to corner the coffee markets of the world has been abandoned after a loss estimated at $15,000,000.

Serum to Cure Eczema.

The majority rules in this fair land of ours. It matters not now whether the men elected are your or our favorites, they are now our officers and will serve us, we trust, faithfully and well.

The newspapers of Noble county are to be congratulated upon the clean campaign which they conducted. While the partisan papers did all they could in an honorable way, the candidates on the other side were shown respect.

The campaign which came to a close Tuesday, passed off without the usual bad feeling between neighbors and friends, which could not be said of campaigns of former years. And why shouldn't it be so? Each person has a right to his own opinion and if you can't convince a man that he is wrong in a kind manner you can't do it by abusing him.

Beautiful weather is prevailing in these our postelection days. The furious political storm has subsided. Mental and physical dynamics, free of political apprehenson, may be directed to the field, the factory and the mine—those abundant resources of this wonderful country. The welfare of millions in America with the wide world for exports affords an outlet which will require the best energies of an industrious and enterprising people. The times are improving. The railroads are finding it necessary to employ more help; to build more cars and to prepare for that increase of traffic which they foresee. There is every indication that the panic is over and that good times are here.

It is one thing to gain a victory over the opposition: it is another and a finer thing to triumph over oneself. This maxim is applicable to political parties as well as to individuals, and the question is: "Can the Republican Party, represented by Speaker Cannon Sereno Payne and Er. Dalzell, so far triumph over itself as to revise the tariff in a way to provide ample revenues and reduce taxation"? The task is gigantic. With Cannon in the chair and Payne and Dalzell on the floor, it seems almost impossible. Virginia and Alabama, no less than Pennsylvania will stand for duty on coal; New England wants free coal. Tennessee and Alabama like Pennsylvania and Ohio will want a heavy duty on iron; while other states demand free iron. The Carolinas and the New England states and the states of the cotton belt will hold out for the cotton schedule as it now exists. Certain western states will want protection on hides; while the states having extensive shoe manufactactories will demand free hides. And in all this clash and scramble of conflicting interests the people the great majority who wear clothes and shoes and who demand the cheap breakfast table and the full dinner pail will be heard but little heeded.

It is Sheffer that gives satisfaction. In horse-shoing and repair work, try him.

Our Annual Corn Show.

In past years The News Office has been the center of attaction for the display of farm products. This year a good display was made and the special feature is that of the corn. We have decided to have a corn show which is worth anyones time to enter. Beginning on Saturday, November 14 and continuing until Saturday, November 28, we will have our display. Two judges will be selected to act upon the entries made and everything will be done up right.

To Women

In order that the ladies may show what they can do we have decided that the pop corn can be entered by the ladies and not by the men. We have some beautiful prizes and you should make a hustle to win them. The prizes to be given are in the dish line and they are dandy. Come in and see them we have them on display.

Rules

1. No entry can be made before this date for contest.
2. Each entry must be composed of not less than three ears nor more than five.
3. Last day to make any entry will be Wednesday, November 22.
4. All entries will be given a number thus avoiding any dispute.
5. Entries can be made on white and yellow field corn and white and yellow pop corn.
6. All corn entered in this contest must be raised by the person making such entry.

Prizes

To make this contest an object to you we are going to offer the following prizes to the winners.

1. Best white corn entered will receive 1½ years subscription to The News.
2. The 2nd. best entry on white corn will receive 1 years subscription to The News.
3. The 3rd. best entry on white corn will receive 6 months subscription to The News.

NOTE

We will give the same prize in the yellow class as that on the white.

Pop Corn

The following prizes will be awarded to the winners in the pop corn display. In this class we will make no distinction in the color, its the best that counts.

1. The best corn in this display will be awarded a beautiful salad dish.
2. The 2nd. best will receive a nice, neat celery tray.
3. The 3rd. will receive three months subscription to The News.

NOTE

In case of a tie in awarding the first prize another dish will be given.

The Chicago Stock Show.

The International Live Stock Exposition, held this year from November 28 to December 10, is the supreme court of the year's prize winners, justly styled the show of champions, the show within whose portals the finest blood of the bovine, ovine and porcine families struggles for supremacy, the exposition whose educational value cannot be overestimated.

Here the foremost breeders, who, by constant study, mutual contact, observation and comparison, have succeeded in producing the best, are giving the world the benefit of their labors. Here the breeder and feeder are shown by actual block demonstration by what methods their work can be made more profitable, and the kind of animals the butcher wishes them to supply. These and the many other object lessons that can only be earned by a visit to this great exposition make a visit to the "International" a paying investment and part of the training of every progressive farmer, feeder and breeder.

The fact of his having attended a previous show does not signify, for new problems are being solved here each year, each year sees the work and achievements of the previous shows surpassed and at each successive exposition new standards of excellence are brought to the attention of the public. Let the live stock interests get behind this triumphant success, let them center upon this leading live stock exposition as the pride of American enterprise and let their patriotism force them to offer encouragement by attendion, thus making it possible to continue this spendid work and to make it the world's greatest live stock exposition in every sense of the word

Doing Some Repairing.

Some extensive improvements are being made on Chas. Koch's barn, the work being commenced Saturday. An addition 42 X 20 feet is being made on the north end of his barn for the stable and feeding room. The entire floor will be cemented and fixed up so that everything will be convenient. The main part of the barn will be fixed so as to drive in a rig and turn around, thus doing away with the unpleasant part of the livery business, that of hitching up out-of-doors and especially in bad weather. We can give you names of many who have been cured through its use. Write for advice.
"My son John had epilepsy for years, and after having him treated by specialists for over 2 years he still continued to have spells. I had almost given up in despair, but knowing the virtue of Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills for sick headache, I concluded to try the Nervine. During June, 1906, I gave him a teaspoonful three times a day, then in July I gave it as directed, and I could see that he was improving, and he has not had a spell since August 28, 1906, and has taken no medicine since Jan.-07. I am writing the case just as it is hoping it will induce others to try it."

Mill Burns.

Kimmel's new grist mill was destroyed by fire last week, causing a loss of about $15,000. The fire was discovered about 1:30 in the morning but as the city has no fire protection the mill and contents were lapped up by the flames. It will be remembered that one year ago their mill was burned and the one destroyed last week was newly erected. Besides the machinery the mill contained 500 bushels of wheat, 1500 bushels of oats, 500 bushels of rye, and 140 bushels of flour. The building and machinery alone were said to be worth about $12,000. The loss was only partially covered by insurance.

How is your Digestion.
Mrs. Mary Dowling of No. 228 8th Ave., San Francisco, recommends a remedy for stomach trouble. She says: "Gratitude for the wonderful effect of Electric Bitters in a case of acute indigestion, prompts this testimonial. I am fully convinced that for stomach and liver troubles Electric Bitters is the best remedy on the market to-day." This great tonic and alterative medicine invigorates the system, purifies the blood and is especially helpful in all forms of female weakness. 50c. at H. Milliman's drug store.

Insects Infesting the Clover Seed Crops.

Early in September word was received at the Experiment Station, from the northeastern part of the state, concerning certain insects which were said to be doing considerable injury to the clover seed crop. The first one of these reports came from Huntington county. It was not long, however, before reports began to come in from other counties, and at the present time, November 5, they are still coming, showing very conclusively that the greater portion of the clover growing sections of the state have been visited.

The trouble was found to be due to the presence of one, and perhaps two species of insects which are often found infesting the seed of the red, white, alsike and crimson clovers and one of them at least also works on alfalfa. As the same trouble is likely to occur again next year, a brief description of the habits, and some suggestions concerning preventive measures which may be employed, are here given.

The Clover-flower Midge, and the Clover-seed Chalcis.

The two species indicated above are the Clover-flower midge (Dasyneura leguminicola Lint.) and the Clover-seed chalcis (Bruchophagus funebris How.) Both are very small flies. The first is a near relative to the wheat-midge, and resembles it quite closely, both in form and color. The other belongs to the family Chalcididae, a parasitic family, the members of which usually feed upon and destroy other insects. The species mentioned here, however, is an exception to the rule.

These two species, although belonging to different families, are often found together, and as their habits and time of working are so nearly identical, they may be treated together. They may be found working together in the same head, but not in the same flower, as the midge appears a few days earlier than the chalcis, and its larvae feed upon and destroy the young ovules, thus precluding the presence of the other, which feeds only upon the growing seeds. In either case, however, the eggs are deposited in the head of the clover, but the midge places hers upon the forming florets and the young larvae make their own way into the ovaries, while the chalcis places her eggs directly into the already forming seeds, which the young larvae, as soon as hatched, proceed to "hollow out" by feeding upon the inside. This has been the condition of most of the seed sent to us this fall.

In this section there are two broods of each species in a season; the first brood of the midge appearing the latter part of May, and the second the last of July. The first brood of the chalcis fly appears the fore part of June and the second the last of July and first of August. In both cases the first brood attack the first bloom, or hay crop, and the second the seed crop.

Preventive Measures.

Practically the same remedies will apply to both species, so far as we now know. Early cutting of the clover hay crop as soon as it is in full bloom, will destroy most of the larvae. This can be done where clover is grown alone for seed, and not mixed with timothy. Early cutting will also tend to hasten the blooming period of the seed crop so that the blossoms will be too far advanced to receive much injury from the second brood, especially of the midge. Then, too, all volunteer clover should be clipped in the early stages of its blossoming period.

Fall plowing the clover field for corn the next spring, is also a good practice.

Natural Enemies.

These two species, like the most of our insect enemies, have parasitic enemies which feed upon them, and which contribute very largely towards holding them in check. However, it is not well to depend upon these entirely, as it sometimes requires a couple of years for the parasites to develop in sufficient numbers to be able to make themselves felt. In the meantime these species will, in all probability continue to increase, so that, for another year at least, it will be well to practice early cutting.

Winter Treatment of Seed.

The clover-seed chalcis winters as a larva or pupa inside the seed, and will emerge from the seed stored in the barn, according to Professor Folsom, of Urbana, Ill. The larva will continue to work, therefore, in stored seed, until it has readhed its pupa stage. The proper treatment of the seed therefore, which has been stored for the winter, would be to place the sacks in a tight box or bin (it should be air tight if possible) and then treat it with carbon bi-sulphide, by placing open dishes, filled with the material, on the sacks and then closing the bin and leaving it for a couple of days. A half pound would be sufficient for ten or fifteen bushels.

We Won The Game.

The second basket ball game of a series of three games was pulled off here, last Tuesday at the High School Campus. The Harlan team arrived here about 3:00 o'clock in good trim for the game. The game resembled the first in being warm from start to finish. Spencerville started things rolling by taking the lead, and holding it until the whistle blew "time out", and in no stage of the game was it in danger. Score 19 to 16 in favor of home team. Referee, Arthur Walter and umpire, Geo. Beams. Spencerville played very rough, having made 23 fouls to Harlan's 8. The last game will probably be played on a foreign ground. The Harlan team was accompanied by a large number of lady fans.

One of the Essentials of the happy homes of to-day is a vast fund of information as to the best methods of promoting health and happiness and right living and knowledge of the world's best products.

Products of actual excellence and reasonable claims truthfully presented and which have attained to world-wide acceptance through the approval of the Well-Informed of the World; not of individuals only, but of the many who have the happy faculty of selecting and obtaining the best the world affords.

One of the products of that class, of known component parts, an Ethical remedy, approved by physicians and commended by the Well-Informed of the World as a valuable and wholesome family laxative is the well-known Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna. To get its beneficial effects always buy the genuine, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists.

Up-to-Date.

The smooth-tongued book agent was selling the old farmer a huge dictionary.

"But, look here, young man," protested the farmer, "there don't seem to be any appendix in this here dictionary. All the dictionaries I ever saw had an appendix."

The wily book agent thought a minute and then said:

"Why, my dear sir, this is the latest dictionary. Every late dictionary has the appendix removed."

And the old farmer was satisfied and bought the big book at once.

PERFECT HEALTH

After Years of Backache, Dizziness and Kidney Disorders.

Mrs. R. C. Richmond, of Northwood, Iowa, says: "For years I was a martyr to kidney trouble, backache, dizzy spells, headaches and a terrible bearing down pain. I used one remedy after another without benefit. Finally I used a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and the backache ceased. Encouraged, I kept on and by the time I had used three boxes not a sign of the trouble remained. My health is perfect."

Native Finger Bowls.

The author of a recent English book, "In the Strange South Seas," being a woman, mentions many things which the ordinary book of travel omits to notice. Miss Grimshaw tells us more of how the people live in their homes and less of head hunting than books of travel and adventure commonly relate. Among other domestic matters, she describes the finger bowls of the more refined tables at which she was entertained with true Polynesian hospitality.

If we of civilized countries think that we invented finger bowls either in form or in use, we are mistaken. The South Seas invented them a few hundred years before we found out they were necessary to our own delicate refinement. A bowl full of water is handed round to every diner in a South Sea house.

The water is from the river, pure and fresh. The bowl is of a mold more nearly perfect than the most exquisite models of ancient Greece. It is delicately hued with pale brown in the inner part and with deep sienna brown outside.

This bowl is half a cocoanut shell—beautiful, useful, practically unbreakable, yet not of sufficient worth to prevent its being thrown away to-morrow and replaced by a fresh one from the nearest palm. Fresh plates and cups for one's food are a refinement civilization has not yet attained. You must go to savages to look for them.

EAGER TO WORK.

Health Regained by Right Food.

The average healthy man or woman is usually eager to be busy at some useful task or employment.

But let dyspepsia or indigestion get hold of one, and all endeavor becomes a burden.

"A year ago, after recovering from an operation," writes a Mich. lady, my stomach and nerves began to give me much trouble.

"At times my appetite was voracious, but when indulged, indigestion followed. Other times I had no appetite whatever. The food I took did not nourish me and I grew weaker than ever.

"I lost interest in everything and wanted to be alone. I had always had good nerves, but now the merest trifle would upset me and bring on a violent headache. Walking across the room was an effort and prescribed exercise was out of the question.

"I had seen Grape-Nuts advertised, but did not believe what I read, at the time. At last when it seemed as if I were literally starving, I began to eat Grape-Nuts.

"I had not been able to work for a year, but now after two months on Grape-Nuts I am eager to be at work again. My stomach gives me no trouble now, my nerves are steady as ever, and interest in life and ambition have come back with the return to health.

Smiles of The Day

Mean of Them.

Eva—She never had a beau in all her life.

Katherine—And yet she has the nerve to declare that her face is her fortune.

Eva—Gracious! It must be one of those "unclaimed fortunes" we hear so much about.

Why Repeat?

Durand returns from a night's carouse. As he stands in the hall, the clock strikes 4. Durand, reproachfully—"What's the good of repeating it? I know it's 1 o'clock. What's the use of saying so four times?"—Pele Mele.

The Law's Formalities.

Judge—Do you swear to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

Witness—I do swear.

Judge—Tell us now what you know about this case.

Witness—Nothing at all.—Bon Vivant.

He Knew.

Mother—William Penn was a short stubby man.

Tommy—Then I guess he was the original stub Penn.

Much the Same.

"You remind me of a broken pump, doctor," said the druggist.

"How so?" queried the M. D.

It Certainly Is.

"Most people," remarked the thoughtful thinker, "take life seriously."

"Well, there's no reason why they should not," rejoined the matter-of-fact person. "Taking life is a serious matter."

Rough Estimate.

"I say, waiter," said the impatient guest, "how long will my omelette be?"

"I can't say exactly, sir," replied the waiter, "but the average is abut eight inches."

Just Possible.

"I wonder what causes the flight of time?" said the fair maid.

"It is probably urged on by the spur of the moment," rejoined the brilliant young man.

As Indicated.

Myer—Ever notice that dilapidated old umbrella Jones carries?

The Wise Fly.

"Won't you walk into my parlor?" said the spider to the fly.

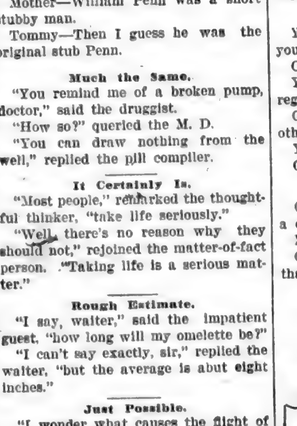
"Sure," answered the fly. "But I draw the line at entering your dining room."

Fair Warning.

Mifkins—Would it hurt your feelings if I should call you a liar?

Bifkins—Oh, no; but it might hurt my knuckles.

At the Football Game.



The Fair Spectator—But who are those two men over there at the end of the field shaking hands?

Her Masculine Escort—A doctor and an undertaker, I guess.

Strenuous Job.

"My poor man," said the kind housewife as she handed over a cut of pumpkin pie, "why don't you go to work?"

"I can't, mum," sighed Sandy Pikes; "you see, me season is over. I was a groom on a merry-go-round."

"Groom on a merry-go-round? Gracious! I never heard of such a thing. And what were your duties?"

Feminine Amenities.

Mrs. Mattron—Senator Snoddgrass kissed both my children yesterday.

Mrs. Jelluss—Yes, these politicians will do the most obnoxious things about election time.

Putting Him "Next."

"I will give you a penny if you'll promise to be good while I'm away, Johnny."

"What'll you give me if I'll be good when you get back home?"

"I'll give you something if you are not good then."—Houston Post.

Cautious.

"Excuse me," said the old lady as she entered the drug store, "but are you a registered pharmacist?"

"Certainly, ma'am," answered the clerk.

"You have a diploma, I suppose?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"How long have you been in the business?"

"About ten years."

"Well, I guess you are all right. Give me a couple of postage stamps, please."

Realistic.

Wang—How long were you on the raft and without food?

Bang—Three days and nights.

Wang—And how did you ever stand it?

Bang—Oh, all right! I made myself believe I was at home, that we had no maid and my wife was doing the cooking.

Has Its Own Reward.

Doctor—I think, sir, that the punishment fits the crime.

Sic Transit.

The Kindly Old Gentleman—Well, my little man, and what's your name?

The Little Man—Please, sir, I dunno.

The Kindly Old Gentleman—Bless my soul, you don't know?

The Little Man—No, sir. Please, sir, mother got married again yesterday.—The Sketch.

An Appreciation of Art.

Affable Grocer (to local art master)—Yes, sir, shall be sending 'im along to your evening classes when 'e's a bit older, and I want you to learn 'im just like you learned his brother. You se trained that lad's eye, sir, that 'e can cut the bacon to a quarter of an ounce!—Punch.

True Sympathy.

Yunger—Three years ago I married your only daughter.

Oldun—Yes.

Yunger—And I have never ceased to regret it.

Oldun—Let us sympathize with each other, my boy.

Yunger—With each other?

Oldun—Yes; I married her mother.

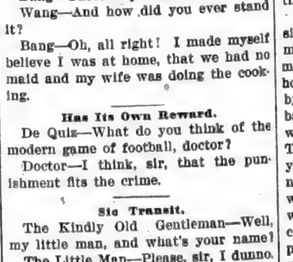
An Easier Job.

Gyer—I'd rather be a preacher than a doctor.

Myer—Because why?

Gyer—It's so much easier to preach than to practice.

Curiosity Gets a Setback.



"Wot's in de poipers terday, Chimmie?"

"'Scuse me, but I makes it a rule never ter talk shop ter a loidy."

Pertinent Query.

"Man's work is from sun to sun, but woman's work is never done," quoted her husband's wife.

"Well, why doesn't she stay home occasionally and do it?" queried his wife's husband.

The Usual Way.

Hix—Brown is certainly an oddity How does he strike you?

Dix—For $5, usually.

Wooden Girl.

Tenement Tessie—And de novel says de heroine had a willowy form, used to pine for her lover and would spruce up when she seen him coming froo de gate.

Shanty Sue—Gee, where did she work?—in a sawmill?

The Difficult Part.

"Oh, it's easy enough to fool a man," remarked the young widow, "but——"

"But what?" queried the anxious maid.

"It's awfully hard to keep him fooled," concluded the y. w.

Sounded Suspicious.

He jumped out of his red machine and entered the house of his lady fair.

"What brings you here at this hour?" she asked in surprise.

"Alcohol," he chuckled.

"What? Do you mean to say you have been drinking?"

"Nay! Nay! Gertrude. I only mean to say that my automobile runs by alcohol instead of gasoline."

Haven't Time.

Second Voyager—What's that?

First Voyager—It makes you forget all your other troubles.

Wise Father Time.

"They say that time flies," said the inquisitive one.

"Of course I do," responded Father Time. "If I traveled in an automobile I'd always be breaking down on the way."

Giving Her the Credit.

Tomdix—I was surprised to hear that you and Mrs. Weede were engaged. I had no idea you would marry a widow.

Hojax—I hadn't. It was an idea of her own.

A Long-Felt Want.

"I had a hair-raising experience this morning," said the doctor.

"Wish I could bump up against something like that," said the bald-headed druggist.

POPULAR PULPIT

OPPORTUNITIES OF WOMAN.

By Rev. William M. Carr.

Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all.—Proverbs xxxi. 29.

This is what the wise man tells us of the ideal woman of his day.

A woman may be model, married or single, but not ideal. The ideal woman is the wife and mother. The model wife reigns as a queen in her home, exerting a tremendous influence by comforting and inspiring her husband in life's battle. Such was the wife of the late President McKinley. Though weak and ill much of the time, yet love armed her for her task, and nobly did she do her part in the world's work. Of the mother some one has well said: "The hand that rocks the cradle guides the world." Her constant presence with the children in the home, while the husband and father toils at his daily task, gives her the opportunity of exercising the preponderating influence of good or ill upon the characters of the children in the formative period of their lives. During these golden days the ideal mother will both by precept and example mold the minds and hearts of her children into beautiful symmetry.

But there is a model single womanhood as well. Multitudes of young women, especially in America, are single either by choice or by force of circumstances, and yet nobly do their part. We need but glance at the great companies of deaconesses in our various Christian churches who have taken up the work these last years, as the Sisters of Charity have for a much longer period, of visiting the homes of sickness and poverty, bringing aid and comfort in the name of Christ, or the army of nurses in our hospitals who are as brave in their consecration to duty in the face of disease and contagion as the soldier who enlists for battle. Add to these untold thousands of young women who quietly and modestly engage in services to eke out family expenses, to care for father or mother, or to educate for life's battle younger brothers and sisters. So that many a man would say, if he told the whole truth, "I owe my position in life to my self-sacrificing sister." Shall we say of her as Gray in his "Elegy"—"full many a flower is born to blush unseen and waste its sweetness on the desert air?" No, the sweet sacrifice of such a life is not a waste, but rises as an "odor of sweet incense" to heaven.

How much fills the hands and heart of the ideal mother. The responsibility for rearing correctly, and the careful and proper training of the children necessarily rests upon her. To see that the children are properly fed and clothed, and with the passing years to educate properly and to be careful that the associates are all they should be, devolve largely upon her. Then there is the temptation to be too strict on the one hand and too lenient on the other. If the former, then the danger that when the day comes when the child is released from all paternal restraint there be a rebound in the other direction and liberty be turned to license; if the latter, the danger that the liberty permitted be abused.

The American people know how the mothers of President Garfield and President McKinley were asked to be present when their sons were inaugurated—a tribute of love and devotion on the part of those noble sons, who appreciated the part their mothers had in their success. All are familiar with the saying of the martyr President Abraham Lincoln: "All I am I owe to my angel mother." Thank God for the opportunities for American women, and thank God for the noble uses made of their opportunities. May the words of the wise man aptly apply: "Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all."

THE MAN OF SORROWS.

By Henry F. Cope.

"A man of sorrows and acquainted with grief."—Isaiah, liii., 3.

There is one tie that binds us all together, one experience we all have in common, one part of the way of life in which we all walk; sorrow is its name, and in its way springs up the small bond that we call sympathy. Here is the universality of Jesus, that he touched deeply the deepest common life of humanity.

His was a life of joy. He knew enough of the light from heaven, of the clearness of the shining of happiness, to be able to tell his friends that he was leaving his joy to them, but the essential, outstanding glory of his life lay in the fact that he tasted of the bitterness of every cup; he bore our griefs and carried our sorrows.

Weary of warring creeds, of disputations over doctrines, of causes that struggle for no great good, and organizations that, in the name of religion, exist only to keep up their own existence, we turn to look on that life and read again his words, finding there ever closer touch with and clearer understanding of all our lives.

Jesus of Nazareth faced life's deepest problem and its greatest foe. Theology represents Him as fighting organized sin and its agents, as living and dying to take away the legal reproach of human disobedience to the will of God. But we feel a need deeper, keener than that, and this is the need He meets, that some one should right the real wrongs and cure the heartaches and ills of our everyday world.

It is a good thing to believe that this is a good world, that somehow love is working out the final good of all. But to-day He must be strangely blind or calloused who is not moved by the cry of little children who are robbed of their heritage of happy, free play and laughter, and by the groans or the silent sufferings of those, our own brothers, who bear the great burdens of unremitting toil. There is so much of unnecessary suffering in the world.

Doubtless there is a good deal of loose thinking, foggy philosophy and unscientific superstition in the world; doubtless it would be an excellent thing if men might have clear ideas as to God and the universe. But who can sit in studious calm, or who can waste strength warring over theological subtleties when the world is full of need, when our neighbors' hearts are breaking?

It is hard to understand how those who profess to follow this man of sorrows can content themselves to sit and dream of some other happy world where they will be free from all pain and sorrow, or how they can endeavor still to shield themselves from this world's great need and to shut out from their ears the sound of its sighing. How often is religion but a synonym for soul shriveling selfishness.

If we follow Him we will go where He went. If we do His will we will do His kind of work. We can afford to leave the disputed questions of doctrines and creeds for the present until we have settled the question of the rights of our fellows, until we have soothed their aching hearts and strengthened the weak and comforted the sad.

It is a good deal more important that we shall raise those who have fallen to-day in life's battle than that we should have the most accurate and reliable picture of the fall of the first man. The evil we need to wage war against is not that of false thinking about God so much as it is that of man's failure to become like his god, the terrible evil of a man lost through selfishness and greed.

The divinity of that life of long ago is established by the answer it made to the call of humanity, by the sympathy it showed for the suffering, by the fact that it gave itself a life of love, to those who were bereft of the rights and joys of life. The best life is that which reaches down to the worst, which interprets religion by living for the highest in the lowliest.

It's no use dreaming of the bliss of heaven unless we are seeking to bring something of that joy of which we dream to be a reality in our ways of earth. The need of the needy is not money or clothes, it is men of sorrows, lives that will become part of their lives and know the fellowship of their everyday lot. We must not pretend to be like Him unless we put our lives where he put His and give ourselves to His ministry for sorrow.

SHORT METER SERMONS.

Love leads; greed drives.

Truth hid in the heart never stays secret.

Charity always goes farther than it is sent.

Good nature ought to be natural to the good.

Coals of fire are not intended for roasting purposes.

Many think they are shining when they are only glaring.

The religion that goes farthest begins with those nearest.

Lazy people are always loyal to the letter of the Sabbath law.

It's hard raising fruit in the heart that is filled with freight.

Half of a new truth is better than the whole of an outgrown one.

Each day's chances to serve are opportunities to offer sacrifice.

Some men have faith in God only as a refuge from the fear of men.

Many a man keeps his hands white at the expense of his heart.

The hardest test of love is what it does with the unlovely and unloving.

DONT'S FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't fear and fret if you would avoid life's friction.

Don't fail to learn the lesson that heaven helps those who help others.

Don't despise men lest heaven despair of you.

Don't fail to remember that the church that courts the rich loses its riches.

Don't think you can heal your own faults by exposing those of another.

Don't think because you can run a business without cash that you can run it without character.

Don't imitate people who think they are holy because a good dinner has made them feel unhappy.

Don't forget that many a man's solid vices have sprung from his father's course taken in the school of sin.

Don't hesitate to bear another's burdens if you would have the best badge that can be worn as a Christian.

At the present moment the countries of Europe are spending on their armies and navies as much as $4,000,000 a day.

Nothing I Ate Agreed With Me.

MRS. LENORA BODENHAMER.

Mrs. Lenora Bodenhamer, R. F. D. 1, Box 99, Kernersville, N. C., writes:

"I suffered with stomach trouble and indigestion for some time, and nothing that I ate agreed with me. I was very nervous and experienced a continual feeling of uneasiness and fear. I took medicine from the doctor, but it did me no good.

"I found in one of your Peruna books a description of my symptoms. I then wrote to Dr. Hartman for advice. He said I had catarrh of the stomach. I took Peruna and Manalin and followed his directions and can now say that I feel as well as I ever did.

"I hope that all who are afflicted with the same symptoms will take Peruna, as it has certainly cured me."

The above is only one of hundreds who have written similar letters to Dr. Hartman. Just one such case as this entitles Peruna to the candid consideration of every one similarly afflicted. If this be true of the testimony of one person what ought to be the testimony of hundreds, yes thousands, of honest, sincere people? We have in our files a great many other testimonials.

BOY KEPT SCRATCHING.

Eczema Lasted 7 Years—Face Was All Raw—Skin Specialists Failed, but Cuticura Effected Cure.

"When my little boy was six weeks old an eruption broke out on his face. I took him to a doctor, but his face kept on getting worse until it got so bad that no one could look at him. His whole face was one crust and must have been very painful. He scratched day and night until his face was raw. Then I took him to all the best specialists in skin diseases, but they could not do much for him. The eczema got on his arms and legs and we could not get a night's sleep in months. I got a set of Cuticura Remedies and he felt relieved the first time I used them. I gave the Cuticura Remedies a good trial and gradually the eczema healed all up. He is now seven years old and I think the trouble will never return. Mrs. John G. Klumpp, 80 Niagara St., Newark, N. J., Oct. 17 and 22, 1907."

EXCELLENT WEATHER AND MAGNIFICENT CROPS.

Reports from Western Canada Are Very Encouraging.

A correspondent writes the Winnipeg (Man.) Free Press: "The Pincher Creek District (Southern Alberta), the original home of fall wheat, where it has been grown without failure, dry seasons and wet, for about 25 years, is excelling itself this year. The yield and quality are both phenomenal, as has been the weather for its harvesting. Forty bushels is a common yield, and many fields go up to 50, 60 and over, and most of it No. 1 Northern. Even last year, which was less favorable, similar yields were in some cases obtained, but owing to the season the quality was not so good. It is probable to say that the average yield from the Old Man's River to the boundary will be 47 or 48 bushels per acre, and mostly No. 1 Northern. One man has just made a net profit from his crop of $19.55 per acre, or little less than the selling price of land. Land here is too cheap at present, when a crop or two will pay for it, and a failure almost unknown. Nor is the district dependent on wheat, all other crops do well, also stock and dairying, and there is a large market at the doors in the mining towns up the Crow's Nest Pass, and in British Columbia, for the abundant hay of the district, and poultry, pork and garden truck. Coal is near and cheap. Jim Hill has an eye on its advantages, and has invested here, and is bringing the Great Northern Railroad soon, when other lines will follow."

The wheat, oat and barley crop in other parts of Western Canada show splendid yields and will make the farmers of that country (and many of them are Americans) rich. The Canadian Government Agent for this district advises us that he will be pleased to give information to all who desire it about the new land regulations by which a settler may now secure 160 acres in addition to his 160 homestead acres, at $3.00 an acre, and also how to reach these lands into which railways are being extended. It might be interesting to read what is said of that country by the editor of the Marshall (Minn.) News-Messenger, who made a trip through portions of it in July, 1908. "Passing through more than three thousand miles of Western Canada's agricultural lands, touring the northern and southern farming belts of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, with numerous drives through the great grain fields, we were made to realize not only the magnificence of the crops, but the magnitude, in measures, of the vast territory opening, and to be opened, to farming immigration. There are hundreds of thousands of farmers there, and millions of acres under cultivation, but there is room for millions more, and other millions of acreage available. We could see in Western Canada in soil, product, topography or climate, little that is different from Minnesota, and with meeting at every point many business men and farmers who went there from this state, it was difficult to realize one was beyond the boundary of the country."

Marrying a girl against the wishes of her parents is, next to murder, the most severely punishable crime in Lapland.

Our Own Minstrels.

"Mistah Walkah, kin yo' tell me de diff'unce 'tween a boy puttin' salt in his dad's cawfy an' a pewjilist landin' a knockout blow?"

"I give ith up, William. What is the difference between a boy putting salt in his father's coffee and a pugilist landing a knockout blow?"

"De one am a joke on de paw an' de uddah am a poke on de jaw."

"Ladies and gentlemen, the celebrated tenor, Prof. Spitzerinctum Bang, will now sing that matchless ballad, 'Mamma, My Dream of Happiness Is Over; George Eats Limburger Cheese.'"—Chicago Tribune.

Physicians Recommend Castoria

CASTORIA has met with pronounced favor on the part of physicians, pharmaceutical societies and medical authorities. It is used by physicians with results most gratifying. The extended use of Castoria is unquestionably the result of three facts: First—The indisputable evidence that it is harmless: Second—That it not only allays stomach pains and quiets the nerves, but assimilates the food: Third—It is an agreeable and perfect substitute for Castor Oil. It is absolutely safe. It does not contain any Opium, Morphine, or other narcotic and does not stupefy. It is unlike Soothing Syrups, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, etc. This is a good deal for a Medical Journal to say. Our duty, however, is to expose danger and record the means of advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge, Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health, by regulating the system—not by stupefying it—and our readers are entitled to the information.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. B. Halstead Scott, of Chicago, Ills., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria often for infants during my practice, and find it very satisfactory."

Dr. William Belmont, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "Your Castoria stands first in its class. In my thirty years of practice I can say I never have found anything that so filled the place."

Dr. J. H. Taft, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria and found it an excellent remedy in my household and private practice for many years. The formula is excellent."

Dr. R. J. Hamlen, of Detroit, Mich., says: "I prescribe your Castoria extensively, as I have never found anything to equal it for children's troubles. I am aware that there are imitations in the field, but I always see that my patients get Fletcher's."

Dr. Wm. J McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., says: "As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have in my years of practice found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Dr. J. R. Clausen, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "The name that your Castoria has made for itself in the tens of thousands of homes blessed by the presence of children, scarcely needs to be supplemented by the endorsement of the medical profession, but I, for one, most heartily endorse it and believe it an excellent remedy."

Dr. R. M. Ward, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Physicians generally do not prescribe proprietary preparations, but in the case of Castoria my experience, like that of many other physicians, has taught me to make an exception. I prescribe your Castoria in my practice because I have found it to be a thoroughly reliable remedy for children's complaints. Any physician who has raised a family, as I have, will join me in heartiest recommendation of Castoria."

Guest Evening.

The Ladies Literary Club of St. Joe entertained their husbands and other invited guests, Wednesday evening of last week. The beautiful home of Mrs. Harry Milliman was the scene of these festivities. All the rooms were decorated in the club colors, red and green, and the parlor presented a very tasty appearance, festooned with ropes made of evergreen and bittersweet berries.

The program began at eight o'clock, when the president, Mrs. S. W. Tustison, presented Mrs. Renninghoff, who read a paper on "Club Work". She showed the value of the club's work, and incidentally mentioned that the St. Joe Literary Club was now in its fourteenth year. Following this excellent paper was a drama, "A Modern Sewing Society. This was participated in by all the members of the club. The dramatic part of the sketch was exemplified in the evils which might come from gossiping about one's friends and neighbors. The actual rendering of the sketch was exceedingly humorous at times. The ladies all assumed their parts like experienced actors and some acted so well as to lead the guests to wonder if it were not perfectly natural for them. Be this as it may, it was plainly evident that all most heartily enjoyed the sketch. The program was continued with a paper by Mrs. Curie, "The Club Woman as Wife and Mother". This paper made plain that the woman who participated in intelligent club work was better fitted to meet the demands of the modern home. The president next called on Rev. Dressel who made some remarks complimentary to the ladies and in keeping with the evening's program.

The remainder of the evening was spent in a social way. A game of cities came first, L. W. Yeiser was winner in this contest and received as prize, a medallion. The guests were then all ushered up-stairs where they found themselves in a picture gallery of noted people. In the contest to ascertain who could name the most faces, Elgin Curie was winner and received the prize. Following this, each one was handed a line of poetry, and by searching among the guests it was possible to find three other lines which coupled with the one held made a complete stanza. These four were to be seated at supper together. Upon re-entering the rooms below it was found that the reception rooms had been changed into a banquet hall, where an excellent three course supper was served. At each plate was a beautiful red carnation as favor. The first course consisted of blue points with cracked ice, lemon and wafers; the second, pressed chicken, French salad with mayonais, bread and butter and olives; the last course was marshmallow frappe, angel food and devil food cake and coffee.

The festivities closed at mid-night. The ladies are to be highly complemented upon the excellent manner in which they entertained at their guest evening. Those who were present better understand the social and refining influence wielded by a club of such intelligent ladies as compose the Ladies Literary Club. May continued success and prosperity be theirs.

THE PRIZES

Which we are going to give to the girls who bring the prettiest boxes are as follows:—1st. prize is a beautiful lady's three piece toilet set consisting of Mirror, Comb and Brush. It is a fine Plate Glass Mirror, and a nice Whale-bone Comb. The whole set is beautifully ornamented, having genuine Brazilian Gold Trimmings, etc.

THE 2ND. prize is a beautiful scene painting entitled "A Rocky Coast." It has a Neat Gilt Frame and a Clear Plate Glass. A most desirable ornament.

Another Prize to be given the Most Popular Lady of the Evening is a Large Bottle of the Very Best Grade of Delicately Scented Perfume, with Case. None but those bringing boxes will be elegible to this prize. The Lady will be determined by the vote of the Gentlemen who will be given a vote with each five cent purchase, i. e. anyone spending 50 cents will get 10 votes; and for 75 cents 15 votes

A short program consisting of Instrumental Solos, Vocal Solos, Cornet Solos, Recitations, etc., etc., by best local talent will be one of the pleasant features of the evening.

A Lunch will be served to those not buying boxes for the small sum of one dime. The High School has planned A Big Time so Don't Fail To Come.

Next Friday Evening.

Doors Open at 7:00 O'clock. Program at 8:00.

Prizes on Exhibition at Milliman's Drug Store.

Let's Help Them Out.

We have good reasons to believe that the High School Box Social is going to be something exceptional and we also believe our citizens are going to show their appreciation of the high school's efforts by all loyally turning out next Friday evening. Some have an idea that a box social is strictly for the "young folks." While this one is not strictly for the older ones by any means, yet we understand that this social is planned as much for the married as the unmarried and they are figuring on the boxes of the one as well as the other. Do not disappoint them. Patronize your schools. Citizens, you know you never have shown the proper interest in your schools, as nearly all our high school entertainments gotten up by the students have been more or less unsuccessful, financially. So, begin now, bring them a box, give them your patronage. If you have children in the high school you owe it to them, if you have had children in the high school you owe it to them, if you will have children in the high school you owe it to them and if you have no children at all you owe it to the school, as loyal citizens of this community. The hall is large and will accomodate both the older and younger set. Do now what you should have done long ago, take an interest in our schools and show it by patronizing them next Friday evening.

Birthday Dinner.

Last Friday evening, the Misses Ethel and Hazel Berry, Gladys Barney and Flossie Sechler, and Mr. Merritt Sechler were entertained to 6 o'clock dinner, at the home of Mr and Mrs. C. A. Patterson in honor of their daughter Helen's sixteenth birthday.

Rate of Taxes

Deputy county auditor, of this county, has just completed the tabulation of the rate of taxation and the poll tax of the different townships and towns of DeKalb for the year 1908.

Butler—1.58; poll, 1.50
Jackson—1.56; poll, 2.00
Concord—1.53; poll, 2.50
Newville—1.53; poll, 2.00
Stafford—1.41; poll, 1.75
Wilmington—1.67; poll, 1.50
Union—1.60; poll, 1.50
Richland—1.42; poll, 1.50
Fairfield—1.70; poll, 1.50
Smithfield—1.41; poll, 1.00
Franklin—1.62; poll, 1.00
Troy—1.47; poll, 1.00
Keyser—1.88; poll, 1.00
Grant—1.25; poll, 1.75
Auburn—2.93; poll, 2.50
Waterloo—3.10; poll, 2.50
Butler—3.51; poll, 2.00
Garrett—3.26; poll, 2.50
Ashley—3.09; poll, 2.75
St. Joe—2.03; poll, 2.50
Corunna—1.74; poll, 1.85
Altona—2.61; poll, 2.75

In all the townships, except Keyser, the tax rate is a little lower by from five to thirty cents this year than it was last. Keyser shows an increase of seven cents on the hundred dollars valuation. In all the cities and towns, except St. Joe, the rate is higher. The taxes are due on the first of January, 1908, and may be paid in two installments, the first installment on or before the first Monday in November.

Abel-Michael.

At the parsonage of Grace Reformed church at 3 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon of last week, the marriage of Miss Agnes E. Michael and Mr. Glen Abel was celebrated by Dr. A. K. Zartman. A brother and sister of the bride were the only witnesses. After a wedding trip into Illinois, Mr. and Mrs. Abel will make their home at New Haven.—Ex The young couple arrived here Thursday evening for a visit with his parents. The News joins their many friends here in wishing them abundance success and happiness.

National Corn Show

All persons contemplating sending samples of corn to the National Corn Show at Omaha, Neb., in December, should correspond or call on R. B. Wyatt, Auburn, Ind., R. F. D. No. 4, before November 24. DeKalb County should be represented and we trust it will be. There are some liberal premiums and we stand an equal chance in our class for winning. Wheat and outs also are awarded large premiums If interested let us hear from you at once.

Injured.

Last wednesday evening while Wm. T. Wyatt was hauling some corn he lost his balance and stepped through an opening in the wagon rack then turned and fell backward, the right foot caught in the crack and in swinging over the edge of the rack backwards and sideways the ankle and knee joints were severely twisted by the weight of the entire body hanging on them while in this position. He was assisted out of this position as soon as possiqle. How he escaped without broken bones is a mystery. He is able to be about the house with crutch and cane and will be able to resume his position on the jury Wednesday, but will not be able to walk for some time.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Frightful Fall to Death.

Harvey Watterson, a younger son of Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, plunged to his death from the nineteenth floor of his office building at 35 Wall street, New York City. His body shot downward for 110 feet and landed on the roof of a ten-story building adjoining. Almost every bone was broken, the head crushed and death was practically instantaneous. While there were no eyewitnesses to the tragedy evidently it was entirely accidental. Mr. Watterson's hat and overcoat were on his closed desk. Presumably he had attempted to lower the window and either stumbling over the radiator, which was in front of the low sill, or losing his footing in some manner unknown, pitched forward and shot down to death on the roof below. Mr. Watterson was 30 years old and married. He was junior member of the law firm of Wing, Russell & Watterson.

Steamer Explodes; Five Killed.

The steamer Temiskaming was approaching the landing at Temiskaming, Ont., when the boiler exploded, wrecking the steamer and causing the death of at least five persons by explosion or drowning. Several passengers and crew were hurled into the water by the shock and many are injured. Owing to the remoteness of the scene of the tragedy details are lacking. A man named McBride, a hunter from the United States, is missing and there is little doubt of his fate. J. Menard and T. Berthan, firemen, and two men whose names are unknown, are dead. Six are badly burned and several may die. A special train was despatched from Mattawa to bring the injured to that town.

Eleven Killed in Railway Wreck.

Eleven persons are known to be dead and a score or more injured as a result of a wreck on the New Orleans & Northeastern railroad at Little Woods, twelve miles from New Orleans, La. Between Slidell and New Orleans the tracks of the New Orleans & Northeastern railroad are used by the Great Northern railroad and it was a suburban train of this road from Covington that crashed into the rear of a local Northeastern train from Hattiesburg, Miss., telescoping the four rear coaches.

Girl, 17, Blacksmith, Weds.

Miss Minnie Hegeman, the 17-year-old blacksmith of St. Louis County, Missouri, was married recently to Alfred H. Smith, a wealthy St. Louis County man and neighbor. Miss Hegemann is known throughout the County as the girl blacksmith and has assisted her father regularly in his work. She can shoe a horse, mend a wagon tire or shape a plowshare with the skill of a practiced smith and handles a heavy hammer with the ease of a muscular man. She is athletic and a fine shot with any kind of firearm.

Chicago to Have Greatest Building.

A permit for the construction of what the architects say will be the largest office building in the world was secured at Chicago, Ill. The building, which will be erected for the People's Gas Light and Coke Company, will stand at Adams street and Michigan avenue. It will be twenty stories in height and will contain 7,930,000 cubic feet of air space.

Six Injured in Automobile Collision.

A party of six narrowly escaped death when an automobile belonging to William Russe collided with a street car at Senate avenue and Washington street, Indianapolis, Ind. The machine was wrecked and all the occupants were injured. The most seriously hurt were Andrew Shackels, engineer of the Deaconness Hospital, and Della Beheimer.

Injured Baby by Lifting It.

The infant child of George Fulmer, of Elkhart, Ind., has lost the use of its arms and wrists, temporarily at least, because children playing with it lifted it abruptly, holding it by the hands.

Four Autoists Killed in Collision.

In a collision between an automobile and a locomotive in Red Bluffs, Cal., four persons were killed and one slightly injured. The dead: George K. Willard, Mrs. G. K. Willard, Miss Olive Willard, Mrs. Irene Hayes.

Wreck Cost Eleven Lives.

Eleven men lost their lives in the collision of two Union Pacific freight trains at Borie, Wyo., and in the fire which broke out in the wreckage.

DENY OIL REHEARING WITH SHARP REBUKE

Rejects Appellate Court Government's Petition in Case of the Big Landis Fine.

RESENT CRITICISM IN PLEA.

Next Move Will Be an Application for Review by United States Supreme Court.

The petition by the United States government for a rehearing of the appeal of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana from the $29,240,000 fine of Judge Landis was overruled by Judges Grosscup, Baker and Seaman in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Chicago. In a brief opinion, delivered by Judge Grosscup, the original opinion of the court, reversing Judge Landis' decision, was upheld. The case now lies in the hands of Attorney General Bonaparte, and it is expected that he will apply for a writ of certiorari in the United States Supreme Court in order to obtain a review of the big case by the country's highest tribunal.

The contents of the petition for rehearing, which had the signatures of Attorney General Bonaparte and District Attorney Edwin W. Sims attached to it, are almost wholly ignored by the reviewing court, reference being made to but two points of contention. Then the opinion concludes with what is taken to be a criticism of the government attorneys for the manner in which they petitioned for another hearing of the appeal. The Federal lawyers were not sparing in their caustic flaw picking on the Appellate judges' decision on the appeal.

According to the judgment, the punishment of the oil company could have been properly based only on the settlements made to the Chicago and Alton Railway, from which it was accused of accepting concessions. There were thirty-six of these settlements, and a maximum fine for all these could have been but $720,000 and the minimum $36,000.

In answer to the government's objection that under the decision of the higher court a corporation may use a subsidiary concern to commit crime, while escaping punishment, the court adds to the opinion as follows:

"True it is that if one corporation uses another corporation to violate law, just as if one individual uses another to violate the law, such offender ought not, though masked, to go unpunished. And there are ways, as old as the law itself, to reach and punish him."

October Business Failures.

Dun's Review gives the number of commercial failures for October as 1,187, involving $15,898,008, a slight increase over the number and amount for the same month last year. The Review says that there is much in the statistics of insolvency to indicate substantial progress toward recovery from the panic which had its beginning in October of last year.

Steel Trust Doing Better.

The report of the United States Steel Corporation for the quarter ending Sept. 30 is regarded in financial circles as a favorable omen of better times ahead. It shows net earnings of over $27,000,000 as compared with $20,266,000 for the preceding quarter. Still disappointment was expressed over a falling off in the volume of unfilled orders.

Strikers in the Philippine public schools will hereafter be expelled for participation in such disturbances, the director of the educational board has announced.

GUNNESS MURDER CASE.

The opening at Laporte, Ind., of the trial of Ray Lamphere for the murder of Mrs. Belle Gunness and her three children by burning them to death in the Gunness "house of a hundred crimes" last April brought crowds of farmers and their families to attend the sessions of the famous case.

While interest in the country at large is centered in such further developments as the trial may bring out concerning the amazing career of the woman who is alleged to have slain eleven human beings, inhabitants of the territory immediately adjacent to their abode of horrors, "the Brookside Farm," are intent on the establishment of guilt or innocence for Ray Lamphere, the obscure farm hand around whose personality has been built an extraordinary structure of bitterness that finds echo in the whole of Laporte County. As a result of the local feeling and of the widespread publicity given the case 5,000 people had gathered near the courthouse before the doors were open for the first session.

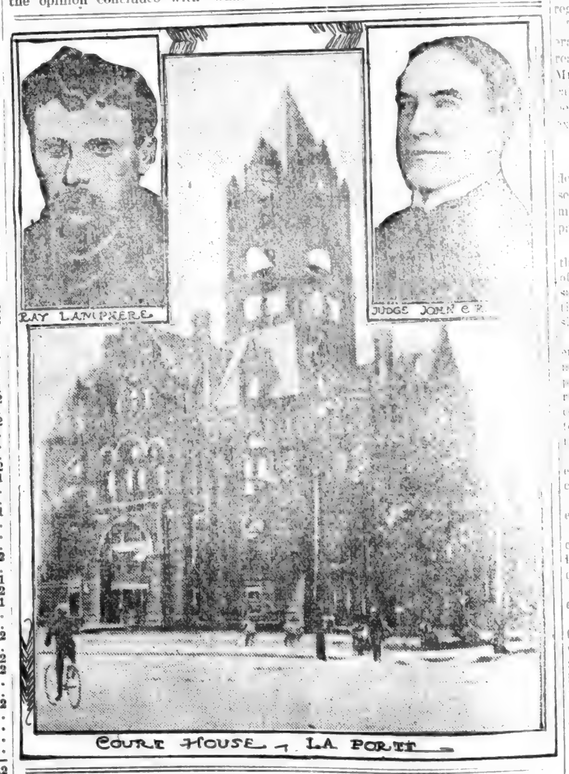
After the first week of excitement attending the discoveries of the different bodies on Mrs. Gunness' farm, where it is believed twenty-five were murdered, attention turned to the mistress of the place and the various theories concerning her death or escape became the sole topic of discussion.

Nine persons out of ten declared that she is alive, and to this day the majority of residents think she escaped after setting fire to her home and killing her children. So it remained for the State's Attorney to pick only jurors who believe her dead, or it would be impossible to convict anyone for her murder.

The most natural conclusion is that Mrs. Gunness is dead. The body found in the ruins of the farmhouse apparently was the same length as that of Mrs. Gunness, and later a gold plate, made for Mrs. Gunness by a Laporte dentist, and found in the debris, was positively identified. Contrary to these facts, which will form the basis of the prosecution's contention that Mrs. Gunness is dead, the defense will introduce the statement of one of the coroner's board of physicians, which stated positively that the body found was not that of Mrs. Gunness and the remarkable coincidences that the main identfying features of the woman's body were missing when the corpse was taken from the ruins.

The body supposed to be that of Mrs. Gunness was without head or right arm when found. The woman's right arm alone would have formed a positive identification mark, as it was deformed.

The State opened the case with apparent confidence that the network of evidence would prove so strong as to leave no doubt in the minds of the twelve men as to the complicity of Lamphere in the "mysteries of the house of horror," and to show that it was the woman's former hired man who, the morning of April 28, set fire to the house in which Mrs. Gunness and her children met death.



FACTS FOR FARMERS.

A mass meeting of cotton growers and allied interests of the South generally will be held in Memphis.

Rains in the winter wheat belt west of the Missouri have improved the crop prospects in that district.

New corn is being marketed freely in the Southwest and heavy shipments to Europe are being made from the gulf ports.

Plowing has been seriously delayed this fall in the heavy soils of southern Minnesota by the drought. In some localities wells were going dry before the recent rains.

Under the law passed by the last Minnesota Legislature, allowing co-operative creameries to combine for the purpose of marketing their product, six creameries have united in a corporation, having a capital stock of $12,500.

PRESIDENT OUTLINES HIS FINAL MESSAGE

"Last Word" Will Be Characteristic in Reiteration of Former Demands.

SET TASKS FOR CONGRESS.

Tariff Question, Not Touched Upon, Will Be Text of Taft's First Effort.

Washington correspondence:

The President already has completed the outline of his message to Congress. Much of the material for it has been gathered together and many features have been roughly drafted. The task of working it over into final shape and in determining just what shall and what shall not be included in the document is still to be taken up.

It can be stated that the President will send what will be recognized as a "characteristic" message. He will reiterate the demand for those things which Congress has not yet got around to giving on the strength of former demands, and will possibly come out for some features of congressional legislation heretofore unpresented.

Acting upon his usual theory that Congress is elected to work pretty steadily during its sessions at its job of making laws for the people, Mr. Roosevelt will set the solons a heavy task, and if they have not finished it by the time he leaves office he will regard it as no fault of his own.

The tariff will be left out of consideration. The revision of schedules already has been arranged for, and to Mr. Taft, the new President, when he calls a special session in March, will be left the duty of passing along the executive view on the stunt.

Measures to Be Pressed.

With the tariff taken care of, President Roosevelt will then go on to present the claims of the various reform measures he has been pressing in the past. The list will include:

Practical and effective amendment to the Sherman anti-trust act with the view of establishing some such a government supervision of great industrial corporations as the interstate commerce commission maintains over railroads.

Considerable extension of the powers of the interstate commission in the matter of controlling rates, especially the power to prevent a rate or a schedule of rates from taking effect until after the commission shall have had an opportunity to examine and determine its prima facie reasonableness.

Liberal appropriation for the continued enforcement of the uniform railroad accounting provisions of the Hepburn act.

Passage of a more complete government employes' liability act.

Increase of naval establishment by the construction of two new battleships at least, and probably a renewal of the request for four.

Inauguration of an effective federal control over the water powers of the country, with a view to preventing their monopolization by private interests, and to assuring that power shall be sold at reasonable rates.

Internal waterways improvement and development.

May Discuss Tax Questions.

Whether the President will take up income and inheritance taxes and the making of a valuation of the railroads is not yet decided, it is understood. The expectation is, however, that he will discuss at least the advisability of income and inheritance taxes. It is the President's firm belief that such legislation is needed in this country for the regulation of "swollen fortunes," and he is anxious that his recommendation of it in former utterances shall not be forgotten.

It is expected in view of the President's vigorous advocacy of the District of Columbia child labor bill last session, that in the coming message he will be especially earnest in asking that whatever can be done in the way of national child labor statutes be done without delay.

One section of the message to which the President has devoted himself with especial satisfaction is the discussion of the battleship fleet's trip around the world.

But the President is strongly inclined to some changes in the bureau system, probably aimed to bring the department organization nearer to that which prevails in the British navy.

NEWS OF MINOR NOTE.

The Jackson Opera House and several stores in London, Ky., were burned. Loss $50,000, partly insured.

According to confessions made by boys, cocaine is being sold among school children of Philadelphia, Pa. Boys acted as venders and taught the pupils how to use the drug.

Joseph John Burton, the oldest employe in the Postoffice Department, is dead at his home in Brooklyn at the age of 76. He was in the postal service fifty-five years.

Another effort will be made to secure representation in the President's cabinet at the eleventh annual session of the American mining congress at Pittsburg, Pa., Dec. 2 to 5.

Clerk James McKenny of the Supreme Court celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his entering the clerk's office in Washington. Many congratulations and floral offerings were received.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The Weekly Review of Chicago Trade, published by R. G. Dun & Co., says:

Commercial defaults again furnish a gratifying decrease, and it is notable that business activity, as measured by the volume of payments through the banks, is now above that of the corresponding weeks in 1907 and 1906.

A healthy sentiment finds general acceptance and prevailing conditions derive strength from the improving outlook, although election interest caused some temporary recession in distributive channels and transportation. Prospects in the main widen confidence in manufactures, and preparations indicate an early increase in the active machinery and labor.

Iron and steel industries have considerable new demands in sight, while there is more actual buying of railway equipment and supplies.

Building operations within the city limits compare favorably in value with a year ago. Unusual quantities of materials are now required and, while competitive bidding is keen, there is more firmness in quotations of quarry products and lumber, although cost averages are less than at this time last year.

Deliveries of commodities exhibit a smaller aggregate and lake traffic is rather light, but the earnings of Chicago steam roads continue their recovery.

Fewer buyers, as expected, appeared in the wholesale markets and house trade was limited, yet mail orders reached an encouraging total for dry goods, boots and shoes, food products and Christmas wares.

Bank clearings—$226,343,314—are 10.1 per cent over those of corresponding week in 1907 and compare with $212,454,881 in 1906.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 24, against 48 last week, 37 in 1907 and 19 in 1906. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 13 last week, 10 in 1907 and 1 in 1906.

NEW YORK.

Election results and the advent of more seasonable weather in some sections of the country were helpful to trade this week, and except in parts of the South, where the holding of cotton interfered, collections also have shown improvement. In wholesale and manufacturing lines the tone of business shows most marked improvement. Orders which were conditional on election results have been confirmed, and many new ones placed, the net result being an enlargement of the volume of business at first hands over recently preceding weeks.

Many industrial concerns have announced an increase of capacity and of running time, and sales of pig iron, structural material, cotton goods for spring and reorders for fall and spring wear woolens, shoes and other lines have been enlarged.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Nov. 5 number 205, against 241 last week, 226 in the like week of 1907, 146 in 1906, 166 in 1905 and 184 in 1904.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 33, as against 32 last week and 34 in the corresponding week of 1907. —Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

Pawnbrokers of Grand Forks are making a fight against an ordinance pending in the city council, in which it is required that a daily report of transactions shall be filed with the chief of police. It is drafted from the ordinance in force in Minneapolis. A similar ordinance is in effect in Fargo. The pawnbrokers oppose the passage of the ordinance on the ground that they will be obliged to divulge business that many of their patrons thoroughly honest, would rather not have conveyed to a third party.

CHAPTER VII.

"Here beginneth the first chapter of Alison's failures," whispered Alison, in a funny little voice, as she encountered Roger on her way downstairs on Monday morning, and she laughed merrily as she shook her key basket exultantly in his face. Roger opened his eyes very widely at this, then he stepped back a few paces and looked at her admiringly.

"How ever did you get possession of that thing?" he exclaimed. "Do you know, Allie, my dear, that shabby little brown basket has been a bone of contention between Miss Leigh and Missie for the last month. Miss Leigh clings to it as her sole hope, and refuses to give it up. It has ended by Missie's neatly abstracting it at night. She has done it three or four times."

"Yes, I know. Poppie told me all about it. Well," in an amused tone, "I have only paid Missie in her own coin. Thanks to my good habits, I was dressed before she thought of waking, so I stole in, got my key basket, and wished Missie good morning at the same time. I am afraid she will come down dreadfully cross."

"As though that were anything new," returned Roger, contemptuously, as he took up the paper and retired with it to the window, while Alison busied herself with the coffee pot. Shortly afterward there was an unwonted sound on the stairs.

"If it were not perfectly incredible, I should say that was Rudel's footstep," Roger observed, in a doubtful tone.

"Oh, yes, it is Rudel," returned Alison, brightly. "I woke him, and made him promise to get up. Miss Leigh says he has got into sad ways. Good boy," as Rudel entered, looking very much pleased at himself, and he bore without making a very wry face his sister's kiss on his forehead. Poppie, who came in a moment afterward with Miss Leigh, was not quite so reticent.

"What is that for?" she asked, with a child's innocency of grammar, but in much surprise, as Alison kissed her warmly, and said, "Good morning, Poppie, dear."

"Poppie means that we are not accustomed to these little civilities," put in Roger, as Alison looked perplexed for a moment, "nobody says good morning to anybody else at The Holms except Miss Leigh and I; we always do, don't we?" shaking hands with her as he spoke. "Father just gives an inclusive good morning at the door."

"I am afraid you are very much shocked, Alison," observed Miss Leigh, mournfully. "Mabel sets Rudel and Poppie such a bad example in this; no one thinks of such a thing except Mr. Roger, and he is always so very thoughtful."

When Mr. Merle came into the room a few minutes later he seemed quite surprised at the unwonted cheerfulness. He nodded to Alison, and then took up his letters, but she was not satisfied.

"You have not kissed me, papa," she said, as she carried him round his cup of coffee.

"Oh, I thought only Pussie cared for kisses," he said, good-humoredly; "Poppie never comes to me for one."

Poppie reddened, and bent over her plate in much confusion. Roger, who was next to her, saw the child's eyes were full of tears.

"I expect Poppie is afraid of bothering you," he observed. "You would like father to kiss you sometimes, as he does Missie," he said, kindly.

"Is that true, my little girl?" asked Mr. Merle, who had just caught sight of Poppie's quivering lip. The poor child, who was very sensitive, was on the point of bursting into tears, but Alison happily interposed.

"Papa is too busy to think much about such things. You must go round to-morrow and ask him for one, as I did to-day; he won't refuse either of us," and she looked laughingly at him from behind her urn.

The brightness seemed to rouse him effectually. He had looked pale and weary when he entered the room, but good-humor is infectious.

"You look very nice, dear," he said, approvingly. "I like to see you there, Alison."

"I like to see her there, too," observed Roger, boldly; "it is her proper place," Missie, who had just opened the door, caught both these remarks; they did not evidently conduce to her amiability. She gave Alison a withering glance as she passed by her, to greet her father, and, taking no notice of her or the others, desired Rudel rather crossly to give her more room, and began her breakfast rather sulkily.

But for once her humors were disregarded. No one troubled themselves about her, and the conversation was renewed with scarcely a break. Perhaps both Roger and Alison were doing their best to carry it on, but their sense of effort was lost in the general good.

When breakfast was over, and Rudel had rushed off to school, and Mr. Merle and Roger had gone over to the mill, Alison asked her sister pleasantly how she proposed to spend the morning.

"That is my affair," she answered, very rudely. "I am not accustomed to give an account of myself to gratify people's curiosity. I may as well tell you, once for all, that I dislike interference."

Alison felt inclined to laugh—there was something comical in Missie's mode of showing her temper, but she knew nothing provokes people more than to laugh at them, so she prudently refrained from showing her mirth. "I am just going round the house with Miss Leigh while Poppie prepares her lessons," she returned, as coolly as though Missie had given her a fair answer. "In another hour I shall be quite at your convenience, if you would like to practice with me."

"Thank you," returned Missie, with freezing politeness. "I have no need to trespass on your valuable time; Eva will be here soon."

"Oh, very well," returned Alison, still in perfect good-humor; "then I will get my easel ready in the school room and paint a little, if Miss Leigh will allow me."

"Of course you must paint in the school room," returned her sister, tartly; "I suppose you do not intend to litter up this room with that great ugly easel, and Eva and I will be in the drawing room."

"I dare say when I have finished you will let me join you there," replied Alison, in a conciliatory tone. As she was bent on making Miss Hardwick's acquaintance for her own purposes she took no notice of sundry remarks in an undertone, that were fully meant to reach her ears, about people never knowing when they were not wanted.

Alison was soon too busy to remember Missie's existence. Miss Leigh, who was desirous of resigning her household duties into Alison's hands, keeping herself in the background and only acting as aide-de-camp, was soon explaining to the bewildered girl all her little pet theories with regard to kitchen and store room.

When Miss Leigh and Poppie went back to the school room, Alison settled herself and her painting apparatus in the furthest window, and tried to forget all her perplexities in hard work, but while Poppie droned over her lessons, Alison's thoughts would stray to a far different scene—to a shady room full of sweet flower scents, with a tall figure standing before an easel. "Oh, Aunt Di, if I were only painting beside you now!" she thought, with a sharp, involuntary pain.

"Oh, how beautiful! if I could only paint like that." The words were spoken, with a sigh, just behind her. Alison started; she had been dreaming indeed; the midday sun was streaming into the room. Poppie had put away her lesson books, and had run off, and Miss Leigh's place was empty, and standing just behind Alison's chair was a young lady dressed very simply in a gray linen dress and a broad-brimmed hat. At Alison's obvious start the young lady blushed and seemed confused.

"Oh," she stammered, "I am afraid I startled you. You were so busy that you did not see me come in. I have been watching you ever so long."

"I must have been painting in my sleep," returned Alison, with a frank laugh, but as she put aside her palette and rose, she cast a scrutinizing glance on the young girl beside her.

She was a slight, pale girl, evidently a little younger than herself; somewhat plain in feature, but with a pleasing, gentle expression, though a painful hesitation in her speech, almost amounting to a stammer, marred the effect of a singularly sweet voice. Even in that first moment Alison, who had a true artistic taste in all matters pertaining to dress, wondered at the bad judgment that could select dull, neutral tints for a complexion so colorless; the large hat overshadowed her features, and hid the soft hair that was her only beauty.

"You are Miss Hardwick, I suppose?" observed Alison, with a shrewd guess that this was the young sister of whom Miss Leigh spoke.

"Not Miss Hardwick," corrected the girl; "I am only Anna. Eva and Mabel sent me here because they wanted to talk to each other, and they always find me in the way. Will it trouble you if I stop here a little and watch you painting?"

"Oh, no; not at all. We shall be nice company for each other," returned Alison, in a friendly voice. "I have only this little bit of background to finish, and then I shall be free to talk to you."

Alison painted for a few minutes silently; she was thinking. Then she laid aside her brush.

"If you will excuse me a moment I want to speak to your sister and Mabel," she said, rather quickly, "and then, if you like, we will go and sit in the garden until luncheon is ready."

CHAPTER VIII.

Missie loked up with a frown as her sister entered the room, but Alison took no notice of her. She walked up straight to Miss Hardwick, and held out her hand with one of her pleasant smiles.

"I have just made acquaintance with your sister," she said, with quiet tact; "we are going in the garden, as the house feels so close this lovely day. I shall be so glad, and I am sure Mabel will be, too, if you will both stay with us to luncheon."

"I thought you knew better, Alison," Missie interrupted, pettishly, before her friend could speak. "Dear papa is so nervous and worried about business and Roger's wretched management that he is not able to bear luncheon visitors. Eva understands this, don't you, dear?"

"Oh, yes, darling," returned Miss Hardwick, with effusion; "but perhaps your sister, being a stranger and not quite used to all the ways at The Holms, has made a mistake. That is very natural."

"Oh, no," returned Alison, trying to keep cool. "I am making no mistake. Papa will not be in to luncheon, or my brother, either, as they have business a little way out of town. So I thought, as we should be quite alone, that it would be a good opportunity, Mabel, for you to have your friends."

Missie's pink cheeks became crimson with vexation; it aggravated her to see Alison taking upon herself so quietly the duties of the mistress of the house; and she was still more injured that her father's movements had not been first notied to herself. She took no notice of her sister's remarks, and added no word, as Miss Hardwick accepted the invitation with great alacrity. When Alison left them, after a few more words, she listened reluctantly to Eva's criticism.

"I had no idea your sister was such a stylish person," she said, when the door closed on Alison; "she has fine eyes and a good figure, and she knows how to suit her own style in dress. She is not as pretty as you, darling, of course, but she has some claims to good looks."

Alison did not return these moderate compliments; she was not at all attracted by Miss Hardwick. She was a large, heavy looking girl, rather handsome, but her face had no play of expression, and her manner was decidedly artificial.

Alison spent a pleasant hour with her new friend under the lime trees. She soon grew interested in Anna's artless talk. She was evidently very young for her age; though she was seventeen, she was still childish in manners. Probably she had been repressed and kept in the background by her sister.

"It is so good of you to let me talk to you," Anna said. "Mamma and Eva say I am such a chatterbox, when I begin to ask them questions. I think I am fonder of talking than most people. Anthony says that makes me so troublesome."

"Who is Anthony?" queried Alison, a little curiously.

"Oh, he is our cousin; he is staying with us now. Eva says it is so nice, because we have no brothers, and he can take us about. Eva and he are great friends; she always calls him Tony. He is such a handsome fellow, with a big black mustache like a cavalry officer. He is in the army, you know. I am dreadfully frightened of him, because he laughs at me, but it is only his way, he means to be good-natured."

Alison prudently refrained from all comments, but said, lightly, "Now we have talked all this time, and I wonder what has become of your sister and Mabel? I propose that we have afternoon tea under these trees, and that you and I, with Sarah's help, should prepare a little surprise for them. Will not Poppie be delighted?"

Anna might have been a child from the way she clapped her hands; she had never enjoyed herself so much in all her life as during the next half hour, as she and Alison dragged chairs across the lawn, and arranged the little tea table, with the nice basket of hot cakes that old Nanny had prepared, some fresh strawberries, and a little vase of roses in the center. Even Missie looked pleased when, on returning from their hot walk, she caught sight of the snowy cloth under the trees.

"That is really a good idea," she observed, in a grudging tone, however; but Eva very nearly made her cross again by saying:

"How delicious of your sister! I really would hug her for this. What a pity we never thought of this before, dear, and then Tony might have joined us!"

When Roger returned from his work, an hour earlier than he expected, he stood quite transfixed on the gravel walk; for certainly such a pleasant little picture had never been seen before in the garden of The Holms.

"You may have my chair by Miss Leigh," exclaimed Poppie, eagerly. "Oh, the cakes are so nice, Roger, and there are two left."

"I must make you some fresh tea, you poor tired day laborer," observed Alison, as Roger threw himself into the wicker chair and removed his hat.

"Oh, let me do it!" exclaimed Anna, eagerly. "I know the way to the kitchen quite well."

"Yes, and I will go, too," added Poppie. "There are some more strawberries, I know."

"Bring me a big plateful," called out Roger, as Poppie frisked away; but he looked after them both rather curiously. His little friend looked different, somehow, he thought. Was it Alison, he wondered, who had put those coquettish looking roses into the little gray gown?

Anna's face looked dimpled and smiling. Her blue eyes quite shone when she came back. She and Alison and Roger had a long talk, while Miss Leigh listened and knitted industriously. Missie and Eva had wandered away again—most likely to avoid Roger. He had addressed Miss Hardwick with studied politeness, but she had tossed her head and hardly answered him. She would make no terms with the enemy who had wounded her vanity so grievously.

"We will take one more turn, darling, and then we must really go," she had said to Missie; and in a few more minutes they heard her calling for Anna.

"Come, Anna, don't dawdle. We must really go now."

"Good by. I have had such a happy afternoon, thank you so much," whispered Anna, with a timid kiss that Alison warmly returned. "One day you will have me again, will you not?"

"Come whenever you like, dear. I am sure we shall be good friends," returned Alison, forgetting the necessity of lowering her voice.

Miss Hardwick laughed affectedly as she heard the speech.

"You are a lucky girl to have got a friend so quickly. Is she not, Mr. Roger? Oh! I forgot; you are her friend, too," with a little spice of venom in her tone.

"I shall be most happy to be considered Miss Anna's friend; and I am sure Alison will say the same," rejoined Roger, in his downright manner. "Good by, Miss Anna."

PATRICK HENRY.

A Saint in Religious Matters, but Different in Politics.

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography has a number of letters by Roger Atkinson, a Virginian planter, who came from Cumberland, England, about 1750 and settled near Petersburg. To his brother-in-law, Samuel Pleasant of Philadelphia, he writes in October, 1774, concerning Virginia's recently appointed seven delegates to the first Philadelphia congress. The spirit of the man is shrewd, but obviously not reverential.

"Ye 3d gentleman, Col'o Washington, was bred a soldier—a warrior, & distinguished himself in early life before & at ye Death of ye unfortunate but intrepid Braddock. He is a modest man, but sensible & speaks little—in action cool, like a Bishop at his prayer.

"The 4th a real half Quaker, Patrick Henry, your Brother's man—moderate & mild & in religious matter a Saint but ye very Devil in Politicks—a son of Thunder—Boan-Erges—the Patriotic Farmer will explain this—I know it is above your Thumbs. He will shake ye Senate & Some years ago had like to have talked Treason in ye House, in these times a very useful man, a notable American, very stern & steady in his country's cause & at ye same time such a fool that I verily believe it w'd puzzle even a king to buy him off—he's a second Shippen—oh, that he had the handling of some of our Courtiers—for instance, was it North or South—Scotch English or Welsh (ye poor Irish have enough of it in their own country) our Patrick w'd certainly be very uncivil—he is no Macaroni."

Roumania is said to hold the prize for illiteracy. Two-thirds of the population can neither read nor write.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

John Lutz, 70 years old, was struck by an automobile in Evansville. His skull was crushed and he may die.

Probably the only voting place that was in a log cabin in the recent election was the one at Raleigh, Rush County. The cabin was built in 1846 by Samuel Legg. D. P. Saul, its present owner, bought the logs in 1871, and moved them to Raleigh, where the cabin was rebuilt.

A. N. Fisher, a traveling salesman from Indianapolis, narrowly escaped death by asphyxiation at the New Filbeck Hotel in Terre Haute. A porter discovered the condition of the guest and a physician was called in time to save his life. He had failed to turn off the gas completely.

Judge George W. Stubbs, of the Juvenile Court, is critically ill at his home in Indianapolis, from neuralgia of the heart and stomach. On election day he was able to go to the voting place, but he has not been able to get about since that time. He is the only man on the Republican ticket in Indianapolis to win.

Miss Elizabeth Baxter, a school teacher of Alexandria, has filed in the Madison Circuit Court suit for $10,000 damages against the Union Traction Company. With two other young women she was in a buggy which was struck by a traction car in the streets of Alexandria on July 4. She alleges she received permanent injuries on account of the accident.

Ned E. G. Haines' livery barn in Wabash burned to the ground, and six horses were cremated. The building was a mass of flames when the fire was discovered, and it was only by hard work that any of the horses were taken from the building. Many buggies were burned and all of the harness was destroyed. The loss is partly covered by insurance.

Peter Grosse, the 12-year-old Terre Haute boy who unexpectedly developed hydrophobia last week, is dead. Convulsions, which began in the morning, became more violent steadily until it was difficult for several men to hold him in bed. He was bitten two months ago by a four-months-old bull pup which was not suspected of having rabies, but was killed because it was thought to have a vicious disposition. It also scratched the hand of a sister of the boy with its teeth. She has not shown any sign of being afflicted.

Edward Limpus, of Shelbyville, successful candidate on the Republican ticket for Township Trustee, was so elated at his election that he forgot to feed his horse for two meals. Thinking about the animal in the evening, he went to the barn to feed it, when he found that it was missing. On his return to the house his wife could give him no information. He then returned to the stable and, hearing a noise in the loft, climbed the stairs and found the animal up there chewing hay. With the aid of three of the neighbors the horse was taken down the stairway.

Seventy-five farmers in the vicinity of Lowell, Bartholomew County, have signed an agreement and will turn their lands into a game preserve. There will be 10,000 acres of ground in the preserve and it is one of the largest Commissioner Z. T. Sweeney has established anywhere in the State. Each farmer who signed the agreement promises not to allow hunting on his lands for a period of three years. Commissioner Sweeney has a large number of Hungarian partridges on the way to this country from his agents in Europe and the new preserve will be stocked with these birds as soon as they arrive.

George W. Peck, of the Big Four railway detective service, had a startling experience in room No. 23, in a hotel at Lawrenceburg. He was rudely awakened from slumber by a peculiar noise in his room, and it grated on his nerves so much that he shouted for help. Conductor Charles McDonald and engineer Pepper, of the Big Four, who occupied a room across the hall, came to the detective's assistance, and discovered an owl perched on the top of the dresser in the room. The owl was caught and killed and Detective Peck will have it mounted, as he regards the visit of the wise bird as a forerunner of good luck.

Terre Haute has its share of freak bets, including the rolling of a peanut around the courthouse with a toothpick and a wheelbarrow ride over the same course. At Rose Polytechnic one student is to wear socks which are not mates, with his trousers rolled up, the remainder of the term. Another student is to give the winner "rub downs" in the gymnasium baths. A Normal student is to get the lessons of a Taft adherent in a particular study for the remainder of the term. The women students at the Normal bet pillows, pennants and candy. Two Rose Poly students who are rivals for the affections of a young woman, agreed that the loser in a bet on the governorship should cease calling on the young woman.

During a raid on restaurants at Summitville in search of liquor by a posse of Constables Alva Ice became involved in a quarrel and was shot and slightly wounded by Frank Hundley, a special constable.

After returning from work in a factory in Anderson, Albert Six, 63 years old, lay down at his home for a brief period of rest, and an hour later he was found dead, from heart trouble. He is survived by his widow and two children.

The Rev. Father Casimer Bilger, of St. Meinard's, died at a hospital in Evansville after a long sickness. A brother and two sisters survive him.

Miss Mary Mulligan, a principal in one of the Anderson public schools, has been chosen one of the 500 school teachers of the United States to go to England for a one-month study of the English school system. She will sail November 14 and leave England for home December 19.

Fire, thought to have been of incendiary origin, destroyed the large barn owned by Sylvester Cantrell near Oakland City. The contents, consisting of hay, corn, oats, wheat and wagons, were burned. The loss was estimated at $3,000, which is partially covered by insurance.

The Rev. John H. Hill, a Democrat, who was elected to represent Bartholomew County in the lower House of the next General Assembly, is a foe to the fish and game laws. He believes that it is the God-given right of every man to fish and hunt when he pleases and it will be one of the aims of his work in the Legislature to secure the repeal of the fish and game laws.

The contract for a new High school building in Attica has been let by the board. It will be two stories high with a basement. The basement will contain a gymnasium and manual training department. On the first floor there will be an assembly and four classrooms and on the second eight classrooms. The building will be constructed of brick and will be trimmed with Bedford limestone.

The derailment of a steel gondola car of a Lake Shore west-bound freight at Pine, caused the gas tanks and steps to be torn from the cars on an east-bound passenger train. The loss of the gas tanks left the mail car in darkness until the train reached Elkhart, where thirty-five lanterns were substituted. The passengers were badly frightened until they learned the extent of the damage.

Burglars, while attempting to dynamite the safe in the store of E. S. Pernett at Bethlehem, set fire to the building, which was destroyed, with all its contents. The residence of his mother, Mrs. A. N. Jackson, adjoining, was also burned. Pernett loses $7,000, with $1,800 insurance, and Mrs. Jackson $2,000, with $1,200 insurance. Pernett was defeated last week for election as County Treasurer.

When Otto Keith, the furniture man of Shelbyville, and Constable R. P. Lamar went to the home of Sherman Ivey to levy on his household goods for nonpayment of a bill, Keith was attacked by the Iveys. When the two men entered the house and made known their business Mrs. Ivey started after Keith with a butcher knife. The officer made her drop it. This so enraged her husband that he picked up an ax nearby and started toward Keith. A revolver held by Lamar flashed in his face, and he instantly dropped the ax. Affidavits will probably be filed against Ivey.

Roaming somewhere in Eastern Indiana is a herd of about fifty Hereford calves valued at more than $1,000. The owner is C. W. Cecil, residing four miles southwest of Muncie. He had sold the calves to a Muncie butcher, and was delivering them when the herd became frightened by a crowd of children and stampeded. The animals which were of large size, although not full grown, rushed pellmell toward the country. A half dozen stragglers have been picked up, but the others can not be found. It is feared they may suffer for water before they are located.

A fire out of the ordinary occurred along the Big Four railroad while a train was making good time across the country. When the third section of No. 95, a fast freight, in charge of Conductor U. D. Singer, reached Avon, one of the cars was discovered to be on fire and burning rapidly. The train made the best time possible to Gale, four miles farther west, and switched the burning car, which was a stock car of carboys filled with acids, to a sidetrack. A series of explosions of the acids followed. Several other cars which were on the siding caught fire and were destroyed. The total loss from the fire will be heavy.

John Ott, who for ten years was superintendent of the Bartholomew County Poor Farm, and who is now a farmer near Lowell, Bartholomew County, believes he has a fortune on his farm. He employed Lafe Burns, a well digger, to drill a deep well on his farm, and at a depth of about fifty feet a rich vein of soft coal was struck. The coal was shown to experts and they pronounced it as good as any coal on the market. The drilling was continued and the vein was found to be twenty-five feet thick. There is a big hill running back from the place where the well was drilled and it is thought the vein extends into the hill. Prospectors are of the opinion that one of the best coal mines in the State is awaiting development on the Ott farm.

The charred body of Andrew Loughmiller, a farmer of Washington County, was found in his barn. It is believed that he was stricken with apoplexy and a lantern he carried ignited his clothing.

While William Chesser, 48 years old, of Princeton, and his brother were cleaning a shotgun preparatory to an election celebration, the gun was accidentally discharged. The calf of William Chesser's left leg was torn off and he bled to death.

CORN YIELD IS HEAVY.

An average yield of 26.2 bushels of corn per acre and an indicated total production of 2,642,678,000 bushels of corn are preliminary estimates announced in the report of the Department of Agriculture, summarizing corn and five other crops. The yield of corn per acre in 1907 was 25.9 as finally estimated, and averaged 25.6 for ten years, while the production is compared with 2,592,320,000 bushels finally estimated in 1907. Quality of corn is 86.9 per cent, compared with 82.8 in 1907 and 84.3 ten years' average. About 2.7 per cent, or 71,124,000 bushels, is estimated to have been in farmers' hands on Nov. 1, against 4.5 per cent, or 130,995,000 bushels, a year ago, and a ten-year average of 4.5 per cent.

The preliminary figures for important corn States, giving in bushels, the yield per acre and total production respectively are as follows:

Illinois, 31.6 and 294,860,000; Iowa, 21.7 and 287,456,000; Missouri, 27 and 203,634,000; Nebraska, 27 and 205,767,000; Indiana, 30.3 and 137,825,000; Texas, 25.71 and 201,482,000; Kansas, 22 and 152,900,000; Ohio, 38.5 and 130,900,000; Oklahoma, 24.8 and 122,239,000; Kentucky, 25.2 and 84,823,000; Tennessee, 24.8 and 74,747,000; Georgia, 12.5 and 56,438,000; Michigan, 31.8 and 60,420,000; South Dakota, 29.7 and 57,677,000; Wisconsin, 33.7 and 49,674,000; Virginia, 26 and 48,828,000; Pennsylvania, 39.5 and 55,814,000; Alabama, 14.7 and 44,835,000; North Carolina, 18 and 50,166,000; Minnesota, 29 and 46,835,000; Arkansas, 20.2 and 52,540,000. All others 21.8 and 222,451,000.

BIG BATTLE SHIP IS LAUNCHED.

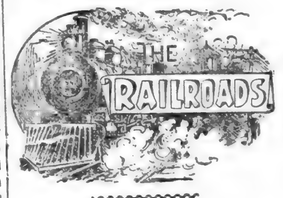
More than 10,000 persons, including representatives of two States and of the national government, gathered at the yards of the Fore River Shipbuilding Company at Quincy, Mass., to witness the launching of America's most powerful sea fighter, the North Dakota. While the North Dakota follows nearly a dozen great vessels launched at the Fore River yards, her advent into the sea was regarded as establishing a new epoch in the history of the United States navy, because of her tremendous strength, both on the attack and on the defense, by the additional thickness of her armor and by the fact that she is the first of all-big-gun ships of the navy.

The christening party came on specially from North Dakota, including Gov. John Burke and Miss Mary Benton, together with a number of officials and many women.

The North Dakota is the first American fighting ship of the so-called Dreadnaught class., When placed in commission, the ship will be 510 feet long on the load-water line, with a breadth of 85 feet, 2⅝ inches at the same point. The length over all will be about 518 feet, 9 inches. The battleship will have a displacement of 20,000 tons, 2,000 in excess of the original British Dreadnaught. It is estimated that a speed of more than twenty-one knots will be attained on her trial, and that the battleship's horse power will exceed 25,000.



The annual meeting of the Wisconsin Central Railway Company was held in Milwaukee. The yearly report shows the gross earnings of the company to have been $7,307,311.35. The operating expenses were $5,130,643.09, leaving the net earnings of the company at $2,176,668.26. The company has a surplus of $2,258,940.16 to be carried over to next year.

The Kansas State board of railroad commissioners has made a demand directly on George Gould, president, and E. H. Harriman, reported to be associated with the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, that the management of the road immediately take steps to improve the condition of the track in Kansas. The letter also stated the determination of the board to put an inspecor on the tracks and to publish weekly bulletins showing their condition and to regulate the speed of the trains accordingly.

While Spirit Lake, Hartley, Paullina, Primghar, Germantown and Le Mars have subscribed liberally towards the financing of the Sioux City & Spirit Lake interurban line, reports indicate that Sioux City, which is the terminus of the proposed line, has been slow in subscribing for stock, and an ultimatum has been issued that Sioux City must put up its money, since it is to be the principal beneficiary if the road is built. About $125,000 has been subscribed outside of Sioux City.

A union station representing an expenditure of $31,000,000 is nearing completion in Leipsic, Germany, which will be among the largest in the world. There are now five railroad stations in that city, made use of by 13 lines, and with the opening of the new station these will all be abandoned. The new structure will have 26 parallel tracks, all on the same level, to accommodate the trains of 13 different lines. The main facade of the building will be 1,115 feet wide, over 350 feet greater than that of the new Union Terminal at Washington, D. C., at present the largest in this country.

The march to Africa will begin in March.

The outlook for Thanksgiving turkeys is simply splendiferous.

The reason a woman always makes a much better decision than a man is she never does it on judgement.

The Supreme Court of Illinois has decided that foam is not beer. A blind man could have been entrusted with a question of that sort.

Looks as if Franklin Pierce Adams' defination of a Democrat as "the fellow who pays the election bets" may as well stand pat for the present.

There is general satisfaction throughout the United States both in Republican and Democratic camps, over the re-election of Charles E. Hughes as Governor of New York. His victory is deplored only by blacklegs and undesireable citizens wherever they may be.

Notwithstanding the defeat of their candidate for the presidency, there are evidently some democrats in the country. They elected their state tickets in six states, while their candidates for governor in New York and Illinois ran much ahead of Mr. Bryan. They have also gained a number of seats in the House of Representatives and in the Senate.

Consular reports indicate that a large increase of emigration is in progress from Italy to Brazil. The emigrants are going especially to the coffee producing districts and the Brazilian Goverment is indirectly paying their passage. The Italian colony in that country is already large. The fact is not generally known that Brazil is, in extent of territory, slightly larger than the United States exclusive of Alaska.

The press is amiably diverting itself making cabinets for president-elect Taft. But it is probable that the President-elect himself does not know and will not know for two or three months yet, who will compose his cabinet. One or two cabinet officers have probably been decided upon, but it is not at all likely that the coming President will make up his cabinet from those with whom he has sat in council at the cabinet table of President Roosevelt.

There are, among the members chosen to the next Congress on the Republican side a few determined men who have announced their opposition to the re-election of Speaker Cannon. This opposition may possibly grow by attrition and prevent his re-election to the speaker-ship of the Sixty-first Congress in December 1909. If the Republicans are serious in their professions of favoring tariff revision, they will elect a Speaker who will not appoint Mr. Dalzell or Mr. Payne on the Ways and Means Committee.

These Bad Pains

which give you such exquisite suffering, every month, are caused, as you know, by female trouble.

Relief seldom or never comes of itself. It is necessary to cure the cause, in order to stop the pains, and this can only be done if you will take a specific, female remedy, that acts directly on the womanly organs.

WINE OF CARDUI

WOMAN'S RELIEF

"Cardui did wonders for me," writes Mrs. H. C. Larson, of Olds, Ia. "I had female trouble for 8 years. I had displacement, which increased my suffering, the doctor could only relieve me at times. Now, I am so much better, I hardly know when my time begins or when it ends."

THE FLYING MACHINE OF TO-MORROW.

By C S. Brydia, Fairbury, Illinois.

"And God said, let us make Man in Our Image, after Our Likeness"—and then he gave man dominion.

All grain was once sown, and pulled by hand: then was invented the knife, the shears, the sickle, the scythe, the cradle, the mower, the reaper, the header, the harvester and the self-binder: now the self-binder, with the self-shocking attachment, is a success. The machine is driven through the grain, and rows of shocks of the golden grain, are the products of perfect harvest machinery.

Grain was once shelled by hand: then by the tread of the horse, the ox, the sheep or the goats or with a club called a flail, in the hands of man. Now grain is threshed by a self feeding steamer, the straw is stacked by a self-stacker, and the grain is weighed by an automatic weigher.

Dairymple, the great Bonanza wheat farmer is dead, but during his time the grain-sowing and grain-cutting, and grain-threshing facilities were of such perfection, that it was possible for one farm to grow a patch of wheat of forty thousand acres.

Grain handling machinery, including grinding, were of such perfection, that during the harvest of 1908, the harvester was started into the ripe wheat, it was cut, threshed and ground, and the flour was handed to a "help meet" of man and she kneaded it into dough, cut the dough in form and baked it, and in forty-five minutes from the time the harvester began cutting the grain, she saluted hungry men with her sweetest smile, and the invitation to "please have a hot biscuit."

Corn was first dropped by hand, covered with a stick, and tended with the same implement. Then came the grades of corn planters, and now we have the perfected two row corn planter, and its precision of drop, plants the exact number of grains wanted. The boy practice of early day planting by hand, and dropping ten kernels in a hill—"one for the black bird, two for the crow, three for the pismire and four to grow"—has grown almost into forgetfulness.

After the sharp stick came the hoe, the wooden plow, the single and double shovel, the cultivator and the riding plow: now the two-row cultivator, with umbrella top, and manipulated by a boy, successfuly tickles the soil and induces it to yield great crops of corn to gladen the hearts of corn growers. Out on the advance line of progress the farmer is husking the corn with a husking machine, putting it into the cribs with an elevator, and all the former hand-work of planting, tending, husking and cribbing corn will soon be retained only in the memory of the corn growers of the great corn belt. The husking peg is destined to soon be placed on the shelf.

Think of the phonograph, the telephone, the telegraph, the wireless telegraphy, the x ray, the various electrical devices, the photograph, the sewing machine, the cotton gin the weaving looms, the automobile, the type writer and the electric car the potatoe planter and the potatoe digger.

Think of the steel sky scrapers, the cement building products, the great ocean steamers, the diving bell the type setting machine, the printing press, the steam plow, the steam dredge and all the machinery man is using in making "the desert blossom as a rose."

Think of the labor saving devices and the humanity benefiting devices man has developed in every branch of the artisan and of the rural mail, and perfection of city and rural homes in points of convenience. Think of the foward march in surgery, the medical control of many formerly deadly diseases, and the pain eliminators that have been discovered.

In whose image are we made?

The kite of our boyhood days hed to be changed and fixed time and again. Then it sailed away in the air to the end of our longest steing, and all the string we could borrow—glorious triumph, in which thousands of us have participated. The flying machine now mounts in the air, and responds to the touch of the controling mechanism: the dirigible principle is applied with success. The thought and genius of the world are centered in developing the flying machine. Government are supporting experts striving to navigate the air. The air has already been navigated, for hundreds of miles at a single sail. A covey machines were sent up from St. Louis, and some of them alight on the northern Atlantic shore. Other trail shoe have been more successful.

In whose image are we made?

I think in the near future we will hear the flying machine whistle, louder than the sound of the steam calliope, approaching the sound of Gabriel's Horn, and of a pleasing lute; we will turn our eyes towards the coming sound; we will see a speck in the far distant clouds, approaching with the swiftness of the "wings of morning." It will circle after the fashion of our largest birds of flight, as they use the air as a successful and safety air-brake; it will alight with the grace and ease of the birds of the air. The conductor will step out of the train and exclaim: "A-l-l-a-b-o-a-r-d for St. Louis, New Orleans, Havana, Rio Janeiro, Buones Ayeres, Cape Horn, and the South Pole. A-l-l a-b-o-a-r-d." I expect my countrymen will step into the flying machine train and sail away from zone to zone, with parachute dropover privileges at intermediate points.

Attempts to Take His Life

F. D. Conrad, a well to do young man living near Leo, Allen county, is lying at the Hope hospital at Ft. Wayne, in a serious condition, but with the chances for recovery favoring him, as the result of inhaling gas fumes in his room at the Commercial hotel. He was found at 4 o'clock on Friday morning unconscious and breathing very heavily. The circumstances point very strongly to an attempt at suicide. He was unconscious until about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, when he opened his eyes and in a feeble whisper inquired where he was, then relapsed into a comatose condition. His chances for recovery are much better and unless some complications set in will live to regret his actions. Conrad had stuffed the cracks about the doors and windows of his room with pieces of his wearing apparel in order to more easily accomplish his intentions. It was the same old story of an open gas jet. Thus far, nothing has been discovered to throw any light upon the cause for his actions.

It is said by friends of Conrad, and is not denied by the direct members of the family that young Conrad has had some severe financial losses in conducting a farm for blooded hogs. He embarked in this business several years ago and for a time was measurably successful, but later on suffered several severe losses as the result of bargaining with the so called "hog sharks." Young Conrad had asked several of his Ft. Wayne friends to lend him money and he had arranged with one to obtain a good sized amount. Several weeks ago he held a sale of his line stock of hogs on his farm but this did not pan out as he expected and he has shown signs of worrying about it. The members of the family do not feel, however, that their son and brother was sufficiently perturbed over this matter to attempt to take his life.

His mother and brother accompanied by other relatives arrived in the city shortly before noon that day, and she said she could see no explanation for his deed. Saying that he left home the day before in the best of spirits, and she can hardly believe that his intentions were suicide. His mother has been at his bedside since her arrival to the city, and several times she has asked her boy to speak to her, but he can only mumble a few words, asking where he is and telling his name. Conrad registered at the hotel about 11 o'clock the night before under the name of H. Brown. He seemed perfectly calm and there was nothing about his appearance to arouse suspicions. The police found several papers and cards in his pockets the next morning, and from these it was discovered that his name was Conrad.

L. E. Shroyer and wife, of Toledo, who were in the room next to Conrad's on the second floor, heard him breathing heavily and in an endeavor to stop him, received no answer. The proprietor was immediately called and burst in the door. He detected the fumes of gas at once and hurriedly dragged the would be suicide out into the hall. Investigation showed that he had turned on the gas without lighting it. Conrad's room was only a medium sized one and with all the cracks closed up such as they were found to be, only a short time would be required to fill the room with the fumes. When Dr. S. D. Sledd arrived, he showed no trace of life and had he been left for ten minutes longer in his room at the hotel, the end for which he aimed would have been accomplished. Upon first discovery it was thought the occurance was an accident, but this was quickly dispelled when the condition of the room was perceived. Conrad had hung his overcoat over one door, and another was sealed up as tight as possible, had stuffed the side cracks with other wearing apparel and had filled the keyhole with his handkerchief.

Conrad is a man of very pleasing appearance and when he registered last evening, Mrs. Brown was particularly struck with his gentlemanly manners. He is a total stranger to the city so far as the police and the hotel people are concerned. He was not seen with anybody during the evening.

Besides the letters and cards found in his clothes there was also a revolver, a box of cartridges and $4.64 in money. His clothes were neat and well kept, and when he registered under the name of H. Brown, of Grabill, Ind., bore no signs of dissipation or mental perturbation.

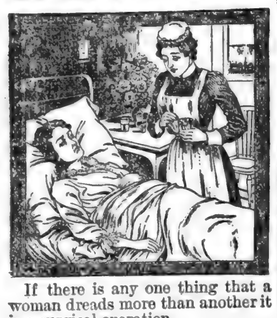
A SURGICAL OPERATION



If there is any one thing that a woman dreads more than another it is a surgical operation.

We can state without fear of a contradiction that there are hundreds, yes, thousands, of operations performed upon women in our hospitals which are entirely unnecessary and many have been avoided by

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

For proof of this statement read the following letters.

Mrs. Barbara Base, of Kingman, Kansas, writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"For eight years I suffered from the most severe form of female troubles and was told that an operation was my only hope of recovery. I wrote Mrs. Pinkham for advice, and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has saved my life and made me a well woman."

Mrs. Arthur R. House, of Church Road, Moorestown, N. J., writes:

"I feel it is my duty to let people know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I suffered from female troubles, and last March my physician decided that an operation was necessary. My husband objected, and urged me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and to-day I am well and strong."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, and backache.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

SEVERE HEMORRHOIDS,

Sores, and Itching Eczema—Doctor Thought an Operation Necessary —Cuticura's Efficacy Proven.

"I am now 80 years old, and three years ago I was taken with an attack of piles (hemorrhoids), bleeding and protruding. The doctor said the only help for me was to go to a hospital and be operated on. I tried several remedies for months, but did not get much help. During this time sores appeared which changed to a terrible itching eczema. Then I began to use Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills, injecting a quantity of Cuticura Ointment with a Cuticura Suppository Syringe. It took a month of this treatment to get me in a fairly healthy state and then I treated myself once a day for three months and, after that, once or twice a week. The treatments I tried took a lot of money, and it is fortunate that I used Cuticura. J. H. Henderson, Hopkinton, N. Y., Apr. 26, 1907."

CLOTH MADE FROM WOODS.

Factories for New Industry Established in Several Places Abroad.

United States Consul Atwell writes from Roubaix, France, to the State Department:

"Justin Miller read a paper recently before the Industrial Society of Mulhouse on certain printed goods, the warp of which is composed of cotton and the woof of a thread made from wood pulp. These goods were introduced almost four years ago. At the outset sheets of wood pulp paper were cut into finest shreds and twisted into thread by machines made for the purpose. Lately the paper process has been abandoned and the wood pulp is passed directly over grooved metal sheets, forming very thin ribbons, which pass in turn over a machine that twists them into a regular thread of any desired length.

"These threads of wood fiber are known as xyloline, silvaline and licella, and are numbered like many others. The dynamo-metric resistance of this thread in a dry state, taking 100 as the resistance of jute threads, is equal to about 55; that of cotton thread in a dry state is 135. The difference is widely in favor of jute and cotton, but it is thought that improvements may increase the resistance of the wood pulp thread. As it is to be used only in mixed goods, great resistance is not of essential importance.

"Dishcloths are made of this thread in connection with hemp and the mixture is washed, dyed and printed. While wet the wood pulp softens, but recovers its resistance in drying. There are already manufactories for the production of wood fiber thread in Germany, Spain and Netherlands, and France will shortly have a factory. It is thought that this thread may be used advantageously in the manufacture of passementerie, and that it may replace jute and cotton in the composition of many articles."

UPWARD START

After Changing from Coffee to Postum.

Many a talented person is kept back because of the interference of coffee with the nourishment of the body.

This is especially so with those whose nerves are very sensitive, as is often the case with talented persons. There is a simple, easy way to get rid of coffee evils and a Penn. lady's experience along these lines is worth considering. She says:

"Almost from the beginning of the use of coffee it hurt my stomach. By the time I was fifteen I was almost a nervous wreck, nerves all unstrung, no strength to endure the most trivial thing, either work or fun.

"There was scarcely anything I could eat that would agree with me. The little I did eat seemed to give me more trouble than it was worth. I finally quit coffee and drank hot water, but there was so little food I could digest, I was literally starving; was so weak I could not sit up long at a time.

"It was then a friend brought me a hot cup of Postum. I drank part of it and after an hour I felt as though I had had something to eat—felt strengthened. That was about five years ago and, after continuing Postum in place of coffee and gradually getting stronger, to-day I can eat and digest anything I want, walk as much as I want. My nerves are steady.

"I believe the first thing that did me any good and gave me an upward start, was Postum, and I use it altogether now instead of coffee." "There's a Reason."

POPULAR PULPIT

MYSTERIES UNAVOIDABLE.

By Rev. James B. Remensnyder.

The mysteries of God.—I. Cor. 4:1.

Man is a rational being. He wishes to understand himself and his surroundings. He likes intelligently to master his situation—to be sure of his ground—to prove his steps. But although he can know many things, he finds himself surrounded by the unknowable. The plainest facts are fenced all about by this veil of mystery. He knows that he lives, but he cannot tell whence his life came. He knows that he can lift his hand, but cannot tell how his will contracts the muscle necessary to the act.

The same mystery shrouds the realm of science. Lord Kelvin, in speaking of electricity, said: "Its secret is as sacredly guarded to-day as it was a century ago, and there is no prospect of its revelation." Yet because forces are incomprehensible, man does not deny their existence, but attempts to turn them to practical uses. "The greatest of all mysteries," says Pascal, "is to be conscious of none." The thinking man sees this realm of the unknowable and uses those facts which emerge from it for his well-being and progress.

Now, it is remarkable that many persons who think themselves rational demand that there be no mysteries in religion. Unless they can comprehend all the doctrines in which its practical duties are set, they will not heed its message. But is it not to be expected that, most of all, mystery should meet us when we come to religion, which relates to the deepest questions and the highest duties of being?

Religion treats of God. What theme could be more hinged about with mysteries? Who can penetrate the secret chamber of the Almighty? Who can set forth infinite perfection? "Canst thou," says the Book of Job, "by searching find out God? It is high as heaven, what canst thou do? Deeper than hell, what canst thou know?" But because we cannot comprehend the Being of beings, shall we turn a deaf ear to the revelation of Him which the Bible gives us? Because we cannot know Him to perfection shall we refuse to believe the comforting truth that God is love? Shall we refuse His offer to hear our prayers because our poor finite minds do not see how He can answer them?

Religion has to do with man's immortal being. Shall we here expect a revelation that our reason can altogether measure? Religion tells us what our reason could never discover—that man is immortal, that his present is a sowing for eternity, and that the righteous shall shine as the stars forever. Shall we doubt because mists still hang about the future state of being?

Very truly does Francis Bacon say: "If we submit everything to reason, our religion will have in it nothing new, heavenly or divine." A religion without mysteries could give no food for our spiritual being. Take away the deep, the blessed, the infinite aspects that robe with mystery the truths of religion, and you rob it of its power to attract, to comfort and to sway the hearts of men.

We learn here, then, how irrational is that criticism which asks the church to surrender her holy mysteries. And we note how false to their highest obligation are those ministers who discuss literary, economic or social questions—which belong to another sphere—instead of setting forth the holy mysteries of revelation.

"Let a man so account of us," says our text, "as of the ministers of the mysteries of God." The true minister has not lost faith in the divine mysteries; nor let anyone think that our modern age has passed beyond these. Were we to exchange these exhaustless themes for the dry husks of ethics, instead of filling, we would utterly empty our churches.

Man has a Godward side; he thirsts for the eternal and the infinite. And it is in the proportion that religion keeps to her sphere of ministering to this want with her unique, divine and mysterious truths, that she will be a trusted and worthy guide to lead the soul to its everlasting home.

OUR COMMON LIFE.

By Henry F. Cope.

"For none of us liveth to himself."—Romans, xiv., 7.

Whatever we have, we have through the aid of others; all that we have, we have for the aid of others. Of our own unaided strength we could gain or make nothing. Holding aught that we have for our own exclusively, it becomes as nothing to us. Co-operation in production and sharing in use and enjoyment are the twin secrets of rightly adjusted harmonious living.

Forgetting either of these simple principles we come either to inner misery or to outer failure. We never can get along with life unless we will take it on its own terms; invariably these are mutual service and sacrifice. Every tree in the forest gives its life to all others and gains its life from all other life. Individualism is impossible normally.

Mutual service and sacrifice alone are normal. The secret of living with others is living for them; our indebtedness to them we cannot escape; to endeavor to avoid the payment of the debt is to hide ourselves from our greatest happiness and from our largest opportunities of self-government. The life that withdraws into itself, either in independence or in greed, begins a process of perpetual shrinking.

The people of the open life are always happy people. We call them generous, large hearted, not because they are easily imposed upon by every mendicant, but because they have the sense of our common life; they seem to enjoy sharing life with us; they both give and take freely of all that we may have together of joy or of sorrow. They seem incapable almost of thinking in terms of individuality.

Such a life is happy, because it is in harmony with the laws of living; it is neither bent on putting the earth in its pocket, nor is it burdened with a sense of a mission to carry the world on its back; it simply shares life freely. It is the type of the friendly life. These are the kind of people we like to know even though we cannot easily estimate or make inventory of the advantages of the acquaintance.

After all, what we prize most highly in our friends, is not the goods or the cash, or the influence, or any kind of direct gifts or benefit they can bring us; it is just the privilege of sharing their lives. The riches of friendship do not depend at all on the extent of the fortunes shared; they depend on the sincerity and depth of the lives freely opened one to another.

When I am in sorrow or distress, my need is my friend himself, not his means. The latter, without the former, would be an insult; the former will always take care of the latter. When he is in need, the first impulse is that of sympathy, letting the self go out to him. We all need folks, the thoughts and feelings of people more than we need alms or dispensaries, or endowments.

Perhaps there was something greater than we have yet realized in the saying of Jesus: "Wherever two or three are gathered together in my name there am I in the midst." The greatest need and the great blessing of our humanity is this togetherness, this grouping of ourselves socially. Wherever men meet in the spirit of that great teacher, sharing their lives in human fellowship, there, if anywhere, the spirit divine is in the midst.

The finest thing ever said of the man of Nazareth was that he became the friend of the outcast. The best pictures show him in fellowship with men. He became fellow to our hard lot, touched with the feeling of all our infirmities; he shared our crust and our cheer; our anguish and bitterness were his.

We have talked about that life of the common fellowship as though it was one of exceeding pain and sorrow, as though the whole course of sharing our common lot was entirely repugnant to the nature of that great man. But was not that life the most perfectly normal one the world has seen? Would it not, therefore, be the most perfectly happy?

The life of one is found only in the life of all. Sharing life is finding it. Nothing will soothe our own pains, increase our own pleasures, or do more for this whole world than entering into fellowship with other lives, sharing our own lives, coming into the fellowship in deed and truth, as well as in sentiment with the Father's great family, with these people whom we meet in our daily toil and duties.

GROOMING COUNTS
But it cannot make a Fair Skin or a Glossy Coat.

Women with good complexions cannot be homely. Creams, lotions, washes and powders cannot make a fair skin. Every horseman knows that the satin coat of his thoroughbred comes from the animal's "all-right" condition.

Let the horse get "off his feed" and his coat turns dull. Currying, brushing and rubbing will give him a clean coat, but cannot produce the coveted smoothness and gloss of the horse's skin, which is his complexion. The ladies will see the point.

State Cures Lepers.

A remarkable medical report touching the cure of leprosy was presented to the Louisiana Assembly by the leper house of the State of Louisiana. Out of 61 lepers in the Louisiana institution in the past two years six have been practically cured. A row of modern cottages constitute the lepers' quarters. A surgical building and a small Catholic church complete this group of leper buildings. For thirteen years four to six sisters of charity, practically alone, have cared for all the wants of the lepers. None of these sisters has ever become infected with the disease, and apparently none of them fears it.

ONE KIDNEY GONE,

But Cured After Doctors Said There Was No Hope.

Sylvanus O. Verrill, Milford, Me., says: "Five years ago a bad injury paralyzed me and affected my kidneys. My back hurt me terribly, and the urine was badly disordered. Doctors said my right kidney was practically dead. They said I could never walk again. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and began using them. One box made me stronger and freer from pain. I kept on using them and in three months was able to get out on crutches, and the kidneys were acting better. I improved rapidly, discarded the crutches and to the wonder of my friends was soon completely cured."

Deafness Cannot be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

WHO HAS THE ADVANTAGE ?

The Railroad Company desires only to see you pleasantly located in this prosperous State. It makes no difference from whom you buy your land, but for your information, attention is called to the fact that the Missouri Pacific-Iron Mountain has 750,000 acres of the best farm and fruit land that it will sell you on easy terms.

THE HOMEBUILDER IN ARKANSAS

Thousands of acres of unoccupied lands await the settler in Arkansas at prices and on terms which make it possible for any man, who has the will, to build a home and secure independence upon the rich soil of one of the greatest general farming and fruit growing States of the mid-continent. These lands are now made available by the cutting up into small tracts of the large farms and plantations and the rapid clearing of timbered lands. Diversified methods are succeeding the one-crop system and room is being made for the new comer.

YOU WILL FEEL AT HOME IN ARKANSAS.

The same crops are grown in this State and the same methods of cultivation are used as in Illinois, or Iowa, Indiana, Ohio or Michigan. You can raise corn, wheat and clover, breed your thoroughbred cattle, hogs and horses, but more than that, you can raise two crops of potatoes, five crops of alfalfa, and grow sorghum, Bermuda grass, fruits and vegetables, which are not on the list of the northern farmer. You have the advantage of a long grazing season, a mild winter and the best of markets. Arkansas is in the heart of the rich Mississippi Valley; its neighbors are Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee and Kansas.

The coupon below with your name written in, will bring you our handsome 88-page book, "The Homebuilder in Arkansas." Send for it to-day.

"I tell you what," said the old maid. "They make love much faster than they used to do in my day." "Yes," replied the sweet young thing. "In your day it was a rented horse and buggy; now it's a mortgaged forty horsepower mile a minute touring car."—Detroit Free Press.

"Good gracious man!" exclaimed Ascum. "What sort of a suit is that?" "This," replied Dingley, who was attired in a combination of football, golf and riding clothes, "is what you might call a suit for damages. I'm going up to ask old Roxley for his daughter."—Philadelphia Press.

It's a gay old world when you are gay and a sad old world when you are sad. It all depends upon the point of view.

The Campaign Back Home.

You remember, though, that when the whole long line of torches got into Main street you wondered why it didn't make everything as bright as day. They must have had a thicker kind of darkness at night in those times. It soaked up more light! You wouldn't believe it—it was only when they got right close to you that you could see the tin cans of the torches wabbling in the crotches of the staves, and the red and white and blue oilcloth caps of the different companies; and only when they were right in front of Richardson's could you recognize the boys you knew walking along with their pas, holding hands with them, or else clinging to their cape-corners. Other boys' pas let them march; it was a funny thing you couldn't ever get to go. Mud up to your knees—nothing! You'd look where you were going.

But even if we could not march and go help our side win, we could cheer and wave our handkerchiefs and hope our side would win. It almost always did. It could all the time, but it got to be such a sure thing that sometimes the Republicans would say, "Oh, I guess I'll stay home and clean out the furnace. They don't need my vote," and that time the Democrats would win.—Eugene Wood, in Success Magazine.

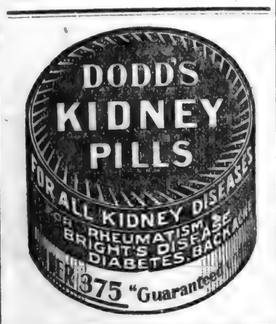
Author in "White Wing" Role.

Down in Marion, Mass., Richard Harding Davis, the author, has begun his new job of keeping the streets of that town clean. Three boys with a new push cart and a prod apiece, made out of curtain rollers, with screws on one end, the heads filed down to a point, with which they pierce scattering paper, directed by the novelist, have started in to make a record as the working force of the new department of street cleaning. Mr. Davis and Mrs. Webb Dexter offered to share the cost of the cleaning, and at an improvement association meeting recently the members elected Mr. Davis to take charge and carry out his own ideas. He hired the boys and will pay them $8 apiece for one month. The next month Mrs. Dexter will settle with them.



SOME REMARKS FROM MINNESOTA EDITORS.

What They Think of Western Canada.

A party of editors from a number of cities and towns of Minnesota recently made a tour of Western Canada, and having returned to their homes they are now telling in their respective newspapers of what they saw on their Canadian trip. The West St. Paul Times recalls the excursion of the Minnesota editors from Winnipeg to the Pacific Coast ten years ago. Referring to what has happened in the interval the writer says: "Thousands of miles of new railway lines have been built, and the development of the country has made marvelous strides. Millions of acres, then lying in their wild and untouched state, have since been transferred into grain fields. Towns have sprung up as if by the wand of a magician, and their development is now in full progress. It is a revelation, a record of conquest by settlement that is remarkable."

The Hutchinson Leader characterizes Western Canada as "a great country undeveloped. The summer outing," it says, "was an eye-opener to every member of the party, even those who were on the excursion through Western Canada ten years ago, over considerable of the territory covered this year, being amazed at the progress and advancement made in that short space of time. The time will come when Western Canada will be the bread-basket of the world. It was a delightful outing through a great country of wonderful possibilities and resources."

Since the visit of these editors the government has revised its land regulations and it is now possible to secure 160 acres of wheat land at $3 an acre in addition to the 160 acres that may be homesteaded.

The crops of 1908 have been splendid, and reports from the various districts show good yields, which at present prices will give excellent profits to the farmers.

From Milestone, Saskatchewan, there are reported yields of thirty bushels of spring wheat to the acre, while the average is about twenty bushels. The quantity of grain to be shipped from this point will be about 600,000 bushels. Information regarding free lands and transportation will be freely given by the Canadian government agents.

They Wanted Wages.

The conductor of an orchestra who wanted to engage his soloists last year with as little expense as possible, finds that it has not been as easy to make this season the same satisfactory arrangement. He offered the artists as a fee a certain share of the gross receipts. When the soloists accepted this arrangement they did not know the small size of the receipts usually. When one popular player got $40 as his share, however, the bubble burst.

"It was not my fault that you received so little," said the conductor. "If there had been more people anxious to hear you there would have been a larger audience and your share would have been more. So long as you did not draw the money, I don't see why I should be called on to pay you any more."

This artist, discomfited, as he was, at the time, felt that he must have a very strong hold on the public heart when he heard of another soloist who received less than $25 as his fee.

Inducement for Home Seekers.

That part of the State of Arkansas along the line of the Missouri Pacific railroad offers great inducement for settlers. The land is rich and for raising all kinds of crops has no equal anywhere. Book, map, list of lands for sale, and other valuable information furnished free by B. H. Payne, Gen. Pass. & Ticket Agent, Room 1554, Missouri Pacific Building, St. Louis, Mo.

Out of nearly 220,000 miles of railways in the United States only 4,000 miles are equipped with block signals.

The General Demand

of the Well-Informed of the World has always been for a simple, pleasant and efficient liquid laxative remedy of known value; a laxative which physicians could sanction for family use because its component parts are known to them to be wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, acceptable to the system and gentle, yet prompt, in action.

In supplying that demand with its excellent combination of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, the California Fig Syrup Co. proceeds along ethical lines and relies on the merits of the laxative for its remarkable success.

That is one of many reasons why Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is given the preference by the Well-Informed. To get its beneficial effects always buy the genuine—manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists. Price fifty cents per bottle.

WESTERN CANADA THE PENNANT WINNER

"The Last Best West."

The Government of Canada now gives to every Actual Settler 160 acres of wheat-growing land free and an additional 160 acres at $3.00 an acre.

The 300,000 contented American Settlers making their homes in Western Canada is the best evidence of the superiority of that country. They are becoming rich, growing from 25 to 50 bushels wheat to the acre; 60 to 110 bushels oats and 45 to 60 bushels barley, besides having splendid herds of cattle raised on the prairie grass. Dairying is an important industry.

The crop of 1908 still keeps Western Canada in the lead. The world will soon look to it as its food-producer.

"The thing which most impressed us was the magnitude of the country that is available for agricultural purposes."—National Editorial Correspondence, 1908.

VOL. XXII. ST. JOE, DEKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, WEDNESDAY, NOV. 25 1908. NO. 48

Thanksgiving Day

Tomorrow is Thanksgiving Day and it will be observed here by a suspension of business for a part of the day at least. It is expected that most stores will close for a few hours. All the laborers will no doubt enjoy this day by giving their special attention to Mr. Turkey.

Thanksgiving day is an ancient institution, handed down from our English ancestors, who in the fall of the year set aside a day of praise which they named the "Harvest Home Festival." The Pilgrims followed this course in the autumn following their landing on the bleak shores of the Atlantic, and their descendants have observed one day of praise for the blessings received during the year.

Of late years the holiday has degenerated into a day of feasting and merry-making, with comparatively little thought given to the benefits which have come to us as a nation and as individuals during the course of the year. Those citizens of this great republic who do not recognize the ruling of a divine providence in their affairs are very few, and while it is right for all to enjoy a feast of the good things which that providence has granted to the majority, it is no more than right that the munificence of the great giver should receive a devout recognition.

There will be four eclipses in 1909—two of the run and two of the moon. The eclipses of the moon on June 3 and November 26 will be total. There will be partial eclipses of the sun June 17 and December 12.

BIG FOUR STORE.

Had a Good Crowd.

The High School had a good crowd last Friday night, it being estimated at about 300. This was an exceptional crowd for a box social. Our citizens all turned out patronizing a thing most complimentary to them. Many strange faces were present which shows the effective work of good advertising.

The program was of a musical nature and was enjoyed and appreciated by everyone present as all the participants did splendidly. The boxes were auctioneered by Mr. Rhodenbaugh. The "sporting blood" seemed at low tide with the boys but Mr. Rhodenbaugh managed them well.

The judges, Mrs. Ed Leighty, Mrs Buchanan and Mrs. Hathaway had a difficult time in determining which of the boxes were the prettiest as all of them were very nice but they finally decided the first prize to Miss Ethel Leighty '08 and Miss Laura Woodcox '08 and the second prize to Miss Helen Patterson '09 and Miss Ethel Berry '05. The prize for the most popular young lady of the evening went to Miss Avis Schler '12 by a small majority of votes. Miss Sechler had many competitors running very close to her which shows what a lot of popular young ladies St. Joe has. The lunch was a very profitable addition to the social. The boxes had scarcely been sold before the waiters were over run with orders. In all the high school took in $26. Everybody had a good enjoyable time and the social was a success in every detail. The school appreciates very much the kindness of those who hleped them with the evenings entertainment, also the loyal patronage of the many citizens and thank them accordingly.

The next thing the students are going to do is to give a play a little after the holidays the exact date not having been determined as yet. Judging from the Box Social it will undoubtedly be alright and the school be justified in depending doubly on the citizens this time as it is easily seen that the people are beginning to see that the high school is not a foreign institution to which they need not pay any attention, but that it is right here at home and rightfully demands their interest and support.

Harlan Boys Trim Butler

The Harlan High School Basket Ball Team accompanied by a few fans went over the Wabash to Butler Saturday to fulfill an engagement with the High School Team of that place. Our boys were entertained at Murch's Restaurant and after doning their uniforms went from that place to the High School Campus about 1.30. Play was called at 2.30. The arrangement of Harlan's players were as follows:—center, Wearley; forwards, Walter and Thompson; guards, J. Goldsmith and Stopher. Harlan took the lead in the first half by five scores but Butler gave our team a merry chase and nearly caught them before the half ended, the score being 10 and 9 in Harlan's favor. At the beginning of the second half Harlan placed F. Goldsmith in Thompson's place. Again the score was very close for at times there was but a difference of a few points although Harlan remained in the lead during the entire game, which ended by the score of 20 to 16. Harlan made six field goals and eight foul goals, while Butler made five field goals and six foul goals. Harlan made nineteen fouls to Butler's eighteen. Our boys were accompanied to the restaurant by a number of the players and High School Students especially the ladies. After supper a large number bid us farewell at the Depot. In conclusion they were well pleased with the treatment they received. Both teams seemed to hold in mind the idea of sport and did not enter the game with the "God of Victory" before their eyes, which has degenerated so many games and placed all branches of atheletics upon a low basis.

HARLAN H. S. ITEMS.

History will recite in the recitation room from Monday until further notice.

Rev. Polhemus visited the school last Wednesday morning and gave a very interesting talk upon "Requisites of Success."

Mable Haifley will be out of school for some time on account of a broken arm received on the way to school last Friday morning in a run away. Lawrence Criswell drives and Miss Haifley rides with him. The horse became uncontrollable and turned the buggy over in front of William Value's blacksmith shop.

David and Frank Goldsmith were in Wayne Friday on business.

Rink will be open on Thanksgiving afternoon and evening.

At St. Joe.

Aldrich Ringwalt had a finger thrown out of place last Thursday while playing basket ball.

Dora Myers visited the school last Wednesday and will probably reenter the school making seventeen in the senior class.

The manager of the basket ball team called a meeting last Thursday evening to decide upon a referee and other business matters concerning the game with Butler on Saturday.

Prof. Smith entertained Miss Corbin of Churubusco from Friday until Monday. Miss Corbin rendered a number of musical selections Monday morning which were enjoyed very much.

Former Resident Dies

Mrs. George Bleeks received word Monday, that her sister, Mrs. Julia (Tiffany) McColley, who lives near Pinkstaff, Illinois, has died. A great many of our readers will remember her as she was raised near Newville Center, three miles east of St. Joe. Some forty years ago she moved to Illinois and after suffering for some time with cancer, she was called to her eternal home. She passed away Monday morning and the funeral was held Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. McColley was 72 years old and leaves a husband and two daughters.

Enlarges Business

George Hurni the cigar manufacturer whose brands "Good Nickle" and "Aerie King" have brought him more than a local reputation, has rented the room formerly occupied by the Home restaurant on Randolph street, and will in the future conduct a retail as well as wholesale business. The opening of his new business home was Monday evening, and his good reputation as a manufacturer should ensure him a liberal patronage as a retailer. —Garrett Press.

Boys Kill Aged Man.

The arrest at Vineland, N. J., of Walter Zeller, 19 years old, and Cline Wheeler, his 20-year-old companion, charged with the murder of William Read, the grandfather of Zeller, has caused a sensation in that section of the State. Zeller has confessed to the murder plot but seeks to lay the actual commission of the crime upon Wheeler. Herbert Grigg, another 19-year-old boy, who is implicated in the confession, has disappeared from his father's farm. Zeller and Wheeler have admitted that the motive was robbery. Read was more than 70 years old and quite wealthy. The aged man was found dead in his room, he having been shot and beaten. Much of the money the old man was in the habit of displaying, was missing and the police immediately decided that robbery was the motive.

Graft Trial Proceeds at San Francisco.

With motions by the defense for a change of venue, thirty days' delay, the dismissal of the jury and a motion to poll the jury to ascertain whether the men were affected by the shooting of Francis Heney all denied by Judge Lawyor, the actual trial of Abe Ruef, the grafting boss of San Francisco, was resumed, and the indications are that it will be pushed to a speedy culmination. San Francisco is a unit in the demand that justice be no longer delayed. James J. Gallagher, who headed the boodling board of supervisors and distributed Ruef's graft money, was the first witness called to the stand when the trial was resumed. He was on the stand when Morris Haas made his unsuccessful attempt to assassinate Prosecutor Heney.

Ship Brings News of Massacre.

The steamship Moana, which arrived in Victoria, B. C., from Australia, brought news of a massacre in the Rock Islands, belonging to New Pommern, where for some unexplained reason the natives killed thirty of their women folk. It is the intention of the Germans to send a punitive expedition there. News was also brought of a massacre at Santos, in the New Hebrides, where Peter C. Grig, 51 years of age, and his two daughters were murdered by a mob of natives. Santos had been regarded as a Christian center and settlers were regarded as safe. The massacre took place within a short distance of the mission station, to which the surviving member of the family—a boy 14 years old—made his escape.

$30,000,000 Issue of Panama Bonds.

A dispatch from Washington says: Secretary Cortelyou has just made public announcement that he would receive bids up to the close of business on December 5 next for $30,000,000 Panama Canal bonds, or any part thereof, to bear 2 per cent. interest. The bonds will be dated November 1, 1908, thus making this a new issue, and interest will begin as of that date. The bonds, by the terms of the law authorizing their issue, will be redeemable in gold in ten years from their date and payable in thirty years. As an evidence of good faith the Secretary requires each bid to be accompanied by a certified check payable to the Secretary of the Treasury for 2 per cent. of the amount of the bid.

The biggest robbery in the history of South Bend was pulled of Saturday night by robbers, who plundered the South Bend postoffice of $18,653 and made such a successful getaway that postoffice inspectors and police are without a clew on which to conduct their investigation. The plunder was all stamps.

The robbery was discovered at 8:30 o'clock Sunday morning by a clerk in a building one door north of the room temporarily occupied for postoffice purposes during the erection of the new $100,000 building. The clerk having occation to enter the store found it impossible to open either entrance to which he had keys, and suspecting that something was wrong, called Patrolman Parker. Throwing their weight against the doors, they forced an entrance, and examination showed that they had been fastened by large screw hooks.

A hole 14x14 inches had been electrically drilled through the fourteen-inch fireproof wall, forming one side of the postoffice vault, through which one of the robbers had entered and passed the plunder to his confederates. That the robbery was committed by experts is shown by precautions used to prevent discovery, and that the men worked so skillfully that the night force of mailing clerks within 100 feet of the vault had no knowledge of what was taking place.

Before beginning operations on the wall the robbers covered the floor and stairway with scores of blankets and quilts taken from the stock of the store, and also hung a thick quilt on the north wall of the vault under which the drilling was done. As the bricks were loosened they were pulled out of the driller's way by means of a small tackle and pulley, which was left behind. Marking in the dust of the stairway showed that a lookout was stationed in a position which would give him a full view of the street through the big windows in front of the store. The roundabout method taken to get within reach of the vault shows that the plan of the building had been carefully studied for weeks. At no time during the night was the postoffice unguarded, two clerks being in the mailing and sorting room.

The electric drill used by the robbers was worked by power taken from lighting wires less than twenty feet from the wall, the wires being detached from a desk lamp in the office of the Household company. The drills, picks and other tools, all new, and a bottle of nitroglycerin, which was probably to be used in case a steel lining to the vault was found, were all left behind.

GRIDIRON'S 1908 TOLL.

"Debrutalized" Football Continues Appalling Record of Fatalities

"Debrutalized" football has been as brutal as ever in the season of 1908. The toll in gridiron warfare between colleges, high schools and athletic clubs is ten dead and 290 injured. The adoption of a more open scheme of play has failed for the third season to realize the hopes of the supporters of the game that a cleaner record could be shown. Fatalities have been reduced to no appreciable extent and more players have been injured thus far than were hurt in the season of 1905, when the appalling record prompted coaches and college heads to revise the rules.

In the record-breaking year preceding the revision of the game twenty-four players were killed and 200 injured. Although the number of dead this season is not as large as in 1905, ninety more mishaps than were reported in that year already have been recorded, and it is considered probable that before the final games are played the total of injured will surpass the record of 1904, when 296 players were on the hospital lists. The record of football deaths and serious injury for eight years beginning in 1901, is: Dead, 113; injured, 1,355.

Total deaths	10
Total injured	290
College players killed	3
High school players killed	2
Athletic members killed	5
College players injured	166
High school players injured	77
Athletic members injured	47

The record of killed and injured in the eight years' since 1901 is given below:

Year.	Deaths.	Inj'd.	Year.	Deaths.	Inj'd.
1901	7	74	1905	24	200
1902	15	106	1906	14	160
1903	14	63	1907	15	168
1904	14	296	1908	10	290

NUBBINS OF FARM NEWS.

Kansas had 6,000,000 acres of wheat this year. The crop was generally good.

Washington State had the biggest crop of apples, peaches and pears that it has ever produced.

There are about 6,000,000 farms in the United States. Every third farm is occupied by a renter.

Kalamazoo, Mich., the great celery section, had the largest crop of that vegetable that has ever been raised there.

Leo Kelby of St. Paul has an apple tree that has bloomed a second time this year after producing a crop of apples.

Last year the dairy products of the country alone were worth nearly $800,000,000, much more than any other crop except corn.

It is estimated that through lax and improper methods in the handling of milk and cream a loss of over $5,000,000 results annually.

PRISON DOOR CLOSES ON A $750,000 FORGER

SENTENCE IS 1 TO 14 YEARS.

Skillful Juggling of Bogus Notes and Deeds Dupes 25 Persons and Extends Over 18-Year Period.

Confessing his authorship of an endless chain of forgeries involving more than $750,000, Peter Van Vlissingen, for many years a prominent Chicago real estate man and once reputed wealthy, was indicted, tried and sentenced to the penitentiary Monday afternoon for a term of from one to fourteen years. The amazing revelations of how a man who ranked high among his associates could carry out a gigantic swindle in which he victimized more than a score of persons—a number of them close friends—out of $700,000 came like a thunderbolt. He first confessed to his crime Saturday to two friends. At noon Monday the case was presented to the State's Attorney, and thereafter steps toward sending Van Vlissingen to a felon's cell were taken with remarkable rapidity.

The confession of the real estate man revealed a scheme of systematic and cunning forgery of notes and real estate trust deeds and mortgages extending over a period of eighteen years. For years Van Vlissingen practiced a system of forgery that did not arouse suspicion. Even his own nephew, John A. Vanderpoel, his chief clerk, was wholly ignorant of the swindles being perpetrated almost under his eyes.

Van Vlissingen's scheme was to loan money and take a mortgage or trust deed as security. The notes and securities would be made out in due form signed, approved by Vanderpoel, and recorded with the county recorder. Van Vlissingen would then lock himself in his private office, where he had a desk specially designed to aid him in forgery. In the top of this desk was a small hole covered with a piece of glass, beneath which was an incandescent light. Placing the genuine mortgage on the glass he would cover it with a similar blank form and turn on the light below the desk. The signatures and notations on the genuine instrument were outlined on the blank by the light. The signatures were then traced by the real-estate man, and forgeries were turned out which were practically as good as the original.

Sometimes the forger made one, and in several instances two, copies of the original mortgage and sold them. The genuine he sold in Chicago, the spurious ones in New England, in Western and Southern States, and in Germany and Holland, his native country. To make the forgeries perfect, Van Vlissingen counterfeited the signature of the county recorder. For nearly two decades he managed to liquidate the fraudulent paper when it fell due and in that way avoided exposure, but recently he became unable to meet the demands of this endless chain, and, despairing of further immunity, confessed his guilt.

BRIEF NEWS ITEMS.

Exploitation of the railroads by the State in Belgium has resulted this year in a $2,000,000 loss to the State.

Lord Northcliffe, the British newspaper owner, has given the Plymouth church of Brooklyn a stained glass memorial window.

The Minnesota State twine plant promises to pay $1,000,000 into the State treasury during November, and as a result it is expected that the State will get along with borrowing $500,000 instead of twice that amount usually borrowed at this time of the year.

The St. Paul road reports that during the 1908 season 4,425 cars of wheat have been shipped from the 43 towns on the James River division, and it is estimated that 6,403 will be shipped before the close of the season. The estimate for the 26 towns on the Hastings and Dakota division is 7,466 cars.

GOOD TIME TO BUILD.

Prices of Material Are Low and Contractors Are Anxious for Work.

Country Life in America has been looking up the building situation and as a result declares that there has not been such another chance in years for people to build cheaply and well. The prices of material have fallen so, contractors are anxious to obtain work, and labor is so ready to jump at the chance of assured wages, that a saving of from 10 to 20 per cent in cost, depending on the section of the country, can be made in all domestic architecture. Lumber is lower now than it will probably ever be again. Brick is almost a drug on the market. Good workmen are not yet busy and are not hard to find. In some localities, according to the magazine, the conditions are so improved for the person about to erect a home that he can do 30 to 40 per cent better than in 1907. However, these extremes are unusual and occur in only a few sections.

The American Lumberman declares that prices are from 20 to 25 per cent lower on lumber in the west and south than they will be in a few months. Brick is 25 per cent under last year's schedules. Grades which brought $7 and $8 in New York in October, 1907, are selling at $4.50 and $5 a thousand now. Common brick was quoted in Chicago for $5.10 to $5.25 in 1907. The prices run $3.50 to $3.75 there to-day. The saving on domestic cement in Chicago is 34.6 per cent, and in New York about 30 per cent. Plumbing rates are down about 25 per cent from the figures of the first of the year. Hardware for domestic purposes is about 20 per cent cheaper. So it goes throughout the list of materials.

To Make the Negro Work.

Charlotte Perkins Gilman, in the American Journal of Sociology, offers as a solution of the negro problem that the whole body of our negro population that is in a degenerate condition from whatever causes be organized into a great industrial army, controlled by the State and under strict military discipline. This army should have uniforms, decorations, titles, ceremonies and a careful system of grading, membership to be a sign of honor and advancement. Enough should be placed upon farms to provide for the entire body, and the farms should be in themselves schools of efficiency. Others should be placed in shops and mills to clothe the rest and provide other articles of necessity. But the main occupation of the great organization would be in the construction of better roads. Mrs. Gilman argues that with kind, but firm, treatment, good living, reasonable hours and the absence of the strain of personal initiative which tells upon the negro in ordinary life competition, a great amount of useful work and betterment could be thus performed. But as fast as the individuals proved their capacity to work undergraduated with honor, thus the institution being compulsory at the bottom and free at the top.

A road made from sand and sawdust is the latest style of roadmaking designed by George W. Cooney, Minnesota State highway engineer. Last spring he made a section of road with clover and rye on a sand foundation. This has been very successful. The road made from sand and sawdust is at Cambridge, in Isanti county. Four inches of sawdust were raked on the sand road after being graded. This was worked into the sand by passing teams, and as fast as ruts are formed the sawdust was raked into the ruts, to be further mixed with sand.

FRISCO PROSECUTOR SHOT.

Ex-Convict, Exposed in Jury Box as Former Felon Attacks Him.

Francis J. Heney, special prosecutor of the accused grafters of San Francisco, was shot and seriously injured late Friday afternoon by Morris Haas, a saloon keeper and ex-convict, while seated in court during the third trial of Abraham Ruef for bribery.

Heney has been the leading official in the prosecution of municipal corruption in San Francisco. In the second Ruef trial Haas had been passed as a juror when one day in court Heney dramatically produced a photograph of him taken at San Quentin penitentiary, taken in convict's garb and cropped head and with his number across his breast. Haas collapsed in court, admitted he had been a convict, and was immediately discharged from the jury. He says Heney's uncovering of his past had ruined his business.

The shooting occurred at 4:22 o'clock in the afternoon. Judge Lawlor had a few moments before declared a five minutes' recess of court and the jury had left the room. Former Supervisor Gallagher was in the witness chair, and Heney, seated at a table a few feet away, was talking with him. Haas came in, walked behind Heney, and without a word, when only four feet away, fired a revolver, hitting Heney in the right side of the head.

As soon as Heney was shot Judge Lawler ordered the doors of the courtroom closed and no one was allowed to leave. The room is small and was crowded with spectators. There was no violence attempted toward Haas, the people in the courtroom and the judge apparently being stunned by the enormity of the deed. The wounded man was removed in an ambulance and Haas, heavily guarded by police, was taken away to jail.

The physicians in attendance on Heney expressed the opinion that he would live. They ascertained that the bullet, which had entered the right cheek, had lodged under the left ear and had not entered his brain as at first feared.

RETIRING JUSTICES.

Taft Will Have Filling of Four Places on Supreme Court.

Associate Justice Rufus W. Peckham reached his 70th year Saturday and consequently adds another to the list of members of the Supreme Court who are eligible to retirement. The law permits justices to retire with full pay when they have reached the age of 70, though a few members who have been blessed with robust health have waived the rule.

Now that the complexion of the national administration has been settled for four years to come, it would not be surprising if there should be some changes in the personnel of the Supreme tribunal before many months have elapsed. With Justice Peckham, there are four members of the court who have passed the retiring age.

These are Melville W. Fuller, chief justice, who is 75; John M. Harlan, associate justice, who is only three months the junior of the chief justice; David J. Brewer, associate justice, who will be 71 next June.

President Roosevelt is not likely to have an opportunity to name a member of the Supreme Court, but his successor will in all probability have the naming of at least four to take the place of those now eligible to retire.

METCALF QUITS POST.

Secretary of Navy to Be Succeeded by Truman H. Newberry.

Secretary of the Navy Metcalf has tendered his resignation to President Roosevelt to take effect Dec. 1, and Assistant Secretary Newberry of Michigan has been chosen by the President as his successor. Mr. Metcalf retires on account of his poor health, and after a period of rest and recuperation expects to return to the practice of law in California. He retires, a Washington correspondent says, with the good will of President Roosevelt and his cabinet associates.

Truman H. Newberry, th new Secretary of the Navy, is one of the younger men called to public life by President Roosevelt. For some time during the illness of Mr. Metcalf he has virtually been at the head of the department. The new secretary, it is said, is not only an efficient official, but is popular in the naval world and in society generally.

Tuberculosis Inoculation Test.

One of the startling features of the tuberculosis congress was the actual experiment begun to determine the value of a new method of diagnosing the disease, advanced by Dr. Detre, head of the bacteriological department of the University of Buda-Pesth. Ten children in a charity hospital who had already incipient tuberculosis, ranging in age from 3 to 10 years, were inoculated in the arm at three points at the same time: First, with Koch's tuberculin; second, with a filitrate of broth culture of human tuberculosis, and, third, with a broth culture of bovine bacillus. The primary object is to ascertain whether the original infection was from human or bovine sources.

Complete returns received at St. Johns, N. F., show that Sir John Bond, the premier, and Sir Edward Morris, leader of the opposition forces, will each have eighteen supporters in the Legislature. The situation may be settled only by ordering another general election.

William A. Adler, former president of the defunct State National Bank of New Orleans, returned to that city from Honduras to stand trial on federal indictments charging misapplication of $288,000 of the bank's funds.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The weekly review of Chicago trade published by R. G. Dun & Co. says:

"Largely increased payments through the banks, rising security values and improving demand for most staple important developments this week, and there is also more distinct evidence of recovery in trade. The leading industries exhibit increasing activity, not to keep with heavier movements of finished products and commodities.

"Grain operations remain restricted by comparison with a year ago, but forwarding of flour is remarkably extensive, and liberal arrivals of live stock enter into prompt absorption and permit increased packing.

"A much better tone characterizes iron, wood and leather working lines. Prices of crude materials for factory conversion show more firmness, although new demands are yet somewhat restricted and most buying is confined to immediate needs.

"Lumber dealings make a closer return to normal proportions, and there is exceptionally good request for planing mill outputs, plumbing and building materials.

"Weather conditions generally were favorable to a wider demand for seasonable goods, and both city and country sales are making the expected progress. Christmas wares have been bought freely, and the wholesale lines obtain mail orders for notable spring deliveries of dry goods, woolens, furniture, footwear and food products.

"Money is quoted from 4 to 5 per cent. Deposits exceed all previous aggregates and the banks extend their efforts to secure desirable commercial paper.

"Bank clearings, $259,823,622, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1907 by 32.3 per cent, and compare with $248,245,386 in 1906. Failures reported in the Chicago district number 28, against 24 last week, 26 in 1907 and 27 in 1906. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 10, against 7 last week, 7 in 1907 and 11 in 1906."

NEW YORK.

Expansion continues in trade and industrial lines, shipments over the railways are increasing, idleness is being diminished, prices in numerous lines are higher, collections are better, and sentiment is brighter than it has been for twelve months past.

In many sections retailers' stocks are badly broken, owing to conservative purchases heretofore made, and as a result requests for immediate shipments are quite the rule.

Demand for holiday goods is increasing. Practically every section, save the South, and where the supply of water has been insufficient for industrial operations, as, for instance, parts of New England, has shared in the general improvement.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Nov. 12 number 207, against 205 last week, 239 in the like week of 1907, 222 in 1906, 198 in 1905, and 190 in 1904. Business failures in Canada for the week number 22, which compares with 33 last week and 45 in this week last year.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

The steamer Kroonland and Finland, of the Red Star line, are in the future to fly the flag of Belgium.

Commercial failures in the United States during October were 1,187 in number and $15,898,668 in amount of defaulted indebtedness, according to statistics compiled by R. G. Dun & Co. This is a slight increase in number as compared with the 1,139 defaults in the corresponding month last year, but there is a striking reduction in liabilities, which amount to $27,414,900 in October, 1907.

Aunt Diana

The Sunshine of the Family

CHAPTER IX.

Miss Carrington received a letter from Alison soon after this, the conclusion of which made her smile; but that was not Alison's fault. Roger had taken possession of the half-finished sheet of note paper and had filled it after his own fashion, adding a lengthy message from Rudel. Alison protested in vain; the letter must go with Rogers' appendix or else a day's post would be lost.

"We have good times now and then, and get up a laugh and astonish ourselves. One thing, I have enjoyed my breakfast for the last three weeks. No more luke warm coffee, poured out with an acidulated smile, we have the real thing in smiles now. There, I think I have inflicted enough on you, so I will subscribe myself,

"Your affectionate and grateful nephew,
"ROGER."

When Miss Carrington read this letter to Mr. Moore, on the old bench by the river, a pleased look came over the old man's face.

"I like that lad," he said, striking his ivory-headed stick into the ground. "I remember his voice pleased me when he was here some years ago; a good honest voice it was. Mark my words, Miss Diana, our little sunbeam is fulfilling her mission."

"I think Roger is all the happier for having his sister," returned Miss Carrington, with a sigh.

"Oh," he said, turning his sightless face toward her quickly, "you are missing the child, and so am I. Sunny is beyond our reach just now; one can not help wishing her back sometimes. For my part, I had no idea how sorely I should miss my little pupil."

"I always knew what her loss would be to me," returned Miss Carrington, with some emotion; "that is the worst of isolating one's affections. I have so few who are absolutely necessary to me; only you and Greville and Allie—three out of this world full of millions; it seems wrong somehow."

"The fewer to love—the fewer to leave," replied the old man, somewhat dreamily.

"Do you know," observed Miss Carrington, a little abruptly, "that Greville is very angry with me for sending Allie away?"

"Oh, he has written to you, has he?" with a half smile, for he had already received a stormy letter from his grandson on the same subject.

"Yes; he is as indignant as possible about the sacrifice, as he terms it. He calls me shabby for not letting him into the secret; he declares he shall go round by Chesterton on his way home and have it out with Alison; but I have put a stop to that."

"What! you deprived him and Sunny of that poor little pleasure? What a hard-hearted woman you are, Miss Diana! and yet you were young yourself once."

"My dear friend, it would not do at all," returned Miss Carrington, in her most resolute tone. "You spoil that boy so dreadfully that you give in to all his whims. You want me to keep you all in order."

"But where would be the harm?" persisted Mr. Moore, smiling. "Just a call and a chat; why, it would do Sunny good."

"No, no; it would only unsettle her. Greville shall go down to The Holms some day, but not just yet. Allie will get on better if we leave her entirely to herself the first few months. Why, unless things go very wrong, I do not intend to go down myself until next spring. But Greville, oh, no; I told him on no account to do it."

"And you expect him to obey you, I suppose?"

"Oh, yes, he will obey me now. Later on, perhaps—But we shall see. I am sure it would be only cruel kindness for Greville to unsettle her. She frets enough after us, I am sure of that, and seeing him will only bring us more vividly before her. Besides, there are other reasons; but, my good old friend, you do not often distrust my wisdom."

"Nor do I now," he returned, slowly. "I was only putting myself in my boy's place, and thinking how he must long for a glimpse of Sunny. Have it your own way, Miss Diana; Greville is almost as much your boy as he is mine, and I know you would not cross him if you could help it."

"No, indeed," she replied, very gently; "I think you, and Greville, too, may trust me." And then the conversation dropped.

CHAPTER X.

"Roger, does it not seem strange that Miss Hardwick never brings her sister to The Holms?"

"Well, no, Allie. I am too profound a student of human nature to think anything strange. You women know how to tyrannize over one another. Revenge is sweet, even to the feminine mind. Poor Miss Anna is expiating the offense of having excited our commiseration. The fiat has gone forth—her days at The Holms are numbered."

"I took rather a fancy to the poor little thing, and I hoped to have been of some use to her—she seems so utterly devoid of friends."

Alison and Roger were walking down a country road. The evening was sultry, and Roger had invited his sister to accompany him in one of their pleasant strolls. There was a moment's silence after Roger's speech, and then he began again—but this time there was a glimmer of mischief in his eyes.

"Allie, what should you say if I should promise to bring you and Miss Anna together in less than half an hour?"

"I should say you were a magician," returned Alison.

"Nevertheless, the thing shall be done," was his oracular reply, and then he said quickly, "Look at the clouds, Allie; we shall have a thunder storm directly." Alison gave a startled glance at the sky; there was no mistaking the gathering blackness overhead.

"What shall we do?" she exclaimed, in a disconcerted voice. "I have my new hat on, and this nice clean cambric, and we have no umbrella, and there is not a house in sight."

"All right," was Roger's cheerful response; "things are just as they should be. Walk as fast as you can; in less than ten minutes we shall be at the gate of Maplewood. Could anything be more cleverly arranged? Of course we must take refuge from the impending storm. They will be compelled to house us for an hour at least."

"Oh, Roger, what a good idea," exclaimed Alison, laughing. "Please let us make haste, though, or we shall never reach Maplewood in time." And Alison quickened her walk into a run. But the heavy drops pelted on her before she took refuge in the portico.

Before Roger could lift his hand to the knocker, the door was flung open, and Anna stood on the threshold.

"I saw you both running down the road," she exclaimed, eagerly. "I knew you would take refuge here from the rain; there is going to be such a heavy storm, and I was just beginning to feel frightened at the thought of being alone in it, but I don't mind a bit now."

"Do you mean that Mrs. Hardwick and your sister are out?" asked Roger, as he shook Alison's light mantle, which was already wet.

"Yes, they are out dining. There is to be a dance afterward, so they will be very late. Do you mind my taking you into the morning room? I have some work that I must finish, or Eva will be disappointed, but I can talk to you all the same. Oh, it is so nice to see you again," looking at Alison affectionately.

"Is it not nice to see me, too?" asked Roger, in a comical tone. "I don't think you ought to leave me out in the cold, Miss Anna."

Anna laughed and blushed at this, then she said, very prettily, in her childish way, "Oh, I am glad to see you, too, but I never thought of telling you so. Will you ring, Mr. Roger? and then Morton will bring us some tea. Please take that easy chair by the window, Miss Merle—it is Eva's favorite seat, because there is such a pretty view of the garden."

"No, indeed, I am going to help you," returned Alison, laying her hat aside, and pulling off her long gloves. "Oh, you poor child, what a task!" as she inspected Anna's work. She was trimming an Indian muslin gown with coffee-colored lace.

"Yes, is it not pretty?" returned Anna, innocently. "Eva means to wear it at our garden party on Thursday. You and Mr. Roger are both coming, are you not?"

"We are not invited," returned Alison, a little gravely, as she took a thimble from her pocket, and helped herself unasked to a needle and thread. "I am going on with that flounce," she continued, quietly, "so you have nothing to do but to talk to me and Roger."

"Oh, how kind you are!" returned Anna, gratefully. "The thunder always makes my head ache a little, and I have been working all the afternoon, and it was so hot; indeed," interrupting herself, "Eva was writing out your notes of invitation to-day. I think she gave them to Mabel. I am sorry," flushing a little as she spoke, "that you should have them so late, but Eva is always so busy."

"So is some one else always busy," observed Roger, with a pitying glance at the girl's tired face. Both he and Alison thought she looked thinner and paler than when they saw her last; her blue eyes looked large and heavy, and the veins of the forehead were marked too clearly; her fair hair was strained from her face and coiled somewhat untidy, and her gray linen dress looked tumbled and far from fresh.

"I am afraid you will have to house us for a good hour or more," Roger observed, "for the weather means mischief, and in this climate it never rains but it pours, so while Allie does your work you may as well make yourself comfortable. I suppose you will not mind my going into the library for a book, for I am not much of a hand at talk? You may summon me when tea is ready." And Roger marched off, muttering to himself: "Two is company, three is none; she shall not be bothered with making company talk for me, poor little girl!"

"How good he is!" whispered Anna, almost before the door had closed behind him; "he thinks I want to talk to you alone, and so I do. Oh, how quickly you work! your needle seems to fly. My head was aching so with stooping over the muslin that I could hardly see, but when I told Eva so she said I was always full of fancies, and that I was so dreadfully idle. But I don't think I really am idle, do you?"

"No, indeed," returned Alison, with something of Aunt Diana's abruptness; "I am sure you have been working too hard, you look so thin and unsubstantial. Tell me, Anna, why have you never come to see me again, as you promised?"

"Eva does not want me to come; at least, I think so; she always raises difficulties when I ask to accompany her; and—and"—her eyes filling with tears—"she was so angry that afternoon when you and Mr. Roger were so kind to me; she said I was so forward that people could not help noticing me, and that she was sure Mr. Roger thought so."

"Never mind, Anna dear—may I call you Anna? and please remember I am only a girl myself, and my name is Alison, and not Miss Merle. Never mind, what your sister says is not true; people often say things when they are put out which they do not really mean. No one could think you forward; I am sure Roger would laugh at such an idea if I were to tell him."

"You must not do that," returned Anna, quietly; "he would be so angry with Eva; they are not good friends, you know. Oh, how glad I am to tell you this; it takes quite a load off my mind. I was afraid you would think me so ungrateful after pressing me so kindly to come; you might have thought I did not care—I cried about it so often."

"You must never do that again," replied Alison, quite pained at this; "if you do not come to The Holms I shall quite understand where the fault lies; we will not make things worse by fretting over them. We must try and be patient for a little—things may be better by and by."

The girls continued to chat until the tea came in and it was time to summon Roger. He was not sorry to be called. The library was rather a gloomy apartment this wet evening, as it looked on the darkest part of the shrubbery, the evergreens coming far too close to the windows. But, as no one sat in the room, this was not considered a grievance. He thought the morning room looked snug and cozy when he went back to it. The muslin dress still reposed on the center table, but a smaller one was placed in the bay window, round which the three young people were gathered.

Anna quite forgot her headache and fear of the thunder as she performed her simple duties of hostess. She looked so pleased when Roger told her that he had never tasted better tea, that he laughingly accused her of never having entertained company before. To his surprise she answered him quite seriously, "Oh, no; I never had a tea party before. How nice it is! Eva has her friends sometimes, but I do not seem to know any girls."

"Or young men," put in Roger mischievously. He seemed bent on teasing her to-night.

"Well, there is Cousin Anthony, you know," she replied in her usual naive fashion; "he is a young man, of course; but I don't think he would like to come to my tea parties. Eva always says that I am such a child that people don't care to talk to me. I am afraid I am not very clever."

"I am glad of that," returned Roger, promptly. "I detest people who think themselves clever. You are quite clever enough for Alison and me. By the bye, Miss Anna, how do you get on with your Latin?"

"Oh, pretty well," she answered, with one of her varying blushes, which made her almost pretty. "I have so little time and you have not given me a lesson for so long, Mr. Roger."

"The rain is over now," observed Alison, in a regretful voice, "and it is growing so dark, Roger, we ought not to stay any longer."

"Never mind, I shall see you on Thursday," replied Anna. "I am looking forward to the day so much. I have a new dress, too," she continued, as Roger left the room to find Alison's mantle; "it is not so pretty as Eva's dress—such a beautiful muslin; mine is only cream-colored cloth."

"I am sure you will look very nice, and I shall bring you some flowers," returned Alison, kindly, with a vivid recollection how well Anna had looked with the knot of roses fastened in her gray dress.

Then they joined Roger in the hall.

"Well, Allie," he observed, as they walked briskly down the wet road, "have you had a nice time with your new friend?"

"Yes, indeed, Roger. I am so thankful for the rain. I am getting quite fond of Anna. There is so much goodness under that shy, childish manner."

"I know you would appreciate her," he returned, heartily. "Poor little girl! One is glad to do anything to help her. There is not much a fellow like me can do, except say a kind word when people snub her, or leave her to sit alone in the corners. That is almost all I have done."

"But you teach her Latin, Roger?"

"Nonsense!" was the hasty reply. "A pretty sort of teaching. The poor little thing once confided to me her difficulties, and so whenever an opportunity came I gave her a quarter of an hour's construing. She used to come rather often to The Holms once upon a time. Well, I shall leave her in your hands now, Allie. A girl friend of her own age will be far better for her."

"I am sure you have been good to her, Roger, or she would not be so grateful to you." But as Roger only said "Nonsense!" rather impatiently, Alison, with her usual tact, changed the subject.

FLOATING IN THE AIR.

The Impression on Ascending in a Free Balloon.

One of the first questions which I am usually asked by persons seeking information about balloons is, "What is the sensation of going up in a balloon?" writes Captain C. DeF. Chandler, U. S. A. I will anticipate this same inquiry of the readers of this article and state for their information that in a free balloon I have not noticed any peculiar physical sensation which can be described. It would be like trying to describe standing still as a sensation. The impression on ascending in a free balloon is more an optical illusion. The ascent is so slow and gentle that it cannot be felt, and one has the impression that the balloon is motionless and the earth gradually dropping away. All the noises and shouts of the people become fainter and die out. As the altitude increases hills and valleys are not apparent, and the earth seems flat, like a beautiful colored map, showing cultivated fields, forests, etc.

The greater part of the time a balloon is moving either up or down, but the motion is not apparent, and it requires a statoscope to indicate whether the balloon is ascending or descending. If a considerable change of altitude is made in a short time, the difference in air pressure may be felt on the ear drums. In descending even quite rapidly I have never had any sensation of falling.—Journal of Military Service.

Horse with a Speaking Tube.

Perhaps the only horse in the world provided with a "speaking" tube direct from its stall to its owner's living apartments is Birthday, a hunter, owned by Mrs. Walter Wadham-Petre, of London. Hearing it neigh at night, she concluded to have an arrangement constructed so that she could speak to it from her rooms. "Now," said she to a visitor recently, lifting up a trapdoor six inches square, which was hidden beneath a Turkish rug, "when I say, 'Hello, boy!' you will hear Birthday respond with a cheerful whinney." According to a writer in a London paper, no sooner had Mrs. Wadham-Petre spoken than the horse set up a series of whinnies.

A good game cock has no white in its plumage, and hence the synonym for cowardice—"to show the white feather."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

The Boonville Ice and Cold Storage plant will be sold at a receiver's sale on December 5.

Levitt Hinkin, aged 84 years, died at Evansville as the result of a fall from a porch several days ago. He was a native of England.

Wallace Miller, of Bedford, while hunting quail, was shot by a comrade but not seriously hurt. His heavy clothing saved his life.

Ray, the 24-year-old son of J. K. Harper, of Elkhart, was killed at Lansing, Mich., when he tried to board a train. He had been married only a few weeks.

Mrs. Samuel Hite, aged 40, was found by her son lying at her home in Warsaw, with a deep gash in the back of her head. She had been dead probably two hours. The cause of her sudden demise is unknown.

Julius Bell, who lives one-half mile south of Knightstown, was arrested by a Deputy Sheriff of Rush County for stealing corn from the crib of Benoni M. Parker. A farm employe says he discovered Bell stealing the corn. Bell and his family have lived in the vicinity for many years.

Owing to losses which he is said to have sustained in making deals in blooded hog stock, F. D. Conrad, a young farmer, living near Leo, stuffed all the cracks in his room in a Fort Wayne hotel, turned on the gas and was found later in a critical condition. He probably will recover.

Chester Clark, of Lafayette, was the victim of an accident in which his right hand was cut off in a corn shredder at Battle Ground. He was operating the shredder with a safety device upon it, but had climbed on top of the machine to throw in some loose corn. His hand was caught in the cogs.

James Robertson, a gardener living near Morocco, has gathered his crop of Japanese popcorn. The largest ears are little more than an inch long and about as big around as a reed pipe stem, requiring between 350 and 400 ears to make a half bushel. Mr. Robertson says that it pops much better than the rice popcorn and has an exceptionally fine flavor.

The hunting season is on and the country around Carlisle abounds in all kinds of game. Quail, prairie chickens, wild ducks and geese are plentiful, and hunters are coming in with well-filled game bags. Rabbits are selling at a high price. The fur season has opened with a rush and dealers have already bought large supplies of skins. Skunks, raccoons, opossums and muskrats are plentiful.

James Roberts, a farmer, shot a quail near Hagerstown. The bird was plump and fat, with its craw stuffed with seeds. On examination it was found that practically all of the seeds were those of weeds which farmers regard as pests. Mr. Roberts at once resolved to shoot no more quails, and has started out to influence all farmers to forbid quail shooting on their land and to discontinue the practice themselves.

The teaching of a trick to a formidable-looking bulldog caused a young business man of Brazil considerable embarrassment recently. He had stopped his automobile in front of a place of business and left his sweetheart in the machine while he entered the store. A bulldog belonging to a traveling man had been taught when his owner left his machine with his wife seated therein to spring into the vacant seat and guard it until his master returned. The dog had become lost, and seeing the machine and the young woman, promptly sprang into the auto beside its lone occupant. When the owner came out the dog failed to recognize him and refused to allow him to enter. An officer was called, but the dog held him at bay, as he did also the crowd that assembled. The position was becoming embarrassing for the young woman when the owner of the dog arrived on the scene and called off the animal.

Spurgeon, commonly known as Pleasantville," the little town that was partly wiped out by fire last week, will be rebuilt. It is the center of a rich country, and trade territory tributary to it extends miles in all directions. There were only two business houses saved in the town, which formerly had ten. One of these is an undertaking establishment, and the other a general store. The town is almost half way between Oakland City and Boonville, and is six miles from any railroad. The postoffice which burned has been robbed and burned twice within the last two years. This is also the second time the telephone exchange has been destroyed by fire. The heaviest losers by the fire were Scales & Arnold, who had a general merchandise store, with stock and building valued at $16,000. This was almost a total loss, but was insured. During the fire 500 turkeys, ready for the Thanksgiving trade, were liberated from a burning building. They scattered over the entire county.

A large bull terrier, belonging to Vernon Shrode, committed suicide at Evansville. The dog was whipped by Shrode's wife and ran straightway and jumped in front of a rapidly moving traction car. It was ground to pieces.

The tubular well sunk as an experiment at Goshen by the City Council, in an effort to find an adequate water supply, struck a vein of water at 185 feet in coarse gravel, which gives a flow of 200 gallons a minute. Other wells will be sunk.

November 13th was the birthday of Frederick Howard, Evansville business man, and he secured a license to marry Miss Mart L. Spieler, and the wedding occurred in the presence of thirteen guests.

The recent advent into this world of a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Lubin, of South Bend, forms an odd combination. The girl, born on Friday, the 13th, is the thirteenth child of Mr. and Mrs. Lubin.

Because their parents had threatened to send them to the Girls' Reform School for playing hookey Miss Mabel Griffin and Lucile Yeo attempted suicide together at Bloomington. Their recovery is doubtful.

William N. Ballou, of Fort Wayne, law partner of E. G. Hoffman, surprised his friends and was married to Miss Vern D. Fish, living near Defiance, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Ballou will reside in Fort Wayne.

The new station of the Big Four, in Franklin, is completed and in use. The old station was destroyed by fire about a year ago, and since then a passenger coach had been used. The new building is heated with a furnace and lighted with electricity.

John S. Irdell, 66 years old, died last week at Richmond from blood poisoning. While trimming a corn six weeks ago he inflicted a slight knife wound on one of his toes, which resulted in blood poisoning. He was a member of the insurance firm of Ferguson & Co.

Many farmers in the vicinity of Newcastle will have to buy meat and lard. Entire droves of hogs have been swept away by the cholera. In a community east of the city, embracing a territory a mile square, farmers have lost over 300 marketable hogs. Similar conditions prevail in other parts of the county.

In the Mt. Vernon Strawboard Company's yards in Mt. Vernon is one of the largest stacks of straw ever seen in this section. It contains 40,000 bales of straw, which is equal to 4,000,000 pounds or 2,000 tons, and the company, with its new and improved machinery, expects to convert this stack of straw into strawboard within ninety days. It has enough straw on its grounds to keep it busy for the next six months.

James H. Kyte, a farmer near Columbus, and Mayor Henry Kyte, of Seymour, who have gone to Kirksville, Mo., to learn the details of a fortune coming to them from Scotland, write to their families that they believe the story of the fortune is true. The money was made fifty years ago by Louis Kyte, an eccentric Scotchman, who lived and died a bachelor. He was the brother of the grandfather of the two men mentioned. It is said by members of the family that one of the numerous heirs of the family will be sent to Scotland to claim the money.

Covington Kessler, a well-known citizen of Danville, was painfully and probably fatally injured while engaged in making the excavation for the new electric light plant. He was driving the "snatch team," drawing a large wagon carrying nearly two yards of clay from the excavation, when he tripped and fell under the wheels, which passed over his body between the hips and shoulders. The other driver stopped his team, and in so doing the load was allowed to move down the incline, by which manner the wheels passed over his body the second time.

The Rev. A. H. Dooley, who died recently at Rockville, was one of the best-known Baptist ministers in Indiana. His first pastorate was at Elizaville, Boone County, which he filled for twelve years. During his more than fifty years in the ministry he served as pastor of nineteen different churches in the following associations: Indianapolis, Logansport, Judson, Whitelick, Monticello and Freedom. In those years he baptized 412 converts. While visiting some of the churches where he was pastor fifty years and more ago, he was stricken with his fatal illness. Thousands of Baptists in Indiana knew him and will learn with profound sorrow of his death.

Eight Terre Haute children, bitten by pups which had been fed by a mother afflicted with rabies, were taken to Chicago for treatment at the Pasteur Institute. The mother dog was killed, not because she was thought to be mad, but because it was believed she had an incurable ailment. The pups were distributed among neighbors. Peter Grosse, 12 years old, one of the boys bitten by the pups, died last week. The other victims are Anna and Harry Grosse, his sister and brother; Cecilia A. Cousin, Charles, John and Lulu Gary, Lena and Walter Endicott. The children range in age from 2 to 4 years. The families are poor and $600 was raised by popular subscription to send the children to Chicago. Probably twenty persons were bitten by the pups.

Miss Alvis B. Wise, whose mother was seriously burned by an explosion in a photograph gallery in Evansville, will sacrifice part of the skin on her arms that it may be grafted to the body of her mother and save her life.

John M. Pearcy, of Martinsville, a breeder of Duroc-Jersey swine, has sold his herd boar, John's Ohio Chief, 17485, to D. B. Johnson & Sons, of Mooresville, for $500. John's Ohio Chief has gained a great reputation among stock men of Indiana.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Many matters of importance were left undone or undecided when the first session of the present Congress closed last summer. They remain on the calendar of unfinished business in either the House or the Senate, and may be called up for consideration when the two branches of the national legislature meet. Of wide interest are the proposed amendments to the interstate commerce law, intended to give to the states jurisdiction over liquors shipped within their boundaries. The object of the legislation sought is to keep liquor out of prohibition States by a restriction upon the commerce among the States. The attitude of some Congressmen on this subject was an issue in the Congressional legislation, and had an influence on the vote cast in their districts. Bills amending the anti-trust law in the interest of necessary and justifiable combinations of capital, and bills restricting the courts in the issue of injunction orders for the benefit of employes of labor, remain unreported in the House Judiciary Committee. The question of the admission free of duty of certain products of the Philippine Islands has been postponed again and again, and is still undecided. Friends of all these measures will strive to get some action on them. oMreover, there is the proposition to establish a postal savings-bank system, which both parties favor in their national platforms. The chief work, however, which will be accomplished in this short session—which will end at noon on March 4, when the new President will take office—will be the passage of the annual appropriation bills. There will be time for little else, and if any other bills of national importance are passed, it will be by reason of the wide public demand for them.

-:—:-

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington has completed designs suggested by Postmaster General Meyer for a new issue of United States postage stamps. The new issue has been designed with the object of obtaining the greatest simplicity commensurate with artistic results. All the stamps are of a similar design, containing a head in an ellipse, the only decoration being laurel leaves on either side of the ellipse. The lettering is in straight lines, at the top being "U. S Postage" and at the bottom the words "Two Cents." The one-cent stamp contains the head of Franklin, while all the others will bear that of Washington, taken from busts by Houdon. The colors are the reds and blues of the early stamps.

The Navy Department has decided for reasons of economy to have a coat of slate-gray paint put on all battle ships as fast as they are received at the docks for repairs. The first ship to receive the new coat is the Maine, which has just returned from a cruise around the world and is now in the Potsmouth Navy Yard. Both the Pacific and Atlantic fleets will thus be treated when they turn to the Atlantic Coast yards for repairs. Besides reducing the paint bills, the gray is deemed a better color than the white because not so conspicuous under searchlight.

-:—:-

Declaring that complaints continue to come to the department alleging violation of the postal regulations concerning the disposition of registered mail indorsed for delivery to the addresses in person, an order has been issued by Third Assistant Postmaster General Lawshe directing that such mail must be delivered to no one but the addressee in person, not even upon his written order.

-:—:-

Free passes may be issued to bona fide ex-employes of a railroad who are traveling to re-enter the railroad's service. Passes cannot be extended to the families of employes who died a natural death while in the service of common carriers, though that privilege is accorded to the families of employes killed in the service, rules the Interstate Commerce Commission.

-:—:-

The civil service commission has decided that there was no foundation for the charges that customs inspectors of New York were compelled to see a Mr. Plummer in the office of Treasurer Sheldon, of the Republican national committee, at 2 Wall street, and there contribute $25 each.

-:—:-

Ambassador Takahira, of Japan, has delivered to President Roosevelt a message from the Japanese emperor thanking the President for his message of good will and expressing his delight that the American people were pleased with the reception to the fleet in Japan.

-:—:-

The Department of Agriculture has issued a preliminary estimate of the production of the principal crops of the United States, showing that corn, wheat, oats and eight other crops, representing approximately 70 per cent of the value of all farm products, this year aggregate about 3 per cent greater than a year ago, and 2.4 per cent greater than the average for the last five years.

Inasmuch as we all know that nothing is perfect, why do we fuss because life isn't ideal.

It will be a long time before the next Fourth of July, but it is not an hour too early to join the movement already begun for the suppression of the murderous celebration of that day. Several cities have already issued ordinances preventing the barbaris celebration with din and death. Cleveland, Ohio, has put an end to the use of fireworks and Chicago is taking steps in this direction.

A man may serve his time at any trade, but cabinet makers are already made and the woods are full of them. The papers have several brand new cabinets for President elect Taft almost every day. This is one of the latest and is presented for what it is worth.

Secretary of State—William Nelson Cromwell of New York.

Secretary of Treasury—Myron T Herrick of Ohio.

Secretary of War—Gen. Henry C. Corbin of Ohio.

Attorney General—Francis J. Henry of California.

Postmaster General—Charles B Landis of Indiana.

Secretary of the Navy—Winston Churchill of New Hampshire.

Secretary of the Interior—Arthur L. Vorys of Ohio.

Secretary of Agriculture—Gifford Pinchot of Connecticut.

Secretary of Commerce and Labor—John Hays Hammond of Massachusetts.

There has always been ill feeling between the sailors and marines. This arose a hundred years ago when sailors were impressed and when marines were taken aboard ship to suppress mutinies and keep the sailors in subjection. These conditions have long since passed away. Sailors now volunteer and insubordination is almost unknown. The sailor is very much better treated and is a much better type of man to his predecessor on the old sailing vessel. The President has recently issued an order that marines shall no longer perform service aboard ship. The order was doubtless issued for purposes beneficial to the naval and marine services of the country and after serious and intelligent consideration by the President and the Navy Department.

Back to The Farm

"Back to the farm" is a cry that is heard often these days as its fulfillment is the solution to the congested conditions of the cities. For years farm boys and farm girls have hoped and dreamed of city life and have left home and home influences to enter upon a life in some city with the result that they have helped crowd the city to its very limits, causing disastor in hundreds of cases. Foreigners coming to America have headed for the larger business centers with the same results Although the industries of the cities demand employes numbering into thousands, there is not enough work for all and some must and do suffer. Students of political economy everywhere see the sad results of such over crowding and declare the remedy to lie in the utilization of farmland. "Back to the farm" is the only means offered to relieve the congested condition of the city. The government is coming to the rescue of the present and coming generations by enlarging the territory of available soil and offering land at very low rates. In the Dakotas, New Mexico and in Montana land is being put into farming condition by the government and offered to homeseekers. Where the land cannot be tilled for lack of sufficient moisture, great irrigation systems have or will be installed. A project is on foot now to irrigate New Mexico land and in Montana irrigation has already proved a decided success. Hundreds and hundreds of acres that have been heretofore considered only grazing ground for sheep and cattle will some day be producing grain and vegetables for our countrymen, with the result that the nation will be the prosperous for it.

The country home is the ideal home after all. This does not mean the home eight, ten miles away from town but includes the home in the towns and villages all over the land. In the city there are so many places more attractive than home—in the country there are but few places that compare with home. There is health and pleasure in towns and country where workmen see the clear sky and feel the wholesomeness of the outer air. There is more freedom and independence in the country than can be found in any city among employes. The city has many attractions and advantages but the advantages are being brought to the country and the attractions are often not the kind that will make men and women better.

It is stated that in the reclamation of the Montana land it is the intention to build modern villages every six miles so farmers will have the advantage of the country and yet be only three miles from a good school, good social advantages and friends. Such a plan would truly be ideal. We of St. Joe are probably living in just such a town as the government in planning for those who wish to make a home for themselves in Montana. We have the advantage of country air and scenery, with breathing space aplenty about our homes and on our thoroughfares; we have splendid schools, churches and wholesome amusements, and are not too far from a city to reach one within a few hours, should we care to go. Our town is not ideal yet but it is far ahead of many other towns its size and promises to be still better. Count over its advantages and carefully measure its deficiencies then ask yourself if there is anything you can do to make it the ideal town for which the government is looking.

Wants Homes for Children.

"The agents of the Board of State Charities have in the past year been very successful in securing a large number of good homes for dependent children who are in public wards There are still a large number of desirable children available for placing in suitable homes. Doubtless there are many families that would make a home for a child. An important part of the Board's work is to bring the homeless child and the childless home together. The Board solicits the co operation of all who are interested in securing proper homes in families for children." Nervous
Break-Down
Nerve energy is the force that controls the organs of respiration, circulation, digestion and elimination. When you feel weak, nervous, irritable, sick, it is often because you lack nerve energy, and the process of rebuilding and sustaining life is interfered with. Dr. Miles' Nervine has cured thousands of such cases, and will we believe benefit if not entirely, cure you. Try it.
"My nervous system gave away completely, and left me on the verge of the grave. I tried skilled physicians but got no permanent relief. I got so bad I had to give up my business. I began taking Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. In a few days I was much better, and I continued to improve until entirely cured. I am in business again, and never miss an opportunity to recommend this remedy." MRS. W. L. BURKE, Myrtle Creek, Oregon.

A Beautiful Window.

George Brown, a clerk and window decorator at the Schaub Brother & Co. store, has entered a contest with several thousand others in the United States, to carry off the first prize of $100 offered by the Wayne Knitting Mills of Fort Wayne, for the best display of the products of the mills. As a result he has a most beautiful window which shows to a queen's taste the various styles of hosiery made by the Fort Wayne firm and sold by the local dealers. The display is evidence of Mr. Brown's delicate taste and artistic hand. The electric effect is a beautiful one. The arrangements of the various colors carries out a perfect and harmonious scheme. One of the catchy cards used reads. "If the sox you wear are not worth a darn try these". A pony carrying a standard bearer represents the "Pony Brand." These and other features make the display one showing rare ability. Mr. Brown deserves congratulation upon its success and for the nerve to compete with decorators all over the land.—Dispatch. George is one of our boys and we are pleased to note his success in this line. Some of our citizens who were at Auburn, last week, says that the window is one of the finest they have seen.

PASTIMES OF MADMEN.

Cunning and Ingenuity Displayed by the Insane.

Some of the inventions of the insane are of scientific value. A patient at Villejuif invented a "panification machine" by combining a bottle, a plank and small metallic tubes, to which he had fitted faucets. Having set up his machine, he produced loaves of bread the size of a man's head. The bread was good—so good that it was decided to make the machine known. One day when it was in action the doctor suggested taking a photograph of it. The inventor watched him as if petrified for a moment; then he fell upon the machine, wrenched it apart and trampled it underfoot. The invention, an exceedingly useful one, was lost, because no one had seen him make it, and no one dares speak of it to him. To allude to it is to bring on a furious attack.

Most lunatics, no matter how contented they may be, generally cherish a furtive longing to escape. They collect wax from the polished floors, take the impressions of locks and make keys from empty sardine boxes, spoon handles or anything to be found. Dr. Marie's museum includes a collection of knives of strange and unheard of shapes. Some of them have blades made from pieces of glass or slate and set in handles of corset steels. Objects harmless in themselves become dangerous weapons through the ingenuity of madmen.

Insane sculptors are as common as insane painters. The insane sculptor hews out coarse statuettes, fantastic animals, ferocious little horned and grimacing devils. An ex-mechanic carves all his soup bones. That his old trade is still in his memory is shown by the little screws that he makes out of the smaller pieces of bone. He works all day at his senseless and ridiculous task. Another lunatic, who believes he is the incarnation of the soul of Beelzebub, passes his time carving toy men out of wood. Each pair of his creations are joined together, now at the necks, now at the shoulders.—Helen E. Meyer in Harper's Weekly.

A Prosperous Year

The crop reports recently issued by the Bureau of Statistics indicate that the last year has been the most prosperous of the decade. Wheat, rye, hay, oats and barley were harvested in usual abundance. Fruit has never been so plentiful and the average yield of corn per acre the country over is more than 26 bushels as compared with 25¼ bushels for 1907 and is a gain upon the average for the past ten years of nearly a bushel per acre. It is curious to observe that farms of Ohio and Pennsylvania produced 38¾ and 29½ bushels of corn to the acre respectively, while Iowa and Illinois, the great corn states averaged but slightly over 31 bushels to the acre. Both these states are regarded as having richer soil than either Ohio or Pennsylvania and yet they did not make within seven bushels of as much corn. Kansas and Oklahoma, supposed to have a richer and fresher soil than the eastern states, produced but 22 and 23 bushels respectively. It is plain that the causes for the above comparison must be found not in the quality of the soil, but in the skill in cultivation. It is evident that the farmers of Ohio and Pennsylvania are more skillful and scientific in their tillage. Alabama and Georgia produced but 14½ and 12½ bushels per acre, scarcely an average crop for these states, but poor cultivation in the southern states, rather than poor soil is the cause of light crops.

Culture Club.

Mrs. F. Buchanan was hostess to the Culture club, Wednesday evening. The lesson "The Institutions of Ideals" was read and discussed. The discussion showed it had been carefully studied. Mrs. Mahlon Baker was the leader. The quotations were from Riley. Mrs. Frank White was admitted to the club making a membership of twenty-three. The meeting next week will be with Mrs. Abner Copp. After business and adjournment the ladies enjoyed a treat of non bons from the hostess.

How is your Digestion.

Mrs. Mary Dowling of No. 228 8th Ave., San Francisco, recommends a remedy for stomach trouble. She says: "Gratitude for the wonderful effect of Electric Bitters in a case of acute indigestion, prompts this testimonial. I am fully convinced that for stomach and liver troubles Electric Bitters is the best remedy on the market to-day." This great tonic and alterative medicine invigorates the system, purifies the blood and is especially helpful in all forms of female weakness. 50c. at H. Milliman's drug store.

Truth and Quality

appeal to the Well-Informed in every walk of life and are essential to permanent success and creditable standing. Accordingly, it is not claimed that Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is the only remedy of known value, but one of many reasons why it is the best of personal and family laxatives is the fact that it cleanses, sweetens and relieves the internal organs on which it acts without any debilitating after effects and without having to increase the quantity from time to time.

It acts pleasantly and naturally and truly as a laxative, and its component parts are known to and approved by physicians, as it is free from all objectionable substances. To get its beneficial effects always purchase the genuine—manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all leading druggists.

Modesty in Chicago.

An ambitious young Chicagoan recently called upon a publisher of novels in that city, to whom he imparted confidentially the information that he had decided to "write a book," and that he would be pleased to afford the publisher the chance to bring it out. "May I venture to inquire as to the nature of the book you purpose to write?" asked the publisher, politely. "O," came in an offhand way from the aspirant for fame, "I think of doing something on the line of 'Les Miserables,' only livelier, you know!"—The Bellman.

Ancient Fashion Jargon.

The language of the fashion plate and the woman's paper is sufficiently appalling to the mere man even in these days of emancipated and, we may presume, more grammatical womanhood; but, according to an extract from a fashion journal of 1787, the jargon of those days was even more astounding. This is how the paper described the dress of a certain Mlle. D. at the opera:

"She appeared in a dress of 'stifled sighs,' ornamented with 'superfluous regrets,' the bodice cut in a 'perfect candor' point and trimmed with 'indiscreet complaints.' Her hair was dressed in 'sustained sentiments,' with a headdress of 'sustained conquest,' ornamented with several 'flyaways' and 'downcast eye' ribbons, and her collar was 'beggar on horseback' color."

No doubt all these marvelous terms conveyed some meaning to the fashionable woman of the days when French society danced on the edge of the volcano of 1789, but to their descendants of to-day they have absolutely no meaning.

Registering His Kick.

The battle seemed to be going against the pugilist with the wide smile and the athletic chin.

Suddenly he stepped forward, between rounds, and raised his hand to command silence.

"I want to call the attention of this crowd," he shrieked, "to the fact—for I believe it to be a fact—that my antagonist has more money than I've got! I expect to win this fight, but if I don't win it I want to call this crowd to witness that I lose it because the referee, the timekeeper, all the attendants, including my seconds and backers, together with everybody in this pavilion, gatekeepers and all, have been shamefully and infamously bribed to beat me!"

Then came the call of time, and with a wild howl of despair he plunged into the fight again.—Chicago Tribune.

NEW LIFE

After one suffers from acid dyspepsia, sour stomach, for months and then finds the remedy is in getting the right kind of food, it is something to speak out about.

A N. Y. lady and her young son had such an experience and she wants others to know how to get relief. She writes:

"For about fifteen months my little boy and myself had suffered with sour stomach. We were unable to retain much of anything we ate.

"After suffering in this way for so long I decided to consult a specialist in stomach diseases. Instead of prescribing drugs, he put us both on Grape-Nuts and we began to improve immediately.

"It was the key to a new life. I found we had been eating too much heavy food which we could not digest. In a few weeks after commencing Grape-Nuts, I was able to do my housework. I wake in the morning with a clear head and feel rested and have no sour stomach. My boy sleeps well and wakes with a laugh.

"We have regained our lost weight and continue to eat Grape-Nuts for both the morning and evening meals. We are well and happy and owe it to Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

IN THE OLD HOUSE.

The fruits are stored, the fields are bare,
The ground is hard, the skies are gray;
November's chill is in the air;
To-morrow is Thanksgiving day.

The farmhouse stands in sheltered nook,
Its walls are filled with warmth and cheer;
Its fires shine out with friendly look
To welcome all who enter here.

Full forty years have come and gone
Since first this hearthstone's ruddy glow,
Fresh kindled, flung its light upon
Thanksgiving guests of long ago.

Long was the list of squires and dames;
From year to year how short it grew!
Read out the old, familiar names
They heard here when this house was new.

Grandmother?—aye, she went the first;
Grandfather?—by her side he rests;
The shade and sunlight, interspersed,
Have fallen long above their breasts.

Our aunts and uncles?—sundered wide,
Their graves lie east, their graves lie west;
As veteran soldiers scarred and tried,
They fought their fight, they earned their rest.

Our father?—dear and gentle heart!
A nature sweet, beloved by all;
How early turned his steps apart
To pass from human ken and call!

Our mother?—brisk and kindly soul!
How brave she bore fate's every frown,
Nor rested till she reached the goal
Where all must lay their burdens down!

Our brother?—toward the setting sun,
From us remote, his home is made,
And many a year its course has run
Since here his boyish sports were played.

Put by the book! My heart is sore.
The night winds up the chimney flee,
The fires within gleam as before,
But none are here save you and me!

But, sister, you and I again
Will heap the hearth and spread the board
And serve our kindred, now as then,
With all that home and hearts afford.

The scattered remnants of our line,
We'll summon 'neath this roof once more,
And pledge, in rare affection's wine,
The memory of those days of yore.

God bless them all,—the fond and true!
God keep them all,—both here and there,
Until the Old becomes the New,
Forever, in His Mansions Fair!

John Warren's Thanksgiving.

John Warren dropped his newspaper on the floor of the car and stared out of the window. Strongly built and handsome, he was just now wearing on his face a look of utter weariness, resulting from a long trip in the West, where he had been looking after some interests of the firm of which he was a junior partner. Nine years before, in a fit of anger, he had left his home in the country and, too proud to return, had, by dint of dogged persistence, secured a humble place in the packing rooms of Brace & Brown's wholesale dry goods store. Fortune favored him, and this same quality of resolution, together with application, had raised him to the position he now occupied. A group of traveling men were making ready to leave the train. It was a jocular set and they had enlivened their trip with stories, politics and trade gossip, and now the jolly-faced hardware drummer said:

"Boys, where are you going to be Thanksgiving day?"

"I'm going back to the fleshpots of Egypt and eat my turkey in the country," said one.

"Yes," said another, "I'm going to be in my old place at the old table with my white-haired little mother smiling at me from behind the coffee pot and my dear old dad piling enough on my plate to feed a regiment."

"Think of those home-made pies!" said another, "those fat moons of apple, pumpkin, mince and cranberry. Say, no restaurant-tin-bottom-crust about them."

"And," said the boot and shoe man, "to sit around the old fireplace and watch a row of juicy apples roasting in front of that roaring, great-hearted log fire. Boys, you couldn't fence me away from home that day."

And so each one, with a home picture in his heart, hurried out of the car and up the long flight of station stairs away to his destination, while slowly behind them came John Warren with a surging tumult of feelings in his breast, and as he slowly mounted the last step a tear dropped on his brown beard and a sudden resolution filled his heart. He almost shouted: "I'm going home, too."

John hurried to his hotel, and taking a very shabby suit from his wardrobe packed it with some other things in a large satchel, and then hastening to the station climbed into the sleeper just as the long train pulled out for the east. Arriving at a point twenty miles west of his old home, he went to an obscure hotel and changed his clothing for the old suit in his satchel.

When the "leven forty" pulled into the town of M—— two days before Thanksgiving the usual crowd of loungers observed a tall, brown-bearded man, whose clothes seemed the worse for wear, step off the rear platform, and without looking at anyone strike off toward the farm of Richard Warren. Much curiosity was centered on this event until the seediest looking loafer present said:

"That was John Warren, or I'll eat my hat! He's come home to live on the old folks. It wouldn't be for long, though, 'cause Squire Cobb has given notice that he's goin' to foreclose the mortgage he has on the old man's place."

If they had followed the stranger for half a mile they might have seen the strong young man shed heartfelt tears as he leaned against the old oak tree by the little gate and gaze earnestly on the brown house at the edge of the woods. Crushing the snow with hasty steps, he was soon at the woodpile at the side of the house. Flinging down his satchel and catching up the ax, he split an armful of wood and opening the kitchen door said in a voice tremulous with emotion, "Mother, is this enough wood to get dinner with?"

A cry of wonderful joy and the mother wept on her son's shoulder while his father paced the floor shouting, "Praise God! Praise God!" stopping often to clasp his son's hand and murmur, "My boy, my boy." Then they drew up to the fire and John said: "Father, mother, will you forgive me for my anger nine years ago and my cruel silence ever since?" And his mother said: "My boy, not a day has passed by that we haven't prayed for your return, and, now that you are with us, we can take a new lease on life, and"—she glanced at his shabby clothing—"we will share our little possessions with you, my dear, long-lost son."

As the afternoon wore away John helped his father about the chores and by skillfully planned questions learned all about his financial troubles. He had taken his satchel up to his old room and was washing his hands before supper when he heard a light step on the porch and a bright-faced young woman walked into the kitchen and seeing him stood embarrassed until he, coming forward, said:

"This is Anna Scott, isn't it?"

"Why, John Warren, where have you kept yourself all these years? Oh, how happy your mother must be!"

And dropping his hand, which she had been shaking with greatest enthusiasm, she flew down into the cellar and threw both arms around his mother's neck, and that good lady embraced her, weeping and patting her shoulder with the empty cream pitcher which she had taken there to fill.

Mrs. Warren insisted that Anna should stay for supper. It seemed very much like old times when John tucked her hand under his arm and they walked over the road they had traveled so often years before. Just as they entered her father's gateway John said:

"Anna, my parents think just as you do, that I have made a failure of life. Well, I haven't. I am junior member of a very prosperous firm in the West, but I want to keep the secret a little while longer and I want you to help me give them a kind surprise."

Then he unfolded his plan to her and her voice rang with delight as she said: "Oh, John, how lovely that will be!"

The next morning, after the old family Bible was read and a heartfelt prayer offered, John asked the loan of his father's horse and drove straight to Squire Cobb's office and that worthy being in, John said:

"Squire, I came to see you about that mortgage you have on my father's farm."

With that he drew from his pocket a large roll of bank notes and counted down the $500 which would release his father from worry and misery. John drove at once to the farm of Mr. Scott and called "Whoa!" just as Anna, her father, mother and brother came to the gate.

There were hearty greetings, and then Anna, all ready for a long drive, sprang in beside him. How bright the morning was! How happy were they as the bells jingled and the sleigh moved over the wilderness of snow and through the deep woods. What mysterious bundles they brought out of the stores in town until, when, at last they arrived at Anna's home, the sleigh was loaded with "enough to stock a store," as Harry Scott remarked.

Thanksgiving day dawned bright and glorious with sun and snow, and early in the morning Anna appeared and she "wanted to help get dinner." Soon John brought the horse and cutter around and asked his mother to take a ride with him, and finally, after much urging from Anna, Mrs. Warren put on her shabby cloak and hood and with a warm soapstone at her feet was tucked into the sleigh beside John. He noticed the cloak and gave a little look of entreaty to Anna, who only smiled and said: "I wish you would call at mother's before you come back." Away they drove toward the mill and down by the river, then stopped at Farmer Scott's. Soon Mrs. Scott was showing Mrs. Warren her "new quilt, just taken out of the frames," and the picture of "Cousin William, who is on the board of trade," and these two good old women talked over a hundred harmless things which constituted their every-day life. John finally suggested that it was time they were going if he could believe the clock of appetite. Anna met them at the door, her eyes dancing as she said: "Uncle Warren is almost ready. You lay off your things and sit down at the table."

When Mr. Warren had finished the tenderly thankful grace, John's eyes as well as Anna's were filled with tears. Mr. Warren turned over his plate and there lay the canceled mortgage. Slowly he lifted it. "What does this mean, John?" The kind voice of the old man trembled with emotion as he glanced first at the mortgage, then at the son. And John's mother, who had been peering through her glasses at something which wouldn't pout out of the cream pitcher, turned the article upside down and a bunch of bank notes dropped upon the table.

Then the old couple saw it all and soon the three were clasping hands and no one could say a word until John managed to murmur: "Father, mother, it's a part of my repentance."

The dishes cleaned and put away, Anna took the mystified Mrs. Warren into the little "spare room" and John asked his father to walk up to his room, and there, spread out on the bed, was a splendid new, warm suit of clothing and shoes and a fur cap and a handsome great coat.

The old man knelt down by the bed and murmured, "I thank Thee, Lord, for my son." Then arising, clothed himself in the first well-fitting suit he had ever worn. John, too, arrayed himself in his best, and soon they walked down into the parlor, where John saw a sweet, matronly woman and a pretty young woman, both smiling and both having evidences of recent tears.

During the week that followed John engaged a hired man to ease his father's work and a trusty girl to relieve his mother. He also hired a carpenter to do some needed repairing and set in motion many plans for the future comfort of his parents.

One day he and Harry Scott hunted through the woods, and when, tired and loaded with trophies of the day's hunt they came to Mr. Warren's they found Jennie Nellis and Anna seated before the "great-hearted fire." What a merry supper that was, and how the old people laughed at the bright sallies of the young folk!

Then they roasted apples and told stories, and John felt that he had faithfully carried out the program of the traveling men.

When he left for the West he carried in his memory not only the dear faces of his parents, but the gentle voice of Anna as she said:

"Yes, but not until June, John."—Chicago Post.

THE THANKSGIVING DAY HERO.

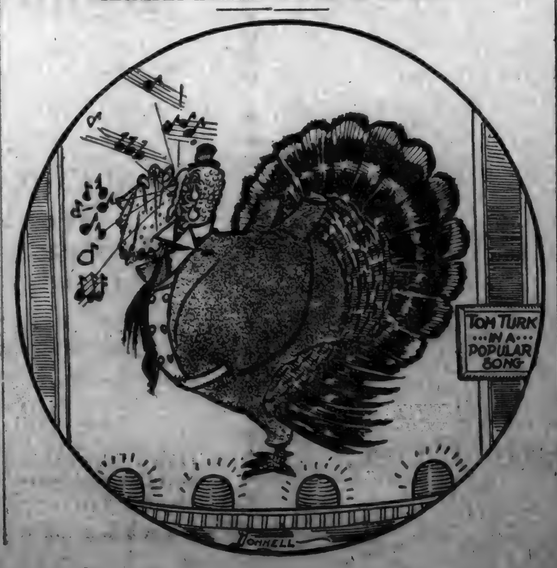
"THURSDAY ALWAYS WAS MY JONAH DAY!"



THE MINCE PIE.

These are the apples so round and so red
That grew on the tree by the old woodshed

This is the beef that was boiled all the day
To make a mince pie in the good old way.

This is the tray in which they were laid,
While the chopper so sharp of them both mince has made.

These are the raisins and currants and dates,
The sugar and spices—both nutmeg and mace,

That Grandma puts in as she stands at the table,
And pours in the cider with this big ladle.

Here is the pastry to cover the pie,
And this is the plate in which it may lie.

Now tuck it all round, and mark it with P,
And shove in the oven for you and for me,

To eat on Thanksgiving at Grandmamma's table,
With turkey and chicken, as much as we're able.

A BARNYARD DRAMA.

The Victim's Dream of a Horrible Revenge.

Rooster—So you will steal my corn, will you? Oh, you needn't strut around here as though you were the only one in this menagerie.

Turkey—Oh, I don't know. You're not in it with me just now. I'm the most popular thing on the walk at present.

Rooster—Well, madam, stretch your rubber neck up over my head all you want to-day, but just you wait till to-morrow! When your skinny legs are being dragged to the execution block, I will look on at your gory expiration and from the bottom of my lungs will crow for victory!

Turkey (taking two struts coopward and lauding in the center of the stage)—Aye, aye, sir! But listen. Death hath its rewards, and to sacrifice myself at the altar of revenge is more glorious than life. What if my beauteous wings shall switch the dust from out the cracks of the kitchen store? Wait till my nude and helpless form lies stretched upon the platter of the feast! Then shall revenge come to me, for never yet was one of our tribe sacrificed at the altar of Thanksgiving that the merciless gourmands did not so o'erstuff themselves that nothing in all the world was worth the having for three days in advance.

Thanksgivings of the Revolution.

There were eight Thanksgiving days appointed by the Continental Congress for observance among the colonies during the war for independence. After the one called for the purpose of celebrating the peace treaty, which was held in 1874, the day was allowed to lapse until 1789, when Washington took his seat as President. The idea in these early days was to offer thanks on some special occasion. That our ancestors could find eight such occasions during the dark days of the Revolution shows that they were ready to be thankful on somewhat slim provocation. But it also shows that the gobblers shed their blood for the country as well as the men.

Wanted to Be Prepared.

"I want to get a turkey, and a bottle of paregoric, and some mincemeat, and some pepsin pills, and some cranberries, and some furniture polish, and a quart of oysters, and a package of court plaster, and some sweet potatoes, and a fire insurance policy."

Here the marketman smiled merrily and inquired, "Going to eat all that?"

"No," responded the customer; "but the family Thanksgiving dinner occurs at my house this year."—Baltimore American.

YESTERDAY AND TO-DAY.

PE-RU-NA AS A LAST RESORT

MR. WM. F. VAHLBERG.

Mr. William F. Vahlberg, Oklahoma City, Okla., writes:

"One bottle of Peruna which I have taken did more toward relieving me of an aggravated case of catarrh of the stomach, than years of treatment with the best physicians.

"I had given up hopes of relief, and only tried Peruna as a last resort.

"I shall continue using it, as I feel satisfied it will effect an entire and permanent cure.

"I most cheerfully recommend Peruna to all who may read this."

Peruna is usually taken as a last resort. Doctors have been tried and failed. Other remedies have been used. Sanitariums have been visited. Travel has been resorted to.

This history is repeated over and over again, every day in the year. It is such results as this that gives Peruna its unassailable hold upon the people. We could say nothing that would add force to such testimonials as these above. That people who have had catarrh and have tried every other remedy available, find relief in Peruna, constitutes the best argument that could be made.

A Man Asleep.

His mouth and vest were open, and he breathed like a second-hand bicycle pump, writes O. Henry in his inimitable way in Everybody's. I looked at him and gave vent to just a few musings. "Imperial Cæsar," says I, "asleep in such a way, might shut his mouth and keep the wind away."

A man asleep is certainly a sight to make angels weep. What good is all his brain, muscle, backing, nerve, influence, and family connections? He's at the mercy of his enemies, and more so of his friends. And he's about as beautiful as a cab-horse leaning against the Metropolitan Opera House at 12:30 a. m. dreaming of the plains of Arabia. Now, a woman asleep you regard as different. No matter how she looks, you know it's better for all hands for her to be that way.

Success Is a Creative Process.

No human being ever yet made a success trying to be somebody else, even if that person was a success. Success cannot be copied—cannot be successfully imitated. It is an original force—a creative process. Every man will be a failure just in proportion as he gets away from himself and tries to be somebody else, and to express somebody else instead of himself. Power comes from within or from nowhere. Be yourself. Listen to the voice within. There is room for improvement in every profession, in every trade, and in every business. The world wants men who can do things in new and better ways. Don't think, because your plan or idea has no precedent, or because you are young and inexperinced, that you will not get a hearing. The man who has anything new and valuable to give to the world will be listened to and will be followed. The man of strong individuality, who dares to think his own thought and originate his own method, and who is not afraid to be himself, not a copy of someone else, quickly gets recognition. Nothing else will attract the attention of your employer or the rest of the world so quickly as originality and unique ways of doing things, especially if they are effective.—Orison Swett Marden, in Success Magazine.

Stanzas to a Chorus Girl.

I am sorry you can't be my bride, May,
But my father won't give his consent,
And if he, in a rage, cut me off, May,
Why I never could pay for our rent.

But why should we live any more? May,
In death we should not be apart.
I suffer alone, and am seized, May,
With a grief that is searing my heart.

So let's flee from the odious world, May,
Where there's nothing but troubles and cares,
Ah, won't it be grand, when we two, hand in hand,
Are climbing the golden stairs?

Let's flee from this odious world, May,
And go to the land of frothless sodas, thumbless waiters and countless delights; where your pipe doesn't go out every few minutes and you don't have to tramp ten miles to get a check cashed.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. "Have you," asked the judge of a recently convicted man, "anything to offer the court before sentence is passed?" "No, your honor," replied the prisoner, "my lawyer took my last dollar."

"I saw the major's wife at her window early this morning. She looked 40 years old!" "You must be mistaken, your highness; no woman is as old as she looks in the morning!"—Fliegende Blaetter.

"Why are you so vexed, Irma?" "I am so exasperated! I attended the meeting of the Social Equality League, and my parlor maid presided and had the audacity to call me to order three times!"—Fliegende Blaetter.

Mulligan—The byes say ye licked poor Casey. Shure, he niver hurt iny man's feelin's. Harrigan—He's a shnake in the grass. The blackguard referred to me as his contimperary, and I'll be the contimperary to no man livin'.—Puck.

"Before we were married," said Mrs. Chatterton, "you used to tell me how much you loved me, but you never do now." "Of course not, my dear," replied the masculine partner. "Since our marriage you haven't given me a chance to tell you anything."

Said a poet to an unfortunate speculator: "Don't you think that the opening lines of Tennyson's little poem, 'Break, break, break,' are plaintive and sad?" "Yes," was the melancholy reply. But I think that 'Broke, broke, broke,' is a good deal sadder."

"William," she said, "means good. James means beloved. I wonder"—a flush mantled her cheek. "I wonder she softly murmured, "what George means?" "George means business, I hope," said mother, looking up from the wedding announcements in the paper.

Anxious Mother—Nellie, dear, do you think that young Huggins, who has been calling on you twice a week for some time, is matrimonially inclined? Pretty Daughter—Really, I don't know what to think, mamma, dear. He has such a knack of keeping one in the dark!

Old Acquaintance—Why, old chap, a few years ago you were the best dressed man in town, but now your outfit is pretty shabby. Had a reverse? Companion—Well, you may call it that. The truth is, I got married since, and now it's my wife that's the best dressed woman in town.

Young Wife—To-morrow will be my birthday, dear. Young Husband—You'll be twenty-one? Young Wife—No; twenty-five. Young Husband—Why, a year ago, just before our wedding, you told me you were only twenty. Young Wife—Yes, but I have aged rapidly since our marriage.

"My friends," said an itinerant preacher, "the Scriptural rule for giving was one-tenth of what a man possessed. If you feel you can't afford so much, just give a sixth, or a fourth, according to your means. We will dispense with the next hymn and take up the collection."—Lippincott's.

Willie—And so you quarreled? Charlie—Yes; she sent back all my presents. And what do you suppose I did? Willie—Can't guess. Charlie—I sent her a half dozen boxes of face powder, with a note explaining that I'd taken about that much home on my coat since I'd known her.—The Gossip.

What has become of the old-fashioned woman who had her photograph taken with one hand holding a half-opened book?

NO SKIN LEFT ON BODY.

For Six Months Baby Was Expected to Die with Eczema—Now Well—Doctor Said to Use Cuticura.

"Six months after birth my little girl broke out with eczema and I had two doctors in attendance. There was not a particle of skin left on her body, the blood oozed out just anywhere, and we had to wrap her in silk and carry her on a pillow for ten weeks. She was the most terrible sight I ever saw, and for six months I looked for her to die. I used every known remedy to alleviate her suffering, for it was terrible to witness. Dr. C—— gave her up. Dr. B—— recommended the Cuticura Remedies. She will soon be three years old and has never had a sign of the dread trouble since. We used about eight cakes of Cuticura Soap and three boxes of Cuticura Ointment. James J. Smith, Durmid, Va., Oct. 14 and 22, 1906."

He Could Wait.

"Has your husband an old pair o' pants that he ain't usin', ma'am?" asked Wareham Long, respectfully removing from his head the shapeless remnant of a hat.

"No," shortly answered the woman of the house, eyeing him suspiciously. "My husband has only one pair of trousers, and they'll last him six months yet."

"All right, ma'am," he rejoined, taking from an inside pocket a soiled scrap of cardboard and making a memorandum on it with the stump of a lead pencil. "I'll be around agin six months f'm to-day. Afternoon, ma'am."

BED-BOUND FOR MONTHS.

Hope Abandoned After Physicians' Consultation.

Mrs. Enos Shearer, Yew and Washington Sts., Centralia, Wash., says: "For years I was weak and run down, could not sleep, my limbs swelled and the secretions were troublesome; pains were intense. I was fast in bed for four months. Three doctors said there was no cure for me and I was given up to die. Being urged, I used Doan's Kidney Pills. Soon I was better and in a few weeks was about the house, well and strong again."

MAKING OVER HUMAN FACES

As a New Art—Remodeling the Human Nose.

A number of years ago a physician of Vienna hit upon the scheme of using a paraffine injection under the skin for filling up a hollow nose. The idea was greeted with joy by the medical profession, as such a substance had been sorely needed. However it was soon found that paraffine was not the right thing. It was too hard, and had a tendency to form into a lump and cause irritation to the surrounding tissues. The idea was right but the substance was wrong, so said the physicians.

It remained for American ingenuity and Chicago enterprise to develop the German idea. Dr. H. J. Saunders, a specialist in the treatment of irregular features, has solved the difficulty. The doctor is a practical chemist and of a very scientific turn of mind. He saw the necessity for some preparation of this sort and that it must be a substance that would not be readily absorbed, and yet would be non-irritating. The result of his study and investigation is what he calls a "protoplasmic material." This he makes by using several of the heavy and bland oils in such proportion as to give them the desired properties. This material readily keeps its place in the tissues, and by the stimulating and healthful action of the oils is soon entirely encapsulated by a sheath of fibrous tissue.

The doctor in an address before a medical society in Chicago not long ago, gave his experience with some forty cases where he had used this protoplasmic injection. All of these had been eminently successful. In these cases frowns and wrinkles had been completely eradicated, the skin restored to its former smoothness, sunken cheeks had been filled out to harmonize with the rest of the face.

DOWN MISSOURI WAY.

Canada's Respect for Law and Order the Subject for Favorable Comment.

Those who have visited Canada are always impressed with the strict observance that is given to the laws of the country, and the order that is preserved everywhere. The editor of the Gazette of Fulton, Nev., recently paid a visit to western Canada. He was so impressed with the conditions that he saw everywhere that on his return home he was inspired to write as follows:

"Reverence and respect for law is a dominant characteristic of the Canadian people. Wherever one goes in Canada, whether east or west, the law is supreme. The law is obeyed because it is law, seemingly, and not because violation carries a penalty. Canada enforces the law and makes every law effective. No country is more free than Canada. In name Canada is a dependency of the British crown. In fact, it is almost a third republic. All its taxes are voted, collected and expended by the Dominion and the provinces. The nominal head of the government is the governor general, appointed by the English crown. Practically his only authority is to veto the acts of parliament, which he scarcely ever exercises. Canada gives nothing to the support of the English government or the English king. She gives England the advantage in trade regulations and tariff laws, and in return receives the protection of the British army and navy. Canada enjoys the protection without sharing in the expense.

The sale of liquor is strictly regulated. None but hotelkeepers may obtain license to vend the stuff, and before a license can be secured an applicant must prove good character and provide 20 rooms in his tavern for the accommodation of guests. The bar rooms close at 7 o'clock Saturday evening and remain closed until Monday morning. The schools and churches in western Canada excite admiration. Though new, western Canada is not Godless. The finest buildings in every town are the churches. Next come the school houses."

Turning to the wheat fields of western Canada, the editor of the Laurel (Neb.) Advocate of Sept. 17, says: "I have often thought that the reason that the characters of Charles Dickens are so impressed upon the minds of his readers is because he dwells upon them so long and describes them so minutely that by the time one has waded through his long drawn out stories they are so burned into his brain that he can never forget them. It was this way with the Canadian wheat fields. Had we only seen a few the memory of them might have worn away in time, but a long drawn out experience such as we had is sure to leave an ineffaceable impression. Never while we live shall we forget the Canadian wheat fields. They call it the granary of the British Empire and we don't blame 'em. Nobody who has seen their wheat fields can wonder at their enthusiasm."

It is worth while to record that these fields have now been harvested, and in many cases yields as high as forty and fifty bushels per acre have been marketed, while the general average has been away above twenty bushels per acre. Oats and barley have also done well, and the profits, the prices of grains being high, have paid the entire cost of the farms of many a farmer. There is now 160 acres of land given away, in addition to the 160 acres that the homesteader may purchase at $3.00 an acre. Particulars of this as well as the lowest railway rates will be given by the Canadian government agent.

This woman says she was saved from an operation by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lena V. Henry, of Norristown, Ga., writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I suffered untold misery from female troubles. My doctor said an operation was the only chance I had, and I dreaded it almost as much as death.

"One day I read how other women had been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I decided to try it. Before I had taken the first bottle I was better, and now I am entirely cured.

"Every woman suffering with any female trouble should take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

Corn Show

The Corn Shows at Huntington on Nov. 25 and at Roanoak on Jan. 26 were a grand success, and the samples exhibited were among the best we have handled out side of the State Show. The bushel classes consisting of 70 ears laid out in a row were something fine. No real poor samples were on exhibition and the competition was strong and close. The Columbia City Show Nov. 21 was small but of good quality and of excellent collection for the boys work. There are thirty-six members in the boys club and they have developed intense inteaest and it seems that their number will increase. DeKalb County ought to have a boys corn club of 500 boys, get busy.

A notice has been circulated among our county papers stating that the DeKalb circuit court has been asked by the Michigan Wire Fence co., to give it a judgment against S. H. Maurer. Upon investigation we find that Mr. Maurer is free from all accounts with this company as he has in his possession a receipt which makes his dealings square. We believe it would be fare for our exchanges to make a statement to this effect.

Thanksgiving Social

At Spencerville Last Thursday Evening.

One of the most pleasing events that has occured in our town for some time was the Thanksgiving social given by the W. H. and F. M. S. of the Lutheran Church at the beautiful and spacious home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Beams. In the artistically decorated dining-room a delicious supper was served to all the guests. Immediately after the serving was the Auction Sale. An auction is always interesting but this one was made doubly so by the beauty of the articles sold and by the witticisms of the crier, Mr. Frank Baltz.

The entertainment committee composed of Mrs. F. A. Dressel, Mrs. F. R. Bowman, Miss Josephine Carnes and Robert Beams, then arranged a Musical Contest. This was a love story of the Civil War, told in musical numbers, with Miss Bessie Hart at the piano. The prize winners were Miss Frances Butler first prize and Mr. Ray Houk the booby prize. A mystical game was then played which created much amusement.

The shooting of a turkey with bow and arrow was another feature of the evenings entertainment as was also the spinning fortune wheel, presided over by a realistic looking gypsy, and revealing the future to many of our young people. Throughout the evening the guests were favored with piano duets by the talented musicians Miss Opal Miller and Miss Bessie Hart. At a late hour the guests departed feeling that it is a good thing to mingle together for the purpose of giving and receiving pleasure. The amount cleared from the social was near thirty dollars

Culture Club

Mrs. Abner Copp was hostess to the Culture Club Wednesday evening. Mrs. Florence Buchanan lead the lesson which was very interesting as usual. Mrs. F. B. Leighty and Flossie Copp rendered two fine piano duets. Seventeen members responded to roll call with Bible Quotations. The treat was mixed candies.

The Old and The New

Monday was the last day for Clerk Charles Jenkins in office. W. A. Austin took his place on Tuesday, December 1. Mr. Jenkins leaves this public post of duty with no little reluctancy. He has enjoyed the work. He has enjoyed the fellowship of so many people with whom he has come into contact. Naturally Charles is a sociable fellow and makes friends as fast as he meets them. The public looses a good servant, an obliging one. Its business has been ably handled. The expediency, the precision, the neatness and the pleasantness that has characterized his word has marked him as an exceptionally good official. He has been assisted by Deputy Edward W. Atkinson. The two working together, have the books in excellent condition for their successors to take over. They have the official robe all pressed and cleaned for Mr. Austin and his deputy, J. T. W. McClellan, to put on. They have been in the office several days getting "next" and will be pretty well prepared to take up the voluminous work on Tuesday.—Dispatch.

Clyde Woodcox and family with Dale and his family of Caseyville Ky., came back to St. Joe Sunday morning, and will move here on account of Mrs. Woodcox being afflicted with rheumatism.

There was one thing we were all thankful for and that was the great and glorious rain last week. The wheat has put on a different color, the cisterns were filled, the corn was put in shape for husking and the dust was laid.

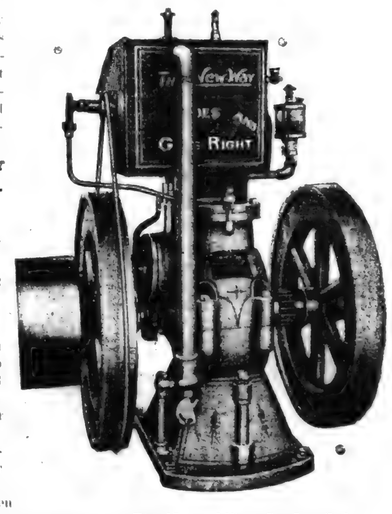
The Antwerp Bee celebrated its fourteenth birthday last week. Mr. and Mrs. Osborn are to be congratulated upon their little paper as it is a newsy as well as a busy bee. Its appearance speaks well for the town as the advertising is large.

INTERESTING TO UP-TO-DATE FARMERS.

What you need is a reliable gasoline engine to do your work and increase your profits.

The "NEW WAY" Engine is conceded by Mechanical Engineers and men of high authority to be the most perfect engine in mechanical design and construction manufactured.

No water tanks or water. Cooled perfectly by air.



SO SIMPLE YOUR BOY CAN RUN IT.

The next time you are in town, just drop in and examine the 3 to 3 1-2 H. P. "NEW WAY" engine on our floor. If you don't say it is the best engine you have ever seen or heard of, we will be greatly mistaken

Engine can be seen running at The News Office, St. Joe, Ind.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

Burglars and Citizens in Battle.

Daring safeblowers dynamited the vault in the Farmers' Bank, in Clarkshill, ten miles south of Lafayette, Ind., and were surprised before they had completed their work. The little town was thrown into a state of wild excitement, and a revolver battle with the robbers followed the attempt to rob the bank. Four men were concerned in the blowing of the safe. They effected an entrance through the front door, wrenched off the outside doors of the safe with crowbars, and used a heavy charge of dynamite to blow open the fire-proof doors inside. Just as the explosion occurred Lee Taylor and Albert Parvis, two young men of the town, were passing in a buggy. The noise of the explosion frightened their horse and it ran away, throwing the men out into the street. They hurried to a livery stable, obtained rifles and returned to the bank just as the robbers were fleeing through a rear door. Many shots were exchanged, but no one was injured.

Gold Hidden in Pile of Corncobs.

At the home of David Slayback, a bachelor, who was found dead near Lebanon, Ind., the neighbors found in a pile of corncobs an even $2,000, all in gold. The money had originally been tied up in paper, but rats had been at work, and the coins were well scattered through the pile of cobs. Mr. Slayback drew $4,700 in cash from a Lebanon bank last spring. He was eccentric, and would have nothing to do with his relatives. To outsiders, however, he occasionally displayed a generous nature, and has been known to cancel notes as high as $1,500 for working people who had come to him. A few years ago he was worked for $3,000 by sharpers, who sold him some worthless paper. Two years ago he built a church at Rosston for the congregation there, paying all of the expenses himself.

Explosion Kills Ten or More.

Ten or more persons are dead and twice as many injured as a result of an explosion on the Mississippi river steamer H. M. Carter, near Bayou Goula, about 100 miles north of New Orleans, La. The boiler of the Carter exploded while the steamer was on its way from New Orleans to Baton Rouge with a cargo of general merchandise and fifty or more passengers. To add to the horror of the disaster fire succeeded the explosion and the boat was burned to the water's edge. Reliable reports from Bayou Goula are that fifteen persons are missing, and that the loss of life will be about the same number, and about that number were injured.

Three Negroes Lynched.

The little town of Tiptonville, Tenn., bordering on Reelfoot Lake, which has been the scene of many stirring incidents the past month, witnessed the lynching of three negroes who were arrested for murdering Special Deputy Sheriff Richard Burruss and fatally wounding John Hall, a deputy sheriff. The negroes' names were Marshall Steinback, Edward Steinback, Jim Steinback.

Suicide for School Girl.

Marie Morgan, 16 years old, daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Morgan, living one mile east of Gas City, Ind., committed suicide by shooting herself through the heart. She was a junior in the Gas City High School and left a note stating that because her studies were too difficult she decided to end her life. Another report is that a love affair was the cause of the act.

Indiana Girl Has Fine School Record.

Miss Goldie Gibson, of North Salem, Ind., it is believed, holds a State record for school attendance. She is a High School pupil now in her third year, who has not been tardy, sick or absent in her eleven years of school life. In addition, all her grades have been good. She hopes to complete the twelve-year course and graduate with the record unbroken.

Fulton and Miami County, Ohio, Dry.

A dispatch from Columbus, Ohio, says: Fulton County voted dry by 96; Miami County dry by 1,350. In the former there are 24 saloons and in the latter 60.

Michigan Cattle Afflicted.

It is reported at Detroit, Mich., that more than forty cases of foot and mouth disease have been discovered in herds of cattle in Livonia Township, in Wayne County.

KAISER'S TALK OF WAR PUBLIC.

German Emperor Said to Have Declared Strife Inevitable.

The New York World publishes what it says is an accurate and authentic synopsis of the now world celebrated interview granted by Kaiser Wilhelm to Dr. William Bayard Hale, and which was suppressed at the request of the German government. Summarized, the main points of the Kaiser's interview, which took place on the imperial yacht Hohenzollern off Bergen, Norway, are as follows:

That King Edward of Great Britain had been humiliating him for more than two years and that he was exasperated; that Germany was the paramount power in all Europe, and that England was trying to neutralize that power.

That he held France in the hollow of his hand, and that Russia was of no account since the disastrous war she had waged with Japan.

That if the Pan-European war which has been so much talked about was inevitable the sooner it came the better it would be for him, because he was ready and was tired of the suspense.

That Great Britain had been a decadent nation ever since her victory over the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, because hers was an unrighteous, ungodly cause, and divine judgment was bound eventually to overtake the powerful nation that waged such a war.

That the Anglo-Japanese alliance was an iniquitous alliance against all the white races, England proving absolutely her faithlessness as a Christian nation; that Japan was honeycombing India with sedition and flooding it with spies while professing openly to be England's friend and ally.

That the only way to counteract this alliance was for Germany and America to act together at an early date or America would have to fight the Japanese in ten months.

That in the event of a great war England would lose many of her large colonies, especially those in the Pacific, and that all he would take for Germany would be Egypt, though he would liberate the holy land from the yoke of infidel, presumably meaning the Sultan.

That the perfecting of the Zeppelin dirigible balloon would give Germany a powerful vantage in war, and she was ready to make use of it to the fullest extent.

Leonard Wood in Command.

Major Gen. Leonard Wood, upon his recent arrival at New York from Europe, relieved Gen. Grant as commander of the Department of the East, with headquarters at Governor's Island. Gen. Wood said he was glad to be home again after his six years in the Philippines. Speaking of the war maneuvers which he witnessed in France and Germany, he said that dirigible balloons were an unqualified success in Europe, and that it was a common thing to see them maneuvering in the sky in Germany, and that the time was coming when they would be protected from shot from below. The aeroplane, he said, was bound to come after the dirigible, and would probably prove more efficient. The Wright brothers he called the leaders as aeroplanists. Gen. Wood described the conditions in the Philippines as peaceful and prosperous, but said there would be even more prosperity if trade relations with this country were better. He thought Philippines products should be admitted into this country free, that it was hard for farmers to raise crops under the American flag and then have to pay duty on them. Philippine scouts, he said, were among the finest soldiers in the world.

SPARKS FROM THE WIRES.

G. P. Engelhardt has returned to New York from Guatemala with specimens of the stingless bee.

F. L. De la Barra has been appointed to succeed Enrique Creel as Mexican ambassador to Washington.

Thomas McGrath, a St. Louis election official, was sentenced to four years in the penitentiary for making false returns.

The Rev. Dr. Myron W. Haynes, formerly of Chicago, has resigned the pastorate of the Delmar Avenue Baptist church in St. Louis. He says enemies have hounded him.

Col. William F. Tucker, husband of the daughter of Gen. John A. Logan, will have to undergo an operation for Bright's disease, according to a statement issued by his physician.

J. W. Soloman, a Salt Lake City lineman, narrowly escaped death when he fell from a pole among broken wires charged with 4,000 volts. He picked his way through the deadly wires to safety.

FIFTY MAY BE DEAD IN ARKANSAS STORM

Two Tornadoes Sweep Large Section of State, Causing Death and Injury.

HAVOC WHERE THEY MEET.

Region Swept Bare, Trees and Houses Being Leveled—Town of Piney Wiped Out.

Two tornadoes, one from the north and the other from the south, swept over western Arkansas late Monday afternoon, killing many persons and destroying much property. From reports received it is estimated that thirty to fifty lives were lost. The property damage will reach hundreds of thousands of dollars.

One tornado started in the extreme southwestern part of the State and went north, touching the second tier of counties from the western boundary line. The other started in the northwestern corner of the State and went south, devastating the second and third tier of counties. The counties through which the storms passed are Lafayette, Columbia, Miller, Pike, Howard, Hempstead, Montgomery, Yell, Pope, Johnson, Franklin and Carroll.

Many Killed at Piney.

Piney, a German settlement on the Iron Mountain railroad, between Knoxville and London, suffered most severely, and was practically wiped out. The number of dead is estimated from nine to twenty. Five business houses and a number of dwellings were destroyed.

From the towns of Berryville and Cravens the most definite reports are received. At the former three persons were injured, and the property loss is estimated between $25,000 and $40,000. At Cravens four persons are known to be dead. They are members of the family of John Rosin, a farmer, who were caught under the falling timbers of their home. L. G. Holt and wife, an aged couple, were injured.

A dispatch from Knoxville partly confirms the report that the Village of Barr, four miles from that place, was wrecked. In the vicinity of Mulberry five persons are reported to have been killed. At Lodi the Methodist church and several other buildings were destroyed.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

The election of Secretary of State Elihu Root as United States Senator to succeed Senator Platt was advocated in resolutions adopted by the Union League club in New York.

That the Republicans will continue in control of both branches of Congress at least for another two years was known the morning after election, although the majority in the House had been reduced apparently to forty-five, as compared with fifty-seven in the present House. Cannon was again elected by a comfortable plurality, in spite of the national fight made against him, both by organized labor and by various progressive influences. Most of the Republican Congressmen in Nebraska and elsewhere who were pledged not to support Cannon for the Speakership were themselves beaten at the polls. In Iowa one of the Republican veterans who went down to defeat was Hepburn. His Democratic successor is a young editor, D. Jamison. Other Republicans retired are Overstreet of Indiana, McCreary of Pennsylvania, Charles B. Landis and others.

County division was beaten at every point in western North Dakota, and the counties will do business in the same old way. But the fight will be continued and no new court houses will be built for two years.

President Gompers of the Federation of Labor said that the moral influence of the campaign is with the cause of the workers and that the part labor took compelled the discussion to be devoted almost exclusively to the labor question. Though temporarily defeated, he insisted that labor was not conquered by intrenched wealth.

FOOLED UNCLE SAM.

How the Creek Indians Euchered Him Out of $7,000,000.

The Creek Indians have euchered Congress to the tune of $7,000,000 in their treaty agreements, and the first knowledge Congress will have of it will be this winter, when the Indians and the representatives of the Department of the Interior will demand that Congress settle up. And the Creeks are laughing up their sleeves at the clever trap into which Congress walked.

The first Creek agreement provided that each Creek should receive 160 acres of land, the maximum appraised value of which should be $1,040. Those who got land appraised for less than the maximum were to have the difference in land or in money. Then the Creeks slipped through Congress an innocent-looking measure that provided that new-born children should be admitted to the rolls.

Congress had not figured, but the Creeks had. The result was that the new-born children took up all the surplus land for allotments. The allotting is completed and the Indians now are ready for a final settlement, and it will be recommended to Congress this winter by the commissioners of the five tribes and the Secretary of the Interior.

The Creeks have only $3,000,000 assets, as a tribe. This leaves them a net $7,000,000, which Congress will have to pay. It is just $7,000,000 additional wealth the Creeks have procured by outwitting Congress.

There are nearly 20,000 Creeks. This $7,000,000 will mean $350 to every man, woman and child, and when it is paid will be the greatest amount of money the Creeks ever had at one time. Every Creek allottee will share in it, unless he got land that was appraised at the full $1,040. It makes no difference if an Indian has gotten his allotment and sold every acre of it, if it was appraised for $700 by the government he will be entitled to $340 in money.

GATUN DAM AT PANAMA SINKING

Heavy Rainfalls Undermine Structure, Causing Earth to Settle.

Because of the exceptionally heavy rainfalls of the last three weeks the earth on the crest of the Gatun dam, in Panama, has settled in certain places. The dam, which is designed to hold in check the waters of the Chagres river, was in the beginning fifty feet wide; it has now been extended to a length of 300 feet.

In view of the existing conditions the settlement of the dam was expected. The reason is the heavy weight of the embankment. There is nothing to prevent this falling in, and it will have to continue.

There have been other settlements in the vicinity of the dam at Gatun, and the rains have resulted, furthermore, in several landslides in the Culebra cut. The railroad track is inundated on both sides for a distance of several miles.

Automatic Train Protection.

A device invented by P. J. Simmen of Los Angeles to prevent collisions of railroad trains, and which is in successful operation on a trial section of the Santa Fe railroad in Southern California, is now being investigated by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Under this system each train records on a sheet in the dispatcher's office the exact time it enters and leaves a block and the dispatcher can signal to any engineer either to stop or to proceed. The dispatcher is protected from human error by the automatic interlocking of the switches by which he signals the trains. That is, a signal for a train to go ahead can not be given unless the block is clear. A danger signal is given automatically by the presence of a train, broken rail or open switch in the block ahead, or by the dispatcher, and if it be not obeyed by an engineer in the next 1,000 feet, his train is automatically stopped. The engineer can prevent the stop only by reducing the speed to the required limit. The time and place where a danger signal is given is recorded automatically on the engine. An official test is to be made.

Comic Supplement Passing.

The decision of the Boston Herald to abandon the comic supplement hitherto published with its Sunday issue has renewed the discussion of this journalistic policy. That paper explained editorially that "a great newspaper no longer needs a clown" and asserts besides that comic supplements have ceased to be comic. It adds: "They have become as vulgar in design as they are tawdry in color. There is no longer any semblance of art in them, and if there are any ideas they are low and descending lower."

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The Weekly Review of Chicago Trade, published by R. G. Dun & Co., says:

"Evidences of healthy recovery in commerce become more distinct. The recent rise in the volume of payments through the banks is accentuated by an aggregate which is the largest in thirteen months and exceeds that of the corresponding week in 1906, when business was exceptionally good.

"Trading defaults also make a gratifying exhibit, both numbers and liabilities being only one-half those recorded at this time last year.

"Another gratifying testimony is seen in the diminishing ranks of idle workers and freight cars. Investment interest has become very encouraging, a safer balance being established by the check to overtrading in Wall street securities. Money is ample for legitimate purposes and the discount rate favors renewed enterprise along both industrial and financial lines.

"Local developments denote increasing activity in production and distribution. Movements of finished products and crude materials furnish heavier tonnage to the railroads, while marketings of farm products run above those of a year ago. Notable gains appear in forwarding of flour, provisions and live stock.

"Ore receipts are ample for the winter consumption and new furnaces at Gary will start in a few weeks. Heavy orders permit more employment of machinery and labor at Pullman, and in some iron branches there is now day and night work.

"Railroad returns testify to sustained recovery in earnings of the Chicago systems, and more pressure appears for equipment to market corn and live stock within the next few weeks.

"Merchandise stocks undergo rapid reduction, while the luxuries do fairly well, particularly in furs, jewelry and art wares. Mail orders disclose more confidence of country buyers and there are substantial selections of spring and summer staples. House buying provides fair activity in dry goods, footwear, men's furnishings and food products.

"Bank clearings, $236,598,289, exceed those of corresponding week in 1907 by 35.4 per cent, and compare with $241,354,469 in 1906.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number 18, against 28 last week, 36 in 1907 and 26 in 1906. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 5, against 10 last week, 14 in 1907 and 10 in 1906."

NEW YORK.

Enlargement and expansion are still the dominating influences in trade and industry, and the volume of sales and of orders booked by wholesalers and manufacturers continues to show gains, particularly in the commercial and manufacturing centers of the North, East and West.

Still certain evidences of irregularity are found in the reports that mild weather is restricting sales of winter goods at retail in the above sections, and southern advices are that improvement in that section is rather slower than expected and that low cotton prices and holding of that product by producers are checking trade and collections.

Idle cars are reported growing fewer in number rapidly. Heavier buying of pig iron is reported at the East and lake markets are more active, but Pittsburg reports transactions smaller. Prices are higher.

In wholesale and jobbing lines North, East and West reports are generally that trade is expanding, that spring purchases are increasing and that stocks in final distributers' hands are light. Cotton goods are growing in demand and prices are being advanced.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Nov. 19 number 273, against 267 last week, 265 in the like week of 1907, 212 in 1906, 224 in 1905 and 193 in 1904. Business failures in Canada for the week number 33, which compares with 22 last week and 35 in the same week last year.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

REBATE KILLS OIL RIVALS.

Rockefeller Cheerfully Tells How Competitors Were Driven Out.

John D. Rockefeller's own story of his fortunes and the history of the birth of the great Standard Oil Company, was listened to with breathless interest by a large crowd that jammed the courtroom at the hearing before Referee Franklin Ferris in New York Thursday. With seeming candor he told how and why the combination was created, and cheerfully admitted that it secured rebates from the railroads which enabled it to drive competitors out of business.

J. D. ROCKEFELLER.

It was the final reply of the oil company to the attacks that have been made for years, the revelations of Miss Ida Tarbell, the fulminations of campaign orators, the charges in newspapers, and the remarkable letters of John D. Archbold that injured Senator Foraker and smirched half a dozen statesmen.

In answer to questions by John G. Milburn, his counsel, Mr. Rockefeller told how his combination reached out its tentacles for more and more refineries of rivals, and fattened on them for ten years or more, till it became strong enough to change into what became the Standard Oil Company of Ohio. Between 1872 and 1882 the Rockefeller combine bought and bought rivals. When it was strong enough it organized them all into one concern. The oil king said that the company was constantly reaching out for more refineries and more markets.

It bought refineries to get them out of competition and to get their business. That is the way H. H. Rogers and John D. Archbold went into the company. They were bought up. Both were strong, brilliant and bold. The Rockefeller combine had to get them out of the way; it absorbed their rival concerns and them at the same time. Mr. Rockefeller snapped up the American Lubricating Company, and once in that field he looked around for more lubricating companies. Before his rivals appreciated what had been done, his combine controlled most of these concerns that had done business between 1870 and 1880.

When the Pennsylvania railroad, through its Empire Pipe Line, began gathering oil and shipping it to the seaboard at reduced rates, the Standard stepped in. A bitter war followed, the end of which came only when the Empire concern was turned over to Rockefeller and the dangerous competition wiped out. The railroad for its surrender was permitted to form a car combination, the certificates of which were bought by Rockefeller and his associates. "Whatever they had we took," Mr. Rockefeller said, in explaining the absorption of the Empire concern.

FROM FOREIGN LANDS

The most conservative reports from Great Britain tell of an unprecedented condition of unemployment in that country, a situation so desperate that the government can no longer ignore it. Already great numbers of the idle workmen have shown signs of extreme discontent. Some groups were reported to be on the march toward London and at Glasgow bloodshed was prevented only by the prompt action of the city authorities in appropriating $500,000 for public works, to give relief. Dublin also is spending $50,000 for the relief of her poor. Liverpool, Sheffield, Birmingham and other industrial centers are likewise confronted with an acute situation. In the face of these facts Premier Asquith has announced his intention of formulating a general plan for giving relief.

The highest court of Australia has rendered a decision invalidating one of the important laws passed in the interest of organized labor, the party which holds the balance of power in that country. The unions had forced the passage of a law imposing an internal tax upon the output of the manufacturers of agricultural instruments. This was designed to about counterbalance the effect of the protective tariff, but gave to all concerns which paid the union scale of wages an entire remission of the tax. As the labor unions controlled the Parliament, they could remit or impose the tax upon whatever business they saw fit, so that no business which suits the unions could be put out of the running. The court decided, by a vote of 3 to 2, that the new law was unconstitutional on the theory that the purpose of the law is to regulate wages instead of to levy a tax or to raise revenue.

By a vote of 438 to 47, the French Chamber of Deputies has condemned the campaign which the anti-Dreyfusards are conducting against the decision in the case of Major Dreyfus, handed down by the court of cassation in 1906.

The venerable Russian patriot and revolutionist, Nicholas Tschaikovsky, who has been in prison at St. Petersburg for many months, and who has many friends in England and America, was released the other day on $25,000 cash bail demanded by the Russian government, the money being contributed by wealthy friends in this country and in England.

Aunt Diana

The Sunshine of the Family

CHAPTER XI.

Maplewood owned a garden of very tolerable dimensions, but it was already crowded when the Merles made their appearance at the fete on Thursday afternoon. The lawn was covered by gayly dressed people; tennis had not yet begun, but the band was playing. As soon as Alison had greeted her hostess she looked round anxiously for Anna. She had no desire to linger beside Mrs. Hardwick; the handsome, talkative widow had already excited her aversion. As she turned away in search of her friend, Miss Hardwick came up to them in company with a tall, dark man.

"Mabel, dear," she said, almost ignoring Alison, "I must introduce Tony to you—my cousin, Captain Harper. Tony, this is my especial friend, and I shall expect you to pay her a great deal of attention, on peril of my displeasure."

"I am too happy to perform such a pleasing duty, I am sure," lisped Anthony, but his bold black eyes passed over Missie's simpering pretty little face to Alison's.

"Is this another special friend of yours, Eva?" he observed, twisting his mustache and looking full at her as he spoke. Miss Hardwick made the introduction somewhat reluctantly; Alison bowed a little haughtily; she was not prepossessed with Captain Harper's appearance, and she determined to have as little as possible to do with him; he seemed about to speak to her, but she turned suddenly to Miss Hardwick.

"I do not see your sister," she said, in a low voice.

"Oh, I daresay not," she answered, carelessly. "I never knew Anna ever ready for anything; she is not half dressed, I suppose. Now, Tony, you must take Mabel for your partner in the first set, and Edgar Dawson and Miss Freeland will play against you."

"We had better take our places then," drawled Captain Harper; and, left to herself, Alison turned to Roger and asked him to walk with her to the house.

"I am going in search of Anna," she said as she left him, and she asked one of the servants who was just entering the tea room to take her to Anna's bedroom. The maid looked surprised, but she put down her tray at once and preceded Alison upstairs.

"That is Miss Anna's room," she said, pointing to the door; "she is dressing, I believe. A hamper of flowers came, and she has only just finished arranging them."

"I dare say I shall be able to help her," returned Alison, knocking at the door. "My dear child," exclaimed Alison, in a surprised voice, as she entered, "why, you have not begun to dress," for Anna was standing at the window in her gray linen gown, evidently watching the gay scene, but the tears were rolling down her cheeks.

"Oh, I can not dress now," she sobbed as Alison kissed her, "it is so late, and I am so tired; Eva said the flowers must be done, and I have only just finished them. I saw Mr. Roger and you and Mabel come in, and I did so long to come out, but now I am just tired out, and I can't stop crying."

"Oh, you will cheer up directly, and I am going to stop and help you," returned Alison, brightly. "Bathe your eyes with some eau-de-cologne and water; I will be back in a moment." And running downstairs Alison made her way into the tea room, and after a few words with the good-natured maid she had already accosted, she was soon provided with a cup of coffee and some delicious looking cake.

"Now you are to leave off crying and take these good things I have brought you," coaxed Alison, "and then I will help you to dress. You are tired and worried, but the coffee will refresh you." But Anna's answer was a fresh burst of tears, as she threw her arms round her neck.

"Oh, how kind you are to me. I do love you so; no one ever took such trouble for me before."

"Then you must thank me by enjoying the coffee," laughed Alison, but a sympathizing drop hung on her own lashes. Nevertheless, she talked on cheerfully until Anna had dried her eyes and drunk her coffee, and then she coaxed her to let her brush her hair and arrange it. Anna sat quite patient and docile under Alison's hands; she did not even look at herself till the pretty cream colored dress was fastened, and the flowers arranged, and then Alison led her to the glass.

"Why, I look quite different; what have you done to me?" observed Anna, in a bewildered tone. "I am not like myself at all."

"You have never taken enough pains with your appearance," she replied.

They were met in the hall by Roger and Captain Harper; the gentlemen were evidently in search of them.

"I thought you had lost yourself, Allie," observed Roger; and as he turned to her companion a low whistle of astonishment broke from his lips, and was at once promptly suppressed.

"I did not know you, Miss Anna," was all he ventured to say, but both Alison and Anna colored with pleasure under the approving look he bestowed on them.

"Miss Merle, I hope, now I have taken all this trouble to find you, that you will not refuse to be my partner in this set," asked Captain Harper, so eagerly that he had almost forgotten his usual drawl.

Alison assented rather coldly, but her reluctance vanished when she found Roger and Anna meant to oppose them. She almost forgot her dislike to her partner during the long, well contested game, which soon drew a crowd of spectators round them; her skill and animation delighted Captain Harper. Missie was watching them rather curiously.

"I did not know Alison was such a good player," she said at last, when Eva joined her. "Captain Harper did not exert himself quite so much when he played with me," with a displeased toss of her head.

"He knows we are watching him, darling, and that puts him on his mettle," returned her friend, soothingly.

"Really, Eva," Mabel said presently, "I never saw Anna look so well."

Miss Hardwick turned her long neck superciliously, and regarded her sister with surprise.

"That must be Alison's doing," she said with evident pleasure. "Anna never did her own hair, I am sure of that." But her handsome face clouded still more when Missie proceeded to take her to task.

"You ought to look after her a little more, Eva," said Missie. "You have so much taste yourself you ought to help her choose her dresses. I should be ashamed if my sister looked as dowdy as Anna generally does."

The rest of the afternoon passed like a happy dream to Anna. She played another game with Roger, who seemed bent on having her for a partner; and afterward, when Alison had succeeded in shaking off Captain Harper by infusing into her manner a fine degree of girlish hauteur and coolness not easily to be mistaken, the three sat together, passing kindly remarks on the rest of the company.

But the crowning happiness of the afternoon to Anna was when Missie addressed her in the condescending manner of one who confers a benefit.

"You have not been to see us lately," she said, quite graciously. "I have told Eva that she must bring you sometimes to talk to Alison." And after this Anna's cup of joy seemed overflowing.

CHAPTER XII.

"Thank you, Mabel dear, for what you have said to Anna," said Alison, gratefully, as they left the grounds of Maplewood.

"Oh, of course, I gave Eva a piece of my mind. She is always so reasonable and sweet-tempered that I never have any difficulty. Anna may come to The Holms as often as she likes." Then, with a perceptible effort to seem at her ease, she continued hurriedly: "Eva is going to bring her cousin to afternoon tea to-morrow. I hope it will be fine, and then we can set the table under the lime trees; our drawing room is such an ugly room."

"Do you mean Captain Harper is coming?" returned Alison. "Oh, Mabel! how could you ask him? I am sure papa will not be pleased. I do not like him at all; his manners are so artificial and disagreeable."

"It is a pity you did not stop at Riverston," she returned, in an injured voice, "for none of our Chesterton folk, with the exception of that stupid Anna, seem good enough for you. I think Captain Harper charming, and I am sure papa will be pleased with him unless you set him against the poor fellow." And here Missie looked decidedly cross.

"You may be sure that I shall say nothing to papa," replied Alison, with so much dignity that Missie was silenced. But she was terribly annoyed all the same, and took Roger into her confidence, exacting from him a promise that he would be present at all risks.

"Perhaps I am wrong," she remarked, candidly; "I am always so ready with my likes and dislikes. But I can not bear Captain Harper, and it is odious to me to pour out his tea for him."

Alison's anxiety was soon set at rest. The party from Maplewood, including Anna, had not long been gathered under the lime trees before Mr. Merle made his appearance, greatly to her delight and Missie's discomfiture. Alison never found out if Roger had betrayed her trust and given his father warning of the expected guest. But there was no mistaking the coolness of his manner to Captain Harper. That unlucky individual was clearly not at his ease, and certainly no inducement was held out to him to repeat his visit.

As soon as the unwelcome visitor had departed Mr. Merle expressed himself as much displeased to find Captain Harper there; indeed, his severity quite overwhelmed Missie, and she retired in floods of tears.

"Papa is never angry with me," she sobbed; "this must be your fault, Alison. You have come home to stir up strife and turn papa against me."

"Don't be absurd, Mabel," returned Alison, a little crossly; "you have brought it all on yourself. Papa seems angry with me, too, and yet you know I am not at all in fault. If you do wrong you must bear to be scolded. Papa says he is quite shocked at our forwardness. You see, he blames me, too. He says no one but himself or Roger ought to invite gentlemen to the house, and Miss Leigh says the same. He told me after you left the room that he would take care that Captain Harper should not repeat his visit, as he was not the sort of man whose acquaintance he could approve for his daughters."

Missie dissolved into fresh tears on hearing this. "I am sure it is not papa's real opinion," she persisted in saying. Roger had put him up to it to spite her and Eva. What would Eva say if she were forbidden to bring her cousin to The Holms? She wished Alison would go back to Aunt Diana, and not stop here to make her so wretched. She did not see the use of having a sister who hated and thwarted her.

"Oh, you silly child!" exclaimed Alison, kissing the wet, ill-tempered little face that still looked so pretty. "What a storm in a teacup! I don't hate you a bit. I am very fond of you, though you will quarrel with me about every trifle; but it takes two to quarrel properly, and I do not mean to take up the cudgels to please you!" And here she gave her a playful shake, that so astonished Missie that she speedily grew more amiable, for her temper had never been so set aside before.

Roger had been looking very worried and careworn for some days, and Alison was afraid, from her father's grave face and silence with his son, that things had gone wrong again at the mill, and that, as usual, the blame had been laid on Roger. She was waiting for an opportunity to speak to him, for his engagements had taken him out several nights, when one evening she met him as she was returning from the town.

He was walking along rather moodily, with his eyes fixed on the ground, and did not see Alison until she called him by name; and then he looked up and his face brightened in a moment.

"Where have you been, Allie?" he asked, smiling at her; and Roger's smile was very pleasant. "The house felt dull without you, so I came out for a solitary prowl."

"Very well, you shall have your prowl; only it will not be solitary any longer, for I am not tired in the least, and mean to come, too."

"Very well, then," he said, leading the way toward a quiet, shady road, "I am just in the right mood for a talk, and you are the right sort of company."

"I am so glad I satisfy you, Roger," she said, looking at him affectionately, "I wish all brothers were like you, and cared as much for their sisters."

"So they would, if all sisters were your sort," was his flattering answer; only Roger meant what he said. "Allie, of course I know you will go back to Aunt Diana one day, but you must promise me not to leave us just yet."

"Oh, Roger, of course not. How could I go while you wanted me?"

"My dear, in that case you would never leave us at all. No, no, I am not quite so selfish as that. One day you shall go, Allie, but not just yet, not till things are more settled, and we are all happier. Do you know, dear, I wonder sometimes how I held on those two years without you; your absence made me miss mother more." And Roger's lip trembled a little. Alison pressed his arm without speaking; there was no need for other words between them, they were so sure of each other's sympathy.

"Roger, I wish you would tell me what has been troubling you for the last few days," she said. "Something has gone very wrong; you have been terribly grave all the week, and yesterday you were too worried to eat properly. I hope you mean to take me into your confidence, dear; perhaps I could find some way of helping you."

"I wish you could, Allie," he returned, sadly; "I wish I could see a way out of our terrible difficulties. Promise me you will be as secret as a statue, and I will tell you a little of what has happened."

"Oh, you may trust me," she replied, lifting her honest brown eyes to his face.

"I believe I may, and it will be a relief to speak, Allie, Fergusson is going too far; I am convinced in my own mind that he has tampered with the accounts; we shall come to a crash directly."

"What do you mean?" turning a little pale. Roger spoke so vehemently.

"It would take too long to tell you all, but something very unpleasant has happened this week. You know my father went to Lancaster the other day. Well, a check in payment for a consignment of timber was unexpectedly paid in during his absence. Of course I indorsed the check, wrote out a receipt, inclosed it in an envelope and put it in the usual rack for postage. I then made an entry in the ledger, and was just going to lock up the ledger and the check in the safe, as it was nearly time for closing, when the sudden cessation of the machinery told me some accident had happened, and of course I ran out of the office, and so did Fergusson, our manager."

"Oh, I know! when poor Mitchell was hurt," returned Alison, with a shudder. "I remember seeing both you and Mr. Fergusson standing bare headed among the men in the yard; you were sending Timothy for a doctor."

"Yes: I was detained for nearly half an hour. Fergusson must have gone back to the office—at least I missed him after the first few minutes. When they had taken Mitchell off to the hospital I went back to lock up things for the night. Fergusson was just coming out of the office and handed me the keys. Everything was locked up, he said, and the messenger had fetched the letters. I had put the check into my father's private drawer and had locked the drawer, but the ledger had been left open on the table, with my entry written on the top of a blank page. I had noticed the page was a little loose, as though the corresponding one had been cut out some time previously, but I was in a hurry, and I thought it did not matter. When Fergusson told me everything was locked up for the night and handed me the office keys, of course there was nothing for me but to take them. Allie, what do you suppose were my feelings when we opened the private drawer the next morning and there was no check there? Neither was my entry in the ledger; the loose page was gone, and, to add to my perplexity, the firm who had paid in the check wrote to complain that there had been no acknowledgment or receipt; and yet I had written both myself and placed the stamped envelope among the other letters for postage."

(To be continued.)

The Poor Milkman Again.

The milkman was boiling over with indignation.

"And you mean to say my milk don't look right?" he snapped. "Why, lady, this can of milk is a picture."

"Ah, yes," laughed the keen housewife, "a fine water color."

With the Summer Girls.

Pearl—Are there many young men down here, my dear?

Ruby—Very few. It is a game to catch them.

Pearl—And what are the rules of the game?

Ruby—Why, "catch-as-catch-can."

Ignorance of Youth.

"Now," said the very young man "let us take the average woman, for example; she——"

"But," interrupted the gentleman with the missing hair, "there is no average woman. Every woman considers herself above the average."

Soft Nothings.

Airship Maid (in alarm)—Gracious! Air Pilot—What's the trouble, miss?

Airship Maid—Why, something soft struck me on th cheek.

Air Pilot—Oh, don't worry. That was only a wireless love message some chap was sending to his girl.

An Indignity.

"I tell you, sir, kissing the hand that smites you is nothing to what I saw in the hotel this morning."

"What was that?"

"The porter blacking the boots that had kicked him last night."

Colombia is 10 times as large as New York State, as long from north to south as from St. Paul to New Orleans. Its coastline is equal in distance from New York to Chicago. It has produced over $600,000,000 worth of gold.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

The largest yield of corn reported in the vicinity of Bourbon is that of C. W. Shakes, who owns a farm that was formerly swamp land. The yield was a fraction over one hundred bushels to the acre.

Harold, the 7-year-old son of Charles P. Voshell and wife, living on a farm near Lawrenceburg, was operated on for appendicitis. A small round glass button was removed from his appendix. The child is in a critical condition and his recovery is doubtful.

Claude Parker, of near Flora, recently shot an owl or an eagle. The bird is on exhibition at Flora and is attracting considerable attention. Its head and face resemble very much that of an owl, having the circled eyes, while the body and wings are like those of an eagle and its bill and feet are more like that of an eagle. The bird measures five feet from tip to tip.

After having occupied offices in the Saks Building, Washington and Pennsylvania streets, Indianapolis, for nearly thirty years, Vice President C. W. Fairbanks has ceased to be a tenant. The Vice President's extensive law library was moved to his home. It was said that after his term expired, March 4, Vice President Fairbanks might decide to open offices in another location.

Nicholas Darrell, a fur buyer, of Morocco, for a time believed that this season would eclipse all previous winters in the number of black skunk, but later he was chagrined to discover that fully two-thirds of the supposed black skins purchased by him were what is known as "broad-stripe," colored black wth printer's ink. Darrell paid fully double what the colored skins were worth.

A panther attacked and killed a hog on the farm of Levi Skelton, west of Owensville. Mr. Skelton was an eyewitness to the attack and, hastening to the house, he got his gun, but in the meantime the panther had made good its escape. Mr. Skelton is certain the strange-looking animal was a panther, as he was only a few feet away when it attacked the hog. Last winter a panther appeared in the county and created no end of excitement.

Grant County may have thirteen former sheriffs living, but Hamilton County has fifteen, all but two of whom are still living in the county. Charles Morrow has been farming in Kansas several years, and George Bragg is a resident of Howard County. The other former sheriffs living are Levi Newcomer, T. J. Lindley, David Patty, Geo. Nagle, Evan Bray, Elihu Hawkins, W. A. Semans, A. J. Fryberger, Philip Rhoades, J. P. Bradfield, J. A. Owen, and L. R. Haworth. Hamilton County also has thirteen former treasurers living.

The suit against the Rev. George T. Butler, of Albion, brought by Mrs. Belle Howard, of Peru, to recover money obtained from her by Mr. Butler for cement factory stock has been dismissed. Mrs. Howard asserted that the minister had misrepresented the stock, and she, together with many others in Peru, had purchased in amounts totaling $20,000. The cement plant was never finished, and the stockholders received no dividends. The company was organized by Toledo capitalists represented by Mr. Butler in the sale of stock.

Miss Grace April, daughter of Fred April, a Ripley County farmer, living near Perseverance, has set a hard pace for other fair nimrods of her county. In one day's hunt she bagged ten rabbits. She hunts without a dog and uses a single-barrelel breechloader. She does not shoot quail because "they are so cute—perfect little dears—you know." She has practiced shooting ever since she was able to handle a gun. Other crack shots in Ripley County are Dr. Florence M. Olmsted, of Versailles, and Miss Daisy Belle Rouse, of Milan. Miss Rouse is associate editor of the Versailles Republican and a writer of novels of the "love story" type.

Oscar Furr, a Muncie policeman, has, he believes, the champion rabbit dog of the State. When he goes hunting he does not take a gun, his sole "weapon" being this Aerdale dog. It can catch any rabbit that jumps, according to the policeman. One day last week Furr and the dog went into the country and Furr stopped at a farmhouse to talk with the farmer. While the two were conversing the dog disappeared and, search as they would for the valuable animal, he could not be found. A little while later they heard a joyful yelping and, looking out, saw the Aerdale coming toward the house with a rabbit in his mouth. Depositing the rabbit, the intelligent dog proceeded again to the woods and while Furr sat on the doorstep at the farmer's house his dog brought to him thirty-eight rabbits that he had killed, alone, in the woods and fields. Putting the rabbits in his game bags, Furr came back to town and distributed them among his friends on the police force.

W. F. Beckman, a member of the Indianapolis police force for the last sixteen years, dropped dead while out hunting near Seymour. Heart failure was the cause of his sudden death. He was 51 years old.

Her horse, taking fright at a street car in Wabash, lunged and threw Mrs. John Unger from her buggy, her skull being fractured. The hospital attendants say she will die. Mrs. Frank Cooper, who was with her, was also badly hurt

A forest fire, which was started by hunters, is sweeping over the western part of Brown County, twelve miles west of Columbus, burning an area of over 1,000 acres.

Gibson County trappers are giving up their vocation because the fur is so thin that the hides have scarcely any value. This is said to be a sure indication that the winter is to be a mild one.

Meeting his old school teacher in Richmond, William Baldwin, who had punished him twenty-five years ago, Robert Gamble repaid the whipping affair by assaulting him. Gamble was arrested.

While hunting near Oakland City, Levi Reed, well-known farmer, attempted to drag his gun after him through a barbed wire fence. One of the triggers caught on a wire, discharging the gun. Reed's left hand was torn entirely off by the charge.

Walter Long, a former Wabash farmer, was recently sentenced to 35 years in prison at Culbertson, Mont., and his brother, Milo Long, to 13 years, for heading a band of night riders who shot down John Hayes and his daughter. They went to Montana two years ago.

A novel contest is being waged between the Christian Sunday School, of Owensville, and the Old Union Sunday School, south of that city. The school having the largest attendance for a certain number of weeks will be the guest of the loser at a supper to be given at the expiration of the contest.

Maletis Fields, while coon hunting near Princeton, climbed a tree after a coon and followed it out on a wild grapevine fifty feet above the ground. The vine broke and Fields dropped to the ground and rolled down a hill. No bones were broken, but he is suffering from the shock of the fall. The coon got away.

State Pure Food and Drug Inspector Owens made a flying visit and caught several Brazil merchants napping. Two of them were arrested and fined to the extent of $17.50. The arrests were on the charge of violating the sanitary features of the pure food law. Mr. Owens says that other prosecutions will be made there.

Twin baby boys, weighing together sixteen pounds, have arrived at the home of William C. Ross and wife, near Lawrenceburg. The babies have been christened William Taft and James Watson Ross. Mr. Ross is a son of Jasper Ross, former postmaster of Manchester, and a brother of Emory P. Ross, a United States gauger, of Lawrenceburg.

Charles Kennedy, aged 45, one of the rural mail carriers of Carthage, was instantly killed by a Big Four engine at the crossing in the northeast part of town. The engine and a caboose were passing rapidly, and struck the horse, killing it, demolishing the buggy and killing the driver. He had been in the mail service for the last seven years, and leaves a wife and one son.

Hunters and wood choppers of Morocco say that every other hollow tree contains bees and a goodly store of fine honey this winter, and not a few choppers, it is said, before starting to timber equip themselves with pails and tubs, so confident are they of coming across a bee tree. The honey is said to be of an exceptionally fine quality, many preferring it to "tame" honey.

The drought is doing much damage in Miami County. Many farmers report their wheat dying in the field, and they say that corn husking is difficult because in husking from the stalk the husk comes off with the ear because it is brittle. Many creeks which have never been known to be dry have no water in them. Cisterns and wells everywhere are dry. The Wabash river at Peru is so low that it can be forded at almost any place.

Patrolman L. W. Campbell refuses to resign from the Logansport police force after repeated demands for his resignation by Capt. George H. Graham, and he nightly appears at police headquarters ready to go to work. When the resignation was first demanded Campbell asked why he should resign and demanded to know if Captain Graham and the police board had any grounds on which they based their demand. An evasive answer was given and he refused to quit.

Martin Myers, of Princeton, on the banks of Indian creek, three miles northeast of town, captured a bird or waterfowl that is a stranger to this part of the country. It is believed to belong to some species of the heron family. The bird made no attempt to escape. Seated in the leaves and grass it ruffled its feathers and attacked Mr. Myers with fury, drawing blood several times with its long beak before he succeeded in getting it into a sack. It is of mottled brown color, about the size of a small hen, with thin legs, though not very long for a water bird. Its bill is three inches in length and very sharp-pointed.

While preparing to go hunting near Clarksburg, John Stott, aged 23, was shot and killed by Jack Farthing. One of the guns was out of order, and while Farthing was attempting to fix it the shell exploded.

A farmer near Oakland City, has a pumpkin in which the seeds have sprouted and small vines have formed. Until the pumpkin was cut open there was no way for air to reach the vines, still they have attained a length of several inches.

AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY ACTIVE.

Now Is the Support for Nearly Half a Million People.

Interesting statistics have been collected to show the surrprising growth and magnitude of the automobile industry in this country. The present capital in this business is $94,000,000, with $36,000,000 invested in kindred trades and $57,000,000 in garages and retail salesrooms, making a total of $187,000,000 in a business unknown ten years ago. More than 58,000 persons are employed in automobile factories throughout the country, 29,000 others are employed indirectly in making parts and another 21,500 in garages and salesrooms, making a total of more than 108,000 employes. This industry, therefore, is the support of nearly half a million persons.

There are 253 builders of automobiles in the United States. The output last year was about 52,000 cars, the largest in the history of the industry, which to date has turned out nearly 200,000 machines. Careful estimates for the coming year place the output at 75,000 cars, of which four factories will produce about half and one alone 12,000 cars.

In the history of this trade $28,000,000 worth of foreign cars have been imported, but America is exporting far more than she imports. Eight years ago sales of American cars reached less than $8,000,000; last year they were more than $105,000,000.

Labor World

Teamsters at Emporia, Kan., have formed a union.

Dye workers at Minneapolis, Minn., recently organized.

Operative Plasterers' International Union has joined the A. F. of L.

Retail clerks at McAlester, Okla., have obtained a reduction in working hours.

Albany (N. Y.) labor unions have erected and opened a tuberculosis pavilion.

The various central bodies of Orange county, New York, have joined a county labor union.

A reorganization of the building trades unions has been brought about in Buffalo, N. Y., after many years of warfare.

The labor unions of Sacramento, Cal., are working energetically for the erection of a building trades temple in that city.

It has been decided by the leather workers to make a universal demand for the eight-hour day within the next two years.

United Brewery Workmen of America have a cash surplus on hand of $97,622.41 and an investment in municipal bonds of $300,000.

A new labor law passed by the State of Oklahoma orders that all school books issued to the children of that State must bear the union label.

Additional death benefits of $250 for a membership of seven or more years and $300 for one of ten or more years have been established by the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers.

The Appellate division of the New York Supreme Court, second department, has decided that a contract made by a corporation with a labor union, whereby only union men shall be employed should be upheld as valid and binding.

Bakers and Confectioners' International Union has adopted a plan to fully organize all the large cities of the United States, with the idea of having a membership of 100,000 within a stated time. The present membership is 14,582.

Paper mills, of which there are eight in India, employ 4,700 persons, but this is not at present a progressive industry, as European wood pulp paper is largely imported. There is a prospect of the establishment of wood pulp manufacture in India.

The Women's Club of Magnolia, Mass., is said to be the only one of its kind in existence. It has a membership of something more than 300, all woman employed as workers in the hotels, boarding houses and residences of the summer population of that resort.

In Russia, where over fifty men are employed in one mine, it is provided that "every colliery must have a rescue corps trained to work in irrespirable gases"; that "the number of men in each corps must be equivalent to 4 per cent of those engaged in the largest pit or shaft work," and "that the number of completely equipped sets of breathing apparatus at each colliery must not be less than three."

The Australian Parliament appropriated $300,000 for the increase of the teachers' salaries, and the men teachers attempted to get the whole amount applied to themselves. The members of the Woman's Progressive Association, all of them voters, did not see the logic of such a division of the appropriation, and objected to it so strongly that the men were forced to share the money with them.

There is a movement in the East on the part of a number of labor unions to eliminate from their respective constitutions the clause which bars the discussion of politics at meetings of the organizations. The leaders in this direction assert that they are moved to this action by the changed conditions in the country, and demand that such a step must be taken for the better protection of organized labor.

The Cigarmakers' International Union of America will not hold a convention this year. An amendment to the constitution designed to make a convention possible has been defeated in the referendum by the narrow majority of 306.

The validity of that section of the labor law providing that no workmen upon public work shall be permitted or required to work more than eight hours in one calendar day is upheld by the New York Court of Appeals. The court in substance holds that a violation of this law is justification for the withholding of payments for such work from contractors.

An Oklahoma bachelors's club has seriously propounded the question "how can thirty men marry thirty-eight girls." The question is doubtless much more serious though to the thirty-eight girls.

Judge Cleland of Chicago has ordered that all baby carriages out at night shall carry headlights. It looks to us as if under the circumstances a curfew law would be more effective for the public safety.

What does Mr. Taft mean when he speaks of his highly esteemed and brilliant opponent as a man who wants to achieve reform by magic? Does he refer to the lightning change artist accomplisements of Mr. Bryan in the political line?

A portrait of Evelyn Thaw sold at auction in New York for sixteen dollars. The following day she was refused admittance to the institution in which her husband is incarcerated. Altogether it looks as though Evelyn as a star was decidely on the wane.

The wonderful modern science of chemistry had its origin in the mysterious follies of alchemy. Astronomy which weights the suns, calculates eclipses and parallexes began with the absurd rites and incantations of astrologers, and medicine with its wonderful modern disease preventing and extirpating agencies and its almost miraculous surgery was a few years ago a psuedo—scientific quackery. Nothing more fully emphasizes the altruistic practicalness of our own age than the assemblage of a large number of distinguished physicians from all parts of the world to discuss means for the elimination of tuberculosis from the human race. Such assemblages were impossible a few years ago. Now they are common and our best assurance of the progress of the world along the lines of intelligent altruism is in the co-operation of men of science throughout the world. The press has brought them in close contact and whether assembled at Washington in convention or scattered in St. Petersburg Vienna Rome, Paris, London or New York they are nevertheless in closest touch and their work must be for the greatest good.

Marked for Death.

"Three years ago I was marked for death. A grave-yard cough was tearing my lungs to pieces. Doctors failed to help me, and hope had fled, when my husband got Dr. King's New Discovery," says Mrs. A. C. Williams, of Bac, Ky. "The first dose helped me and improvement kept on until I had gained 58 pounds in weigh and my health was fully restored." This medicine holds the world's healing record for coughs and colds and lung and throat diseases. It prevents pneumonia. Sold under guarantee at H. Milliman's drug store. 50c and $1.00. Easy Confinement

If you have cause to fear the pains of childbirth, remember that they are due to weakness, or disease, of the womanly organs, and that healthy women do not suffer, like weak ones.

The specific, medicinal, vegetable ingredients, of which that famous, female medicine and womanly tonic is composed, will build up the womanly organs to a healthy state and thus prevent needless suffering.

WINE OF CARDUI

"Before my confinement," writes Mrs. Rose Schubarth, of Monument, Colo., "I had such bearing-down pains I didn't know what to do. Cardui quickly relieved me. Some months later I had a fine 12-lb. baby, was sick only thirty minutes, and did not even have a doctor."

Washington Letter

The present campaign is the only one in the history of this country, in which both the leading candidates for president, have taken the stump In fact all the candidates are on the stump except the one that is in jail.

Mr. Taft has met with cordial receptions everywhere, and when he toured Nebraska, Mr. Bryan requested the people of his own state to give his opponent a royal welcome, which they did.

Mr. Taft is still enthusiastic in his support of the Postal Savings banks, which he promises to establish when elected, and Mr. Bryan supports the bank guarantee plan. Now an unbiased man cannot deny that both of these plans are good, and both can operate together. The Postal Savings Banks, will only be authorized to receive deposits of $500 or less from each depositor, so the timid man with thousands of dollars hoarded in a safe deposit box, or his old trunk, will still withhold his money from circulation because he cannot receive a guarantee that it will be returned to him if deposited. So the Postal Savings Banks will bring from hiding the great army of small depositors from $10 to $500 and the bank guarantee plan, will bring the small army of larger depositors with from $500 to $50,000 out of their hiding places. Every large city has a number of this latter class with hundreds of thousands of dollars locked up in boxes, and thus kept out of circulation.

When the proposed postal savings banks receive deposits from the people, for which they pay 2 per cent they turn the money over to the national banks for about 3 per cent and the banks that receive these deposits, guarantee every dollar deposited by the Government before they receive it. So if the Government deposits are guaranteed, why should not the deposits of the individuals be likewise guaranted? No body has answered this question yet.

Great Time Predicted

The Editor feels safe in saying that the Coburntown Band is determined to out class all their former achievements in the line of entertaining by giving the public a "Miniature Circus" three-fold, at the Navajo Jubilee this week. We will have an opportunity of hearing the Wilcox Orchestra for the first time in our city. The boys have secured their services and guarantee us a concert each night of their Jubilee by this splendid organization. The concert alone will be worth double the price of admission. Then the boys have something in store for you besides. The public is aware of the enthusiasm with which the Band boys are possessed as well as the public favor they have gained through their post efforts. The play "Phyllis the Beggar Girl" which was presented by them last season showed to a turn away house. The Band Boys are undertaking a big thing but we believe from the attitude of the business men both of Spencerville and St. Joe that the Band has their good wishes and that goes a good ways. When you notice the big advertising section of this issue you will observe the loyalty of the business men of both towns. It is impossible to tell you what all the Boys are going to have and do to make you happy, but we are willing to wait and be surprised.

Visited by Fire.

Friday morning at one o'clock the fire alarm announced an early morning blaze and soon hundreds of citizens were on their way to the scene of the conflagaration. The fire was located in the rear room of the Oak restaurant, owned by O. E Thompson, where wood and coal was commonly kept, and making rapid headway toward other buildings. Despite the efforts of the fire department the two rear rooms were totally destroyed and a third badly damaged The loss to Mr. Thompson will reach $300 on fixtures and material for the restaurant, all of which was a total loss. From this building the fire reached the wood house in the rear of Mrs. Belle Boon's millinery store and the Smith meat market, consuming the wooden structure and destroying the large windows and doors to each of the brick buildings. The loss to Mrs. Boon will reach $250 on material consumed and loss on trimmed headgear by steam and smoke. The material in the work room was a total loss, and over one hundred dollars worth of trimmed hats on display were badly damaged by steam and smoke. All three of the buildings were owned by John Blosser, and the damage is fully covered by insurance.

Why Suffer?

If you suffer pain from any cause, Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills will relieve it—and leave no bad after-effects. That's the important thing. Neither do they create a habit. More often the attacks become less frequent, or disappear altogether. Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills have no other effect except to relieve pain and quiet nervous irritation.

"We are never without Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. My husband and son, aged 15 were always subject to sick headache until we began using these Pills, and they have broken them up entirely. Don't think they have had to use them for six months. I recommend them to every one. A few weeks ago I heard an old lady friend was sick. I went to see her. She was down with LaGrippe, and nearly crazy with awful backache. I gave her one of the Anti-Pain Pills and left another for her to take in a short time. They helped her right away, and she says she will never be without them again. Last winter my husband was taken with pleurisy on both sides, and I know he would have died if it hadn't been for the Pills. In less than half an hour he was sweating, and went to bed and slept." Mastodon Unearthed

Tom Deller, a Steuben county farmer, whose farm is situated about four miles north of Ashley, is a proud possessor of the skeleton of a huge mastodom. While digging a ditch on the Dellar farm the workmen met with some obstacle which stopped their proceeding in a direct course. Thinking it was an immense boulder they attempted to dislodge it by digging around and under it, but were astonished when an immense skull rolled into the ditch. It proved to be the head of a mastodon, and it was so heavy that it was necessary to get a team of horses to draw it out of the ditch. When measured the skull showed a length of four and a half feet from the top of the skull to the tip of the nose, two feet across the forhead and three feet across just back of where the ears were. The remains of one tusk show them to have been at least nine feet long, while the ribs, of which twenty were unearthed, measure over four feet. The bones unearthed include a front leg and shoulder blade and the proportions indicate an animal that would throw our latter day elephant into the shade for size.

Another Ohio County Dry.

Thursday Lake county joined the temperance forces and voted dry by a majority of 1,589. Twenty-three saloons went the way of all the earth and will soon close up business. The county seat, Painesville, was won by the temperance forces by a vote of 848 to 476. This ratio was maintained through the county except in Richmond, Willoughby going "dry" by a vote of 437 to 211; Mentor, 277 to 108; Madison, 406 to 211; Fairport, 219 to 108. Kirtland was won by the "drys" 148 to 24.

WHY THE YOUNG PEOPLE ARE LEAVING THE FARMS

An Indiana Agricultural Laborer Writes President Roosevelt About Country Life.

FARMERS ARE EIGHT-HOUR MEN

Long Periods of Labor and Lack of System in Operations Are Deplored.

An Indiana farmhand has written a letter to President Roosevelt about the work which the Country Life Commission is carrying on. The President has turned the letter over to the Country Life Commission and the commission has asked the farmhand to write some more.

"I have been a farmhand just long enough," says the President's correspondent, "to learn the cause of so many sons and daughters and well-meaning, reliable farmhands leaving the beautiful farm and country and going to the city. A lack of order and system on the farm and too long hours for a day is what is driving the best minds from the farm to the city and shop. What can we expect of a hand, or the farmer's wife and her posterity, in the way of intellectual development when they get out of their beds at 3:30 in the morning and work from that time until 8 or 9 p. m.? And no attention paid to the sanitary conditions of the home, and necessary conveniences on the farm for doing the farm work with the least labor and time."

This man has given the Country Life Commission some very interesting first-hand information about rural conditions and recommendations based on a long experience in farm work and farm life. He has worked for all kinds of farmers, good and bad, he says, and he has always had his eyes open to detect the causes of their success or failure. He has drawn his own conclusions and sets them forth in downright, straightforward fashion. Education pays in farming, he says. The farmer who plans out his work and carries it through in a systematic, business-like manner, just as the city man does, will be able to shorten the hours of labor. "So many farmers measure everything on the farm from the standpoint of muscle," he continues, "and are extreme in some things and slack in others. I decided several years ago that life is too short to work for Peter Tumbledown farmers."

"Compel the farmer to be a business man," he says. "Go into the homes of some of the farmers and the so-called farmers and ascertain how they live, and learn of their methods of doing the business in which they are engaged. And you will be surprised what a variety you will find. Ascertain what they read, and what stresses they put on the literature that comes into their homes (if any comes) bearing on the business they are engaged in. See what per cent study their business.

"Give me the educated farmer as a boss and the educated farmhand as a hand. When I come in contact with a hand or farmer that studies his business I find him advancing, and it is a pleasure to work for such men.

"The majority of the farmers are eight-hour men, that is, eight hours in the forenoon and eight in the afternoon. Eight or ten hours on the farm cannot well be adapted in all cases, but it need not be from fourteen to sixteen hours. If the family arise every morning at 5 o'clock and the wife and daughters attend to the household duties, and the farmhands and sons attend to the chores and go to the field at 7 o'clock and work until 11 or 11:30 and go to the field again at 1 and keep at it until 6 o'clock, and go to the house and eat the supper and then do the evening chores, they have done a farm day's work. Regular hours for work, and regular hours for meals, and regular hours for sleep, and regular hours for rest and recreation, with plenty of standard papers and books, including the best agricultural papers and books, and a full faith in God, and good grub is wanted.

"The family should rise at 5 o'clock on Sunday morning as well as on week days, and do the necessary Sunday morning chores, and then go to church and show the business man in the city that Sunday on the farm does not consist in changing the stock from one field to another, or salting it, or unloading a load of hay that was brought in on Saturday evening.

"Coming to the meals at the meal hour makes it easy on the wife so she can arrange her household duties in order, as can also the husband his farm work.

"Men of worth and standing in the shop and city tell me that if order and system were used on the farm they would go back to the farm. If the farmer wants to keep his sons and daughters on the farm he must not lengthen the hours for a day's work at both ends. Limit the hours of work on the farm to twelve or thirteen with pay for overtime, and freedom to the hired man on Sunday."

Not Wholly Careless.

Thomas Chett was a meek but careless clerk, who, through no greater fault than carelessness, was continually blundering in his work. His most usual mistake was to misdirect letters, either by substituting a wrong street number, or by writing, say "Cal." for "Col." One day his employer laid on his desk a letter which had been over a month in the mails without reaching its destination—and all because of Thomas' error.

"Now, this has got to stop," said his employer. "Such delays waste time and money. If you had used an envelope which hadn't had our address in the corner, we might never have known where this letter went to."

"That's true," assented the humble clerk. "But I am always careful to use that kind of envelope just for that reason."

Being a little slow of comprehension, he did not understand why his patient employer bit his lip and turned away smiling.

A CONQUERED GRIEF.

A Word in Season that Proved to Be of Great Benefit.

If Edith Rodney bore her head bravely abroad it drooped at home, for gossip, in a little college town, centers so persistently on a girl whose engagement has been broken. At 19, too, one can suffer in tortured pride and humiliation far beyond the actual worth of the grief itself.

"What shall I do, Claudia?" Mrs. Rodney asked her closest friend, a woman brilliant, sympathetic, attuned to the world's best harmonies. "It worries me so. I hate to send her away. It's such a confession of failure. Yet she is miserable here. Everything reminds her, and will go on reminding her, of John. I think that there must be something horribly wrong with me when I, her own mother, can do nothing to comfort her."

"I want to speak to her if you will let me," said Miss Trenholm, after a moment's thoughtful silence. I believe I can help her, because——" Suddenly her voice broke. "May I go in to her now?" she asked, quickly.

Edith was sitting at the library window, looking listlessly over to where the woods met the sky; a wonderful Corot world, more wonderful still for being painted just by nature herself. Miss Trenholm sat down beside her, and took the girl's hands in both her own.

"May I talk to you?" she asked. "Will you let me tell you that I know what has happened? May I speak to you about it?"

"Oh, it doesn't matter," said Edith, with almost weary resentment. "Everybody knows now, and the world always despises the girl who's been jilted, of course."

"It does not," replied Miss Trenholm, firmly. "It is for you to indicate to the world how it is to think of you, to talk about you, to judge you. To let others pity you now—to pity yourself—is to submit to spiritual poverty. Believe me! I know, because twenty years ago I suffered all that you are suffering, worried as you are worrying over the world's whispers perhaps as much as over the loss itself."

"You?" cried the girl, breathlessly.

Claudia Trenholm had always been her ideal; radiant, shining in the praise of all men and women, seemingly untouched by time or grief. It seemed impossible that such a thing could have happened to her!

"It is just the frequent little tragedy of the college town, my dear," said the older woman, somewhat sadly. "I was very unhappy over my broken engagement, and I made my family suffer with me; burdened them with my sorrow, until, by some heaven-sent chance, I read a book that helped me. It was Jane Austen's 'Sense and Sensibility.' You have read it, I know. Don't you remember how Elinor Dashwood tells her sister why she has never spoken to her family of Edward's faithlessness? See, even now I can say it by heart. 'But I did not love only him, and, while the comfort of others was dear to me, I was glad to spare them from knowing how much I felt. I would not have you suffer on my account.' Her splendid candor, her sincerity made me feel how ungenerous I had been, and made me know, too, that I could be spiritually stronger than my own grief and pride."

For a while neither spoke. Then Edith turned to her friend impulsively.

"I believe you have helped me!" she cried. "I had forgotten that the others must suffer with me. I do not love only him, and I want—just as you are—to be beyond spiritual poverty."

Already the glowing rose of the sunset outside had flushed her face, and lent it a look of hope.—Youth's Companion.

Pie with Knives.

George Washington, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison and James Monroe, the first five Presidents, each ate pie with his knife. It was not until John Quincy Adams entered the White House that the substitution of the fork for the knife seems to have occurred to any citizen of America. "He contracted the habit while in France," said Mrs. Adams in an apologetic tone to some of her guests, "and he finds it difficult to break himself of it since we returned home." So the first great general of the American army, the sturdy patriot of Massachusetts, the author of the Declaration of Independence, the chief advocate of the federal constitution and the originator of the Monroe doctrine, all ate pie with the knife.—Utica Observer.

Ask any man how he is getting along, and he will reply: "O, kindy slow." No one seems to get along very well.

By Henry F. Cope.

"Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."—Matt 6:10.

Is that the prayer of craven submission? It might be but for the first sentence of the petition. He who talks to his Father and knows the affection of that infinite fatherhood, will know that there can be nothing higher or better for him than that Father's will; that this may be perfectly done will be more than a petition, it will become the supreme passion in life.

This is not the cry of one who says: "Let God's will be done because it is inevitable; he is almighty, I am impotent before Him," but the cry of one who says: "Let His will be done because it is best." Not in submission, but in aspiration, does one thus pray who has caught the spirit of this great prayer.

There seemed something noble and admirable in rebellion against the will of the Deity so long as we thought of Him as a person who, in arbitrary fashion, decided what we must do, as one who used his omnipotence for our subjugation, while he seemed to be a coward who bowed his neck in tame submission to decrees and obligations imposed upon him by one who sat in foreign splendor in another world.

Even heaven appeared dull and uninteresting as long as it was pictured as the place where people neither would nor could do any other than the divine decrees. Law-abiding communities are attractive, but there would seem to be little morality or merit where the laws were mechanically obeyed without the possibility of infraction.

But if we think of the will of this Father as being the infinite law that runs through all the universe, as that which the least atom and the vast planets obey, as that law of harmony which means fullness and beauty of life, then the constant hope of every heart and endeavor of every right life is to do that will, to be in tune with that universal harmony.

The will of heaven is not written on tables of stone, nor can it be set down in books, nor compassed in prescriptions and regulations. The infinite, divine will is not subject to the interpretation of every passing regulator of the conduct of others. It is the mighty intent which runs through the ages of all the universe; it is the handwriting of the infinite on the pages of eternity.

It is a dreary and irksome business trying to do the divine will by discovering directions for the specific duties and problems of every day. It is a childish way of living. It creates prigs and bigots. We need to catch some broad principles of living; we need, most of all, some high, impelling vision that shall lead life on, direct, unfaltering, through every difficulty, doubt and fear, to a worthy, heavenly goal.

The will of the Father is not this or the other detail. We do His will not by the scrupulous observance of any round or routine of ritual or duties. He is doing the will of God who is making the dust the servant of the divine, who is setting the soul above the sod, who is bringing the kingdom and rule of the spiritual to this world. Here is the determinative, dominating principle, that ever the life shall live toward the things higher, holiest.

The will of the divine is that, since we are His children, we shall all come more and more to the family likeness and to the freedom and fullness of the divine life; it is the spiritualizing, making heavenly and divine all our life. We who pray that prayer must pay its price, we must set character, the heavenly likeness before any other subject or desire.

Such a prayer subdues our individual desires to its high purposes. It teaches us to see in pain the perfecting of the life for the purposes of divine affection; it sees in losses the cutting away of that which might load the life down and prevent its moving in harmony with all developing life into the heavenly glory of character.

RESTLESSNESS WITHIN.

By Rev. Guy Arthur Jamieson.

Oh that I had wings like a dove, for then would I fly away and be at rest.—Psalms 4:6.

The writer of the text was a poet, and we know the poet to be given to swift changes of mood, flashes of alternating pessimism and optimism. To-day thrills with the joy of living; to-morrow he would escape from the burden of life.

While the feeling that inspired the words of the text is peculiar to the poet, I think upon occasion it comes to every one. All of us at some time have felt the longing to escape, to fly away and be at rest. I think it is natural, when day after day, year after year, we rise to the same task, must take up the same round of drudgery, that there sooner or later comes a feeling of rebellion, when the spirit will crave insistently for some change, some escape, some rest.

The wish is one impossible of fulfillment in flight. If we are to advance in life, if we are to develop in the higher sphere of living, we will find that what we call burdens and responsibilities will increase. The circle of activities, whatever it may be, will widen, will make more demands; our influence will be more potent, our life fuller, and if we are to be brave and faithful we cannot hope to escape burdens and responsibilities. We will have to make up our minds to many colorless days, to many a thankless task, to many an unappreciated effort. We must expect the hour of depressing mood, when we will long to escape from the monotony, the care, the task.

But how often we are disappointed when circumstances permit of our trying to escape, to fly away. The care and burden and sense of responsibility go with us. We cannot get away from ourselves. And often the source of dissatisfaction is in our souls rather than the circumstances of our work or lives. It is change in ourselves that is needed rather than change in our work and environment. We think that if we could only get into new scenes we would find rest and peace. If we could only exchange places with some one we think very fortunate and happy we would no longer have cause for unrest. But the change, the new scenes, a better knowledge of the envied one, only convince us of the groundlessness of our grievances; that the trouble is only with ourselves and not with our work and environment.

I think there is but one sure answer to this longing and unrest, and that answer is Christ. When we have come really to know Christ, we will have come into a spirit that will make such radical changes in our way of thinking of our work, our life, our responsibility, that we will come into that "rest" which He alone can offer. If we have come to Him we will find our yoke easy, our burden light.

Salome Dance.

The Salome dance is brilliant badness. It is suggestive witchery. It is a fascinating and entrancing appeal to the senses. It is a combination of grace and beauty. It is feminine loveliness exploited in the market place. It is poetry of motion in its most subtle and suggestive form. It is the feminine form taken from the studio where it can be studied by the individual artist and esthetically presented to the observation of a promiscuous crowd. It is the degradation of beauty to its vulgarization.—Rev. E. L. Powell, Presbyterian, Louisville.

320 ACRES Instead of 160 ACRES

As further inducement to settlement of the Wheat Raising lands of Western Canada, the Canadian Government has increased the area that may be taken by a homesteader to 320 acres—160 free and 160 to be purchased at $3.00 per acre.

These lands are in the grain raising area, where mixed farming is also carried on with unqualified success.

A railway will shortly be built to Hudson Bay, bringing the world's markets a thousand miles nearer these wheat fields, where schools and churches are convenient, climate excellent, railways close to all settlements and local markets good.

"It would take time to assimilate the revelations that a visit to the great empire lying to the North of us unfolded at every turn."—Correspondence of a National Editor, who visited Western Canada in August, 1908.

This woman says that sick women should not fail to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as she did.

Mrs. A. Gregory, of 2355 Lawrence St., Denver, Col., writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"I was practically an invalid for six years, on account of female troubles. I underwent an operation by the doctor's advice, but in a few months I was worse than before. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it restored me to perfect health, such as I have not enjoyed in many years. Any woman suffering as I did with backache, bearing-down pains, and periodic pains, should not fail to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

BAD ITCHING HUMOR.

"Some two months ago I had a humor break out on my limbs below my knees. They came to look like raw beefsteak, all red, and no one knows how they itched and burned. They were so swollen that I could not get my shoes on for a week or more. I used five or six different remedies and got no help, only when applying them the burning was worse and the itching less. For two or three weeks the suffering was intense and during that time I did not sleep an hour at a time. Then one morning I tried a bit of Cuticura. From the moment it touched me the itching was gone and I have not felt a bit of it since. The swelling went down and in two days I had my shoes on and was about as usual. George B. Whiskey for Rheumatism.

The increased use of whiskey for rheumatism is causing considerable discussion among the medical fraternity. It is an almost infallible cure when mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly. The following formula is effective: "To one half pint of good whiskey add one ounce of Toris Compound and one ounce of Syrup Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and before retiring."

Toris compound is a product of the laboratories of the Globe Pharmaceutical Co., Chicago, but it as well as the other ingredients can be had from any good druggist.

The Spirit of Progress.

The chief factor of our 20th century existence which is recognized by everybody is that we are all in a hurry, says a writer in an English publication. I have interrogated many people with the object of finding out why we are all in a hurry, but nobody seems to know. If you catch a man and put the question to him blank he looks quite bewildered and is totally unable to explain. I am rather sorry for this. They say everything has a reason and it is nice to know the reason for things. But the hurry of modern civilization seems to be the only thing for which no reason exists.

Let us, therefore, meekly accept the fact that for some unexplained cause it is necessary that we should work fast, walk fast, talk fast, eat fast, live fast and die fast. A stentorian voice yells out in our ears: "Get on or get out!" It is the voice of progress. And if you stop to expostulate with progress you are removed by some means or other.

And all this horrible hurry results in countless accidents. In London alone there are 4,000 street accidents per month. These accidents arise almost entirely from the anxiety of the populace to get there quick. There is no other reason why cabs, motors, bicycles, carts, tramcars and parcel vans should go dashing along, hurling pedestrians to right and left, cutting off arms and legs and filling the hospitals with casualty cases.

Glow of Health Speaks for Postum.

It requires no scientific training to discover whether coffee disagrees or not.

Simply stop it for a time and use Postum in place of it, then note the beneficial effects. The truth will appear.

"Six years ago I was in a very bad condition," writes a Tenn. lady. "I suffered from indigestion, nervousness and insomnia.

"I was then an inveterate coffee drinker, but it was long before I could be persuaded that it was coffee that hurt me. Finally I decided to leave it off a few days and find out the truth.

"The first morning I left off coffee I had a raging headache, so I decided I must have something to take the place of coffee." (The headache was caused by the reaction of the coffee drug—caffeine.)

"Having heard of Postum through a friend who used it, I bought a package and tried it. I did not like it at first, but after I learned how to make it right, according to directions on pkg., I would not change back to coffee for anything.

"When I began to use Postum I weighed only 117 lbs. Now I weigh 170 and as I have not taken any tonic in that time I can only attribute my recovery of good health to the use of Postum in place of coffee.

WHAT LATTAKIA TOBACCO IS.

U. S. Consul Ravndal, at Beirut, Syria, Describes Its Culture.

In a report to the Department of Commerce and Labor, United States Consul G. Bie Ravndal, at Beirut, Syria, writes as follows, says the New Orleans Picayune:

"Lattakia tobacco (Abou Riha) is an article of commerce well known in Europe and America. It is black in color, owing to its fumigation by the Nusairieh mountaineers in the smoke of a tree called 'elezzer' or 'ezr,' which imparts to it a peculiar aromatic flavor. This fumigation lasts for from seven to nine months, but only produces the desired effect during those of winter and spring, although the tobacco is still fresh and green in summer when it is hung to the rafters for smoking purposes.

"The 'ezr' grows wild, seldom attaining the size of the oak, and gives out its aromatic oder when burned in the green state. It is a native of the Nusairieh mountains and not found elsewhere, so it is claimed. In 1903 the Lattakia tobacco crop amounted to 6,000 bales, as against 8,000 bales for the preceding year. A bale weighs eighty-seven to ninety-two kilos (191.4 to 202.4 pounds). Most of it goes to England at 14 to 24 cents per pound. It was rumored last year that the American tobacco trust was trying to secure a monopoly of the Lattakia tobacco product. It already controls the licorice-root industry in the Lattakia and Alexandria districts. An average crop of Lattakia tobacco, as far as it is available for export, is worth about $350,000.

"It would, in my opinion, be worth our while to have a consular agent at Lattakia (and, by the way, one also in Cyprus), as the country adjacent to the city is capable of great improvement. Soon agriculture and other machinery will be wanted in that region. Petroleum engines and pumps are widely needed. American missionaries have been for thirty years working in Lattakia, where they have a high school for boys, a high school for girls and a hospital (value of property $65,000) also in the Nusairieh mountains. No other missionaries are occupying the fruitful field."

Legal Information

The Kentucky court of appeals in Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Buchanan, 103 Southwestern Reporter, 272, holds that a railroad company which reserves to itself the right to appoint the directors of a hospital, otherwise maintained as an independent organization for the benefit of its employes, is liable to its employes for unskillful and improper treatment received in the hospital.

The petitioner in Re Wehrli, 157 Federal Reporter, 938, filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen in 1898, but failed to complete the naturalization proceedings before congress, in 1906, passed an act providing that an alien may file a petition to be naturalized not less than two nor more than seven years after declaration of intention. It was claimed that his right was barred, but the United States district court held that the statute, being one of limitation, should not be given a retrospective effect, and the act would not bar the right until seven years after its passage.

The right of a State to impose a license tax on the business of selling intoxicating liquors within the State by traveling salesmen, who solicit orders for wholesale houses in their State, is upheld by the United States supreme court, in Dalamater v. South Dakota 27 Supreme Court Reporter, 447. The regulation by a State of the business carried on within its borders to solicit proposals to sell intoxicating liquors even though such liquors are situated in other States, cannot be held to be repugnant to the commerce clause of the Constitution because directly or indirectly burdening the right to sell in the State—a right which by virtue of the Wilson Act does not exist.

A case forcibly illustrating the legislative department's reluctance to remedy defects in the law disclosed by judicial decision is that of People v Tomplins, 79 Northeastern Reporter 326. In this case the court of appeals of New York reaffirms the doctrine of McCord v. People, 46 New York, 470 that a prosecution for larceny by false pretenses cannot be sustained where the person parting with his property or money does so for any legal purposes. The court admits that the weight of authority is to the contrary, but feels bound to follow the doctrine as settled by the earlier decision, the duty of making a change resting with the Legislature, and says that to change the existing rule would, in effect, be enacting an expost facto law.

Punctuation.

The present system of punctuation was introduced in the latter part of the fifteenth century, by Aldus Manutius, a Venetian printer, who was responsible for our full stop, colon, semicolon, comma, marks of interrogation and exclamation, parenthesis and dash, hyphen, apostrophe and quotation marks.

Most ancient languages were innocent of any system of punctuation. In many early manuscripts the letters are placed at equal distances apart, with no connecting link between, even in the matter of spacing, an arrangement which must have rendered reading at sight somewhat difficult.

SEEMED WORSE EVERY DAY.

A Dangerous Case of Kidney Complaint and How It Was Checked.

Mrs. Lucy Quebeck, Mechanic St., Hope Valley, R. I., says:—"Eight years ago I contracted severe kidney trouble and my back began to ache continually. Every day it seemed worse. The least pressure on my back tortured me, and I could not stoop without a bad twinge. The kidney secretions passed irregularly with pain, and I bloated badly. My head swam and spots flitted before my eyes. One doctor said I was incurable. However, I found prompt relief when I started using Doan's Kidney Pills, and the troubles I have related gradually disappeared."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Morse had perfected his telegraphic alphabet.

"The dots are all right," said his friends, "but why do you have so many long dashes?"

"Those dashes," he responded, "represent the language I used while I was struggling with the pesky thing, and I had to employ so many of them that I just let them stay and worked 'em up into the alphabet."

Which explanation clears up a long standing mystery.—Chicago Tribune.

The Rain Was Hot.

Mrs. Goltt had been waiting for a week or more to give her rear porch a good scrubbing, but she was always afraid of incurring the keen displeasure of the people in the flat below, who, it seemed, were never off their porch and who would get all the drippings of her scrubbing operation.

When it rained, though, Mrs. Goltt saw what she thought was her opportunity. The people down below surely would not be out on the porch during the rainstorm, and all the water that dripped down would be attributed to the rain. She filled a bucket with boiling hot water, threw in a sallow cake of soap and got busy.

But she had reckoned wrong, for the people down below were on their porch enjoying the shower. In a minute Mrs. Goltt heard a woman's voice below saying: "Why, Martha, the rain's coming through from the porch above. The roof must leak."

And then Martha observed, with a gasp: "Yes. And, oh, heavens, had you noticed that the rain is hot? Did you ever hear of such a thing? Aren't terrible things happening? All these awful murders, and now hot rain! But it's the Lord's doings, and we must submit."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Reading a Horse's Face.

Every horse carries an index to his temper and intelligence in his face. The teachable, tractable animal has a broad and flat between the eyes; the bony ridge of his face finishes slightly from the point where the face narrows toward the nostrils. His ears are well set, sensitive and far apart, with a well defined ridge of bone extending across the top of the head between them. Always feel for this ridge in judging a horse. The eye should be large, clear and bright, with a prominent ridge of bone along the inner and upper edge of the socket.—London Answers.

A Boys Essay.

A schoolma'am is a verb because she denotes action when you throw paper wads at the girl's. Switch is a conjunction and is used to connect the verb schoolma'am to the noun boy. This is a compound sentence of which boy is the subject and switch is the object. first person, singular number and awful case. A schoolma'am is different from a boy, a boy wears pants and a schoolma'am wears her hair banged all over her forehead. She puts paint on her face and the big fellows come and take her home. Ma says a schoolma'am never gets older than eighteen until she gets married. It takes two schoolma'ams a day to cook a dinner.

Better Times for Uncle Sam.

The biggest of all the big business concerns has turned the corner very decidedly in respect to comparisons between 1908 and 1907. At last the receipts of the national treasury, day by day and week by week, have begun to run well above the record for the corresponding period of the last year. In the first seventeen days of November the gain over the like part of 1907 was $2,800,000, in round figures. The customs revenues were about $1,000,000 ahead. Internal revenue showed an increase of $1,860,000 roughly speaking. There was a small decrease in miscellaneous receipts.

Birthday Dinner.

A birthday dinner was given in honor of Mrs. Nancy Culbertson on last Saturday, December 5, this being her 82nd, birthday. A number of relatives were present those being: Cadmir Woodcox and wife of Garrett, Richard Culbertson and family of Auburn, Samuel Steward and family of Spencerville, Guy Strong and wife, and Alex Culbertson and wife. Others were intending to come but on account of the weather and sickness only a few were out to enjoy the dinner. Mrs. Culbertson is to-day enjoying good health, being able to be about the house but not do any of the work. A great many presents were given her as tokens of love, by the children.

Their Troubles Begin

The time of the year has arrived when the rural mail carriers are daily kicking because of so many patrons insist on leaving pennies in their mail boxes for mailing letters instead of buying the stamps and doing the "licking" themselves. Many times the carriers are in good trim to do the "licking" act but not to the stamps. However, when such silent requests are made there is generally nothing to "lick" but the stamps—the patrons sit in the house by a warm fire and thus prevent the "licking" they might do or get, as the case might be. It is a nuisance that should be abated. It is asking too much of a carrier on a cold day. If each patron would provide himself with stamps how easy it would be to prevent the carrier from becoming vexed. He is not compelled to do this. He does it as a personal favor just because he does not like to say "no." But isn't it asking a good deal? Would you do it for your neighbor every day?

Navajo A Success.

The Navajo Jubilee as given by the Coburntown Farmer's Band was a success in every respect, good crowds attending each night. The hall was neatly decorated. Booths were placed around the room at which you could buy sandwitches, pie, doughnuts and other eatables. A booth for fancy work and pictures filled the south-east corner of the hall. Just west of this was the popcorn stand. The place where they did business was at Hooligan's headquarters, which was enjoyed by the ladies as well as the men. The fishing pond was a unique affair, give the keeper five cents and throw your hook over and some article valued at five cents was put on the hook.

In the center of the room was a duck pond in which several ducks were swimming about. Any person ringing one of the ducks was to have it. On the first night no person was successful but on the second more ducks were captured than were in the pond, so chickens were substituted.

Cushions were sold by the ladies and all did something to help the band along. The musical part of the program was furnished by the Wilcox Orchestra of Auburn, which was excellent and appreciated by the audience. Miss Gladys Smith, Vera and Flossie Copp and Mrs. Lora Leighty rendered a part of the musical program.

On each evening a cord of wood was given to the person holding a certain number. Those receiving the wood were Mrs. Daisy DeLong, Howard Gee and Merritt Parney.

A genuine diamond ring was given to the most popular lady. Several names from town were entered and on the second day the name of Miss Delphia Coburn was put up and at the final wind up her votes numbered 2,900 which put her far beyond all others. The ring was exactly as represented and she should feel proud of having won it.

The programs were put out on the strength of the many advertisements by the Spencerville and St. Joe merchants. The band boys are hustlers and are deserving of success if any organization is.

Good attendance was had every night, the receipts amounting to nearly $50 each night. While their expenses were large the boys did well. Another feature was the bean contest. A person was to guess on a can of beans upon the payment of five cents, the person coming nearest was to receive $6.00 worth of photos given by John Tustison. Mrs. Myrtle Beams of Spencerville won the prize.

The most laughable feature was that of Clyde Hart, who acted the part of the "Sheeney" with "Mine Shene". He would guess on ones weight and if he came within five pounds you were to give him five cts. if not you were weighed free of charge. Mr. Hart acted his part to perfection and all were amused at his actions.

The piano was furnished by I. S. Hadsell and the lighting plant by Milliman and Shuff. The boys are to be commended on this feature as the hall was lighted up as never before. John May installed a phone free of charge for their services which showed an interest in the band. A parade was given each afternoon. Mr. Ferrel is to be commended upon the manner in which he carried out his plans as he had considerable of the work to do himself.

Culture Club

The regular meeting of the Culture Club was held at the home of Mrs. W. C. DeLong Wednesday night. The biography of Bryant was read after which Mrs. DeLong conducted the lesson "Thanatopsis" in a pleasing manner. Mrs. F. B. Leighty rendered two piano solos which were beautiful. Seventeen members responded to roll call with quotations from Longfellow. After adjournment the hostess served crystalized pop corn and apples.

Permitted To Hunt

The hunters of today are having rather a hard time to find a place for hunting and this is partially their own fault as they abuse the liberty given them. John Clm, who lives one mile south of town and east of the Dills' bridge does not allow hunting, but he will give permission for any person to hunt on his farm on Saturday, December 12, of this week, but that day only. Here is your only opportunity for the season so you had better take advantage of it. Monday of this week a farmer related an incident that occured on his farm north of town. Some hunters were after game and they came to his wire fence and they took a pair of wire cutters and cut every wire off so that they might pass through. This is wrong and a person should be made to pay dearly for such actions, when a neighbor is kind enough to allow them to hunt. The farmers are prohibiting anyone to hunt on their farms in some localities. On another page of THE NEWS will be round a list of names who prohibit hunting. It is not necessary to publish it but this is done to warn the hunters.

Hard After The Prize.

Merritt Milliman has entered into a contest on the Saturday Evening Post in which the winner will receive a Shetland Pony outfit. Yesterday he received word that last week his name was third on the list being 12 behind the first name. He is making an extra effort and will sell 70 papers this week. Last week he sold 60. He is doing all he can and will no doubt stand a good show at the wind up. Forty young boys have entered the contest.

A Sudden Death.

Frank Draggoo died yesterday morning at the home of his uncle, Lewis Blair at Waterloo. Mr. Draggoo has been in poor health for sometime. It is supposed that heart trouble caused his death. No particulars have been heard of. The deceased was at one time a prosperous farmer of Concord township, but later moved to Waterloo. He is the son of George Draggoo, one of the early settlers of the county. The divorced wife resides at Auburn, and the son is located at Garrett employed as a barber. The decedent was fifty-seven years old. Funeral will be held in St. Joe Lutheran church Thursday at 11 o'clock.

Mrs. Woodcox Dies

Sunday evening at 6:30 Mrs. Clyde Woodcox died at the home of G. W. Woodcox at this place. Only a week before did she return from Kentucky where she and her family resided. Mr. Woodcox is a concrete contractor. Both people were born and raised in DeKalb County and lived here until going south. She was formerly Miss Sarah Boyles, a daughter of Ephriam Boyles, at one time sheriff of DeKalb Co. She is survived by her husband and five children, two boys and three girls, the oldest being about twenty years of age. She has been a long sufferer of rheumatism. When she saw the end was near she desired to return home to die. The funeral services were held in the Christain Church today at 10 o'clock.

Town Going Dry

There are now only four saloons in Garrett and in five weeks more the city will be strictly "dry" territory. The license of Irvin Clayton expired Thursday and he closed his place on that day. Next comes Isaac Whirledge on December 15, then Ora Neff on December 18 and then the last two Charles Downend and Frank Coverdale, go out of business on the same day, January 7. The present remonstrance, which went into effect last February, will be in effect until February, 1910. Unless it is decided to hold a county local option election before that time, if that law is not repealed by the coming legislature, the temperance people will be obliged to file another remonstrance to prevent the applicants from getting licenses from the county commissioners. Actions by both sides at that time will doubtless depend upon developments meanwhile.—Clipper.

Our light is the Bystrom

Don't forget to stop at Milliman's barber shop and house to see the asoline lights. We have the appliances shat make light—the most brilliant light at a minimum of expense. We can supply you with a Central Generating Plant and the Hollow Tube, generating the gas at a central point and feeding to lamp through a pipe or tube; our lamp fixtures are from one to six mantle capacity. Again, we can furnish you with the Hollow Wire System with numerous style lamps. Therein you feed the gasoline a hollow wire, and generate the gas at each lamp—a very economical way, and a most brilliant light. With our tube system the tank can be set out of the building and the gasoline fed to the generator by means of hollow wire thus avoiding any trouble.

Boys in a Fatal Quarrel.

Vincent Herman, 19 years old, head night call boy for the Pan Handle railroad in Logansport, Ind., was stabbed by Joseph Milburn, another call boy. Hermann died at St. Joseph's Hospital a few hours later. The knife used by Milburn cut the jugular vein and it was impossible for physicians to stop the flow of blood. It seems that Hermann ordered Milburn to do some work and, when the latter refused, invited him outside the Pan Handle yard office to fight. Hermann, it is alleged, struck and knocked Milburn down and then Milburn, it is further alleged, pulled out his knife and cut Hermann's throat. Milburn is held on a charge of manslaughter.

Burton for Secretary of Treasury.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer says that Representative Theodore Burton, of Cleveland, has been offered by President-elect Taft the portfolio of Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Burton has taken the offer under consideration, but will make no reply to Mr. Taft until after the Ohio senatorial situation has been clarified. It is understood that President-elect Taft's act in tendering the secretaryship to Mr. Burton is made entirely without respect to the senatorial fight in Ohio, in which his brother, Charles P. Taft, of Cincinnati, is a prominent factor.

Bank Burglars Carry Off $14,000.

Fourteen thousand dollars in cash was secured by burgalrs who blew open the vault of the First National Bank in Pepperel, Mass. The thoroughness and skill with which the work was performed has convinced the police that the burglars were professionals. Three men were in the party and although they were seen escaping in an automobile all trace of them was soon lost and the authorities were unable to ascertain in which direction they departed.

Wets Win in Mercer County, Ohio.

By the small majority of 227 votes Mercer County, Ohio, voted to retain its thirty-two saloons. The campaign has been hotly waged by the "dry" forces, but their inability to get any votes among the German population in the south end of the county cost them the victory. This makes eight counties to vote "wet" under the Rose law to forty-nine victories for the "drys."

Twenty Horses Cremated.

Fire in the livery stable of Goff Brothers at Charleston, W. Va., following a fire in the summer garden of the Robinson Hotel, destroyed the stable buildings and stock, cremating twenty horses. Later Fire Chief Rand was knocked unconscious and badly cut about the head and hands by falling glass from the hotel and a fireman was slightly injured.

Summer Resort Scorched.

Damage amounting to $100,000 was done by fire which started at Exposition Park, Conneaut Lake, a popular summer resort near Meadville, Pa. The Hotel Bismarck and all of the buildings on both sides of the Midway were destroyed. The dynamiting of several buildings failed to stop the progress of the flames.

Ohio G. A. R. Commander Dies.

J. H. Sharer, commander for Ohio of the Grand Army of the Republic, died at his residence in Alliance. He was attacked a day or two ago with acute indigestion and all efforts to save him proved unavailing. He served in the 115th Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, throughout the Civil War.

Two-Cent Postal Rate with Germany.

The United States and Germany have arranged for a postal rate on letters between the two countries of two cents instead of the existing rate of five cents. The new rates will go into effect January 1, 1909.

Police Shoot Owl in Church.

The police were called into the First Baptist church at Goshen, Ind., to shoot an owl which, it was feared, would fall in one of the big pipes of the organ.

Large Catch of Wild Animals.

William D. Favors, a trapper and hunter of St. Paul, Ind., reports the following catch for nine nights: Ninety-six muskrats, three 'coons, five opossums, four skunks and three minks.

Fire Damages College.

Fire destroyed two wings of St. Jerome's Catholic College at Berlin, Ontario, entailing a loss of $40,000. Students had narrow escapes and all got out in their nightclothes.

JAPAN MADE AN ALLY BY THE UNITED STATES

Uncle Sam Reaches Agreement with Mikado in Affairs in Pacific.

WILL CONSULT EACH OTHER.

Nations Promise to Respect Respective Territories and Chinese Independence.

Despite official reticence at Washington, information from reliable sources has been obtained of an agreement of far-reaching importance between the United States and Japan covering the policy of the two countries in the Pacific.

The agreement is based on the idea of encouraging and defending free and peaceful commercial development in the Pacific. It contains not only a mutual guarantee to respect each other's territorial possessions there, but defines the attitude of the two countries toward China, binding each to defend by every peaceful means China's independence and integrity, and to give equal commercial opportunity in the Chinese empire to all nations. But more important still, the agreement in the event of complications threatening the status quo, binds the United States and Japan to consult each other with a view to acting together.

The agreement has been drawn up in the form of a declaration and consists of five articles. The first article gives expression to the wish of the two governments to encourage the free and peaceful development of their commerce in the Pacific. The second is a mutual disclaimer of an aggressive design, and contains also a definition of the policy of each government, both as directed to the maintenance of the existing status quo in the Pacific and the defense of the principle of equal opportunity for commerce and industry in China. The third article contains a statement of the consequent "firm" reciprocal resolution of each government to respect the territorial possession in the Pacific of the other.

In the fourth article the United States and Japan express their determination, "in the common interest of all the powers," in China to support "by all peaceful means at their disposal" the independence and integrity of China and the principle of equal commercial and industrial opportunity for all nations in the empire. The fifth article mutually pledges the two governments, in the case of "the occurrence of any event threatening the status quo," as above described, or the principle of equal opportunity, as above defined, "to communicate with each other for the purpose of arriving at a mutual understanding" with regard to the measures they may consider it useful to take.

BURYING THE HATCHET.

LAMPHERE GUILTY OF ARSON.

Jury Ignores Murder Charge—Sentence from 2 to 21 Years.

Ray Lamphere was found guilty of arson after the jury had been out twenty-six hours in Laporte, Ind. Judge John C. Richter immediately sentenced him to the penitentiary for an indeterminate term of from two to twenty-one years and assessed a fine of $5,000.

The verdict was in the nature of a compromise, ten of the jurors having held out from the first for a verdict of murder in the second degree, with a penalty of life imprisonment. Two stubborn members all day contended for a verdict of arson and not guilty, respectively.

Following the sentencing of Lamphere all the jurors signed a statement that they were convinced by the evidence at the trial that the adult body found in the ruins with the bodies of the three children was that of Mrs. Gunness.

Lamphere expressed a similar belief in the first extended statement he has made to other than his attorneys since the trial began. He said he considered himself lucky, in view of the evidence produced, in getting off as easily as he has. He maintained his innocence, however.

WHAT IS NEEDED FOR NEW SHIPS

Admiral Capps, Chief Constructor of the Navy, Tells Requirements.

Admiral W. L. Capps, chief constructor of the navy, in his annual report makes an estimate of $27,881,503 for naval construction work and repair during the coming year. Estimates for the construction and repair of vessels at navy yards and on foreign stations amount to $8,840,713, an increase of $840,713 over the current fiscal year. The amount estimated for "increase of the navy, construction, and machinery" for work for new vessels authorized by Congress is $14,540,790, the amount for the current year being $12,832,962. For continuing work on submarine torpedo boats an estimate is made of $1,800,000, the amount for the current year being $3,000,000, and for work on two fleet colliers, heretofore authorized, the estimate is $2,100,000, the appropriation for the current year being $1,500,000.

Robbed of $3,800 in Kansas City.

Martin H. Halloran, a mining engineer, who came to Kansas City from Pittsburg two months ago, was attacked by two men the other night and robbed of $3,800, which he brought there to invest.

Grocer as "Black Hand" Victim.

Salvatore Baldona, a wealthy Italian grocer, was found murdered near his home in Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia. His head had been crushed and he was shot twice. The police believe he was the victim of a "Black Hand" plot.

Hitchcock for Cabinet.

Frank H. Hitchcock has been offered and has accepted the position of Postmaster General in Mr. Taft's Cabinet. Announcement of Mr. Hitchcock's appointment was authorized in New York.

The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul has added another order for 2,500 cars, and has just placed the contracts for their early delivery. This will mean the consumption of 10,000 tons of structural steel.

The machine shop, boiler shop and blacksmith shop of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company at Brainerd, which have been running but eight hours per day for the past year, went back to nine hours last week.

Judge Trieker in the federal court at Little Falls, Ark., granted the nine auxiliary Iron Mountain lines a temporary injunction against the 2-cent passenger rate and freight tariff, promulgated last winter by the railroad commission.

A new rate sheet, prevalent throughout the United States, excepting Michigan, has just been put in by the Pullman company, which, it is said, will result in an increase yearly of hundreds of thousands of dollars. For chair cars the company proposes to increase the cost every ten miles, instead of every fifty as at present.

125 DIE IN EXPLOSION.

Nearly All at Work Killed by Gas in Marianna, Pa., Mine.

At least 138 men, mostly Americans or English speaking miners, are dead in the Pittsburg-uBffalo Coal Company's mine at Marianna, in Washington County, Pennsylvania. The men were caught in an explosion just before noon Saturday and when rescuers broke through the debris, all were found dead.

The force of the explosion was such that the heavy iron cage which carried the men from the surface to the workings was blown 300 feet away from the mouth of the shaft. Two men who were on the cage at the time were killed, one of them having his head blown off.

The workings in which the catastrophe happened is known as the Rachel and Agnes mines, in reality a double mine with underground connections. Construction work was practically finished and Deputy State Mine Inspector Henry Louttit a few minutes before the explosion had completed a two days' inspection which had revealed no cause for apprehension.

The bodies of the men were hurled through the top of the building and far beyond it. Thompson was dead when picked up, while the others, although mortally injured, were hurried to a hospital.

COST OF THE NEXT CENSUS.

1910 Fund Needed to Estimate Population Officially Announced.

The director of the census, in his annual report, estimates $14,117,000 will be needed to defray the cost of the next census, in 1910. This is an increase of only $410,000 over the previous general census. If the work can be accomplished for this sum, it will be the first time in the history of the nation that a census has been taken and compiled at practically the same cost as the prior enumeration. Formerly the increase in the cost of the census from decade to decade has been about 50 per cent.

Two causes are given for this saving. One is that the census bureau has reached the highest perfection and the other is the fact that the bureau will build and own the necessary tabulating apparatus instead of renting it as heretofore. The savings due to the different causes will be almost equal to the total amount expended for the maintenance of the entire census bureau between the two censuses.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

Dr. R. S. Copeland, now dean of the New York Homeopathic college, will tender his resignation from the University of Michigan faculty.

Prof. Richard C. MacLaurin, professor of physics and mathematics at Columbia, has accepted the presidency of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Southern Minnesota teachers have appointed committees to act with committees from other associations in securing desired legislation for the schools this winter.

William Edgar Benson, who had been an official of the Kansas City board of education since 1880 and its secretary since January, 1891, is dead. He was 57 years of age.

The Minnesota board of regents has decided not to repair or rebuild the anatomy building recently burned, but to erect an entirely new building, adequate to the needs of the department.

Through the General Education Board John D. Rockefeller has offered the Richmond College of Richmond, Va., $150,000 on condition that the Baptists of the State raise an additional $350,000, the object being the development of the institution into a great Baptist university for the South. Rockefeller regards Richmond as the strategic point for such a college.

ALEXIS OVERTHROWN; NEW RULER IN HAITI

Bloodless Revolt Deposes Aged Executive and Makes Legitime President.

NOT A SHOT FIRED IN COUP.

Movement Led by Citizens of Port au Prince—Committee of Safety Controls the Capital.

Through a well-organized and suddenly executed coup a bloodless revolution in Haiti was accomplished Wednesday. The people of the capital seized power, deposed the President, Nord Alexis, set up a provisional government of their own, and made Gen. Legitime their new President.

The only leader remaining loyal to Alexis is Gen. Camille Gabriel, his nephew, who for the last six months has directed the policy of the administration. He remained at the palace with Alexis. All the ministers and high military officials under Alexis took refuge in the foreign legations. These are the same men who nine months ago were protesting vociferously against the granting of the right of refuge to unsuccessful revolutionists by the foreign diplomatic and consular representatives.

The revolution had been well organized. Early in the day bands of citizens, organized and armed, moved quietly about the town and took possession of various points of vantage. The movement was directed by Gen. Canal, a member of the Senate. Not a shot was fired. The soldiers of Alexis saw that the rebels had the upper hand and quickly let it be seen that they had no intention of starting a fight that might result in much bloodshed. The presence of the American cruisers, Des Moines and Tacoma, and the French cruiser Duguay Trouin undoubtedly had a restraining influence.

Gen. Nord Alexis, who has been President of Haiti since 1902, was born in 1821. He was elected for seven years. The salary is $24,000. Haiti is the western or French portion of the Island of Santo Domingo. Its area is 9,242 square miles and its population 1,500,000. It is a country of revolutions. In October, 1907, sixteen men were sentenced to death on a charge of conspiring to overthrow the government. In January, 1908, an army of insurgents, under Jean Juneau, marched on the capital, Port au Prince, but were repulsed by government troops under the leadership of Gen. Celestin Cyriaque, the minister of war. The present revolution has been in progress only a few weeks.

Robbers blew open the vault of the Towanda State Bank at Towanda, Kan., early Wednesday, secured $2,500 and escaped on a handcar. A sheriff's posse went in pursuit.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The usual indexes of activity make a healthy exhibit. Payments through the banks indicate a satisfactory average, and the default record is about normal. Trade generally is sustaining its recovery, while new demands strengthen the outlook in manufactures. Permits for new business structures and additions now excel all former experiences, this month's aggregating $6,069,400, against only $352,200 in 1907, and $882,100 in 1906. Thanksgiving sales rose to satisfactory totals, but colder weather would have been more beneficial in leading retail lines. Distribution of commodities shows increased tonnage by both rail and lake.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 26, against 18 last week, 23 in 1907, and 22 in 1906. Those with liabilities of more than $5,000 number 5, against 5 last week, 13 in 1907, and 6 in 1906.—Dun's Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Wholesale trade, crop and industrial developments are generally in the direction of improvement, there is less idle machinery and the tone of affairs generally is still cheerful, but there are numerous irregularities noted in conditions in different sections and industries. The situation as a whole, therefore, lacks some of the uniformity which characterized it some time ago.

Most optimism and strength is exhibited in the leading lines of domestic manufacture and wholesale trade, particularly as to the outlook for next year, and manufacturers are buying more freely of most raw materials, while wholesalers report evidences of scarcity in many lines, especially cotton goods, for spring and later delivery next year.

In retail trade there is a good deal of irregularity, though the advent of rains and snows, followed by colder weather, helped to improve conditions as the week advanced.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Nov. 26 number 193, against 273 last week, 258 in the like week of 1907, 174 in 1906, 188 in 1905 and 184 in 1904.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 25, which compares with 33 last week and 40 in this week last year.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

"Roger," exclaimed Alison, passionately, "this must be Fergusson's doings he must have tampered with your letter and cut out the entry in the ledger, and of course the check is in his possession."

"Wait a moment, Allie," returned Roger, looking very stern and pale. "The check was cashed the next morning by a clerk of ours who was turned away for dishonesty; but the bank did not know that, and thought him still in our employ, so the money is lost to us. My father is dreadfully angry and puzzled about the whole affair, but he does not suspect Fergusson. He flew in a perfect rage when I hinted about his gambling debts. He blames me for carelessness; he says I ought not to have left the office without locking up both the check and the ledger in the iron safe. Fergusson has told my father that he saw Ibbotson the clerk we dismissed, hanging about the yard talking to the men. He declares that while we were in the yard Ibbotson must have got into the office, turned over the letters and abstracted my receipt; he must have read the entry in the open ledger, and he knew all the keys, and would easily find the check. He has gulled my father completely; he has actually made him believe that, in ten minutes, or a quarter of an hour at the most, Ibbotson could cut the page in the ledger, track the check to the private drawer, hunt out my receipt and make his escape—and all this without any preconceived plan. Why, the whole thing is monstrous and utterly improbable. I am positive that the only thing Ibbotson has done is to cash the check."

"Roger, oh, how dreadful it all is! Of course, there can be no doubt in your own mind who did it all?"

"There is not a shadow of doubt in my own mind, Allie; but how am I to bring my father to believe it? Ibbotson has left the place, or he was actually going to set the detectives on him. Fergusson has completely hoodwinked him. Circumstantial evidence is strong against Fergusson, to my thinking. Judge for yourself, Allie; he was with me in the office when I opened the check; he saw me make the entry in the ledger, as well as write the receipt; he also must have seen me thrust the check hastily into the private drawer before I ran out into the yard. No doubt he returned to the office as soon as my attention was engrossed with poor Mitchell. A few minutes was all that was needed to accomplish the job, Allie. I have found out to-day that he is terribly involved, and that his creditors are threatening him. I told you things are coming to a crash. I am afraid we shall lose more than the sum we received from Simmonds Brothers."

"Oh, Roger, how blind your father is! What are you to do to open his eyes?"

"I am going to watch Fergusson," returned Roger, with a frown of anxiety. "Allie, I never meant to have told you this. I have been about the town gleaning facts to-day, but I mean to keep them to myself for the next four-and-twenty hours. Fergusson has arrived at some sort of crisis in his affairs. I am afraid he will do something desperate. A sum of money has come into our hands to-day after banking hours, in notes and gold. I wanted my father to bring it up to the house, but he scouted the idea as ridiculous, as though any thief could open an iron safe; but, Allie, I am not comfortable in my mind. Supposing Fergusson has a duplicate key? My father is so hopelessly duped that it is no use saying any more to him. I have made up my mind to watch the office to-night."

"But not alone, dear?"

"Yes, of course. Timothy will be there, if I need help; but I don't mean to take him into confidence. There is a barge that passes at ten to-night. The barge is an acquaintance of mine. I told him to look out for me by the bridge. I will get him to land me at the lower end of the yard. Timothy will be in his shed by that time, thinking about his supper. I don't want him to see me, or he will enlighten Fergusson. There is a handy wood-pile just outside the office where I can lie snug."

"Roger!" exclaimed Alison, in a quick, determined voice, "you shall not go alone; I shall watch with you." And as he was about to interrupt her she went on quietly. "You know Missie and Miss Leigh will be out until half past ten. Papa is always in his study. They will think I am in bed. I can lock my door and put the key in my pocket, and you have the latch-key. I will be no trouble to you. I will be as quiet as a mouse, and not hinder you. I could not rest—I could not sleep, knowing you were with that bad man. I will be useful as a witness. You must take me, Roger."

"Are you sure that you mean it—that it will not hurt you?" he asked, slowly.

"What should hurt me on a summer's night? And the barge will be such fun."

"Very well, you shall come if you like. You are a plucky girl, Allie."

CHAPTER XIII.

It was still early in the evening when the young conspirators returned to the house, and the next two hours passed very slowly to Alison.

At half past nine Mr. Merle was shut safely in his study. Alison went quickly into her room and made her little preparation. A brown hat she had discarded as being too shabby would just suit her nocturnal purpose; her dress was dark, and a warm jacket was all she needed; and, carefully turning down her gas and locking her door, she crept quietly downstairs, to find Roger waiting for her in the dark entry.

He nodded and held out his hand to her without speaking, until they were outside the gate and were walking rapidly down the road that would lead them to the bridge.

"I have brought this plaid," he observed presently, showing it to her. "I was so afraid you would find it cold if we should have to watch many hours. I don't think I ought to have brought you, Allie."

"I could not have stopped at home," was Alison's quick answer. "Is this the bridge where we are to wait, Roger? How black the canal looks!"

"I am afraid we are going to have rain," he returned, in a vexed voice. "I do not mind the moon being absent; the darkness is in our favor. But what am I to do with you, Allie, if we have a wet night? You will catch your death of cold."

"Nonsense," replied Alison stoutly. But nevertheless she felt an inward twinge of discomfort. Neither of them had thought of the weather. How weird and eerie everything looked in the obscure light, the dark towing path and the sluggish canal, the tall factories, and beyond them the dim woodpiles and sheds stretching away into the distance. The very barge that came floating toward them out of the darkness seemed to hold dark, grisly shapes upon it.

In a few minutes Roger was helping her to scramble on shore. They were now at the extreme end of the timber yard, and had some way to walk.

Long before they had reached their destination the heavy patter of rain drops warned them to make haste; but in the uncertain light, and with so rough a path, their speed was greatly retarded.

"Here we are at last," whispered Roger; "follow me closely, Allie." And she obeyed, holding his coat to give her courage. A pitchy blackness was round them; Roger's groping only led them still further into the darkness. Alison experienced a sense of suffocation until a ray of murky light showed her where she was—at the further entrance of one of the wood piles, with the office windows within a few yards of them.

Alison breathed more freely when she recognized her position. The interlaced planks formed an arched chamber, where they could move with comfort and be sheltered from the rain. Roger spread the plaid near the entrance, and bade his sister make herself as comfortable as circumstances permitted, while he went a little way to reconnoiter.

"I hope I have not brought you on a wild goose chase," he said when he returned. "Timothy is eating his supper. We shall have to be careful when he goes with his rounds. Hush! What is that?" as a slight sound was plainly audible. "Don't move, I implore you, Allie!" And Roger cautiously raised himself on his hands and knees and crept a few paces nearer to the entrance, but in a moment he returned and bade Alison to move further into the darkness.

"It is Fergusson; I heard his voice," he whispered. "Come a little further; Timothy has his lantern, and he might turn it on us; and now not a word if you can help it. Are you frightened, dear?"

"No," returned Alison, a little unsteadily, but at that moment she was certainly wishing herself and Roger safely at home. Roger's caution was not in vain; a sudden flare of light penetrated the entrance of the wood pile; they could see two men; but at the moment the lantern was lowered and Timothy's face was turned to his companion.

"A wet night, master," he said, in a grumbling voice. "I'll just go on my beat, and then back to the shed again."

"All right, Timothy," returned the manager, briskly. "I must just hunt for the paper I told you about. Possibly I may be a quarter of an hour in the office; but I will call out to you when I am ready for you to let me out of the yard."

"Ay, ay, I will let you out, sure enough, Master Fergusson, if so be as you strike upon the little window in the shed." And the old man moved on slowly.

"Don't move, Allie; I'll be back in a moment," whispered Roger in her ear.

And Alison remained where she was, feeling the dampness all around her, an unpleasant moisture beginning to trickle down her neck. The rain was pouring in torrents outside; its very violence promised short duration. Presently Roger crept back to her.

"It is just as I said," he began, hurriedly. "He is unlocking the safe; he has a duplicate key—I was sure of it. There is not a moment to lose. I dare not trust Timothy. I must go for my father. Allie, may I leave you here? You are perfectly safe—no one would harm you But one of us must watch Fergusson; which shall it be?"

"You must go, Roger," she exclaimed. "You will go more quickly, and will know how to avoid Timothy."

"Very well, keep up your courage, Allie, and do not lose sight of the villain," he returned. "I will bring father back in no time. Wait where you are until Timothy has passed again."

Alison's reply was inaudible, but her mute assent testified obedience. That moment she was literally beyond speech; the horrid darkness seemed to swallow her up again; a nervous oppression made her heart beat with distressing quickness. It was quite a relief when Timothy passed again; the familiar figure in the heavy watchman's coat gave her a comforting sense of human support.

She stole cautiously across the open path, and in another moment she was standing outside the office window. There were two windows, for this one was necessarily darkened by the woodpile, but over the other the blind had been lowered to shut out prying glances. Alison supposed, as Roger had, that he had locked himself in to carry on his unhallowed work. The dark background of piled-up planks quite overshadowed the white girlish face peering in at the uncurtained window.

She was frightened at her own daring, but she remembered that she was Roger's witness; it was necessary for her own eyes to testify to Fergusson's dishonest doings. Now there could be no mistake; the open safe was conclusive, and so were the notes and gold that he was stowing away in that great black bag. Alison watched, half fascinated by horror. He had nearly finished; yes, he was locking his bag and closing the safe, the candle stood fluttering beside him on a chair, not on the table; he almost pushed against it as he went to the door and set it open. Yes, he had locked himself in, for she could see him take the key out and fix it carefully in the outer lock, and then he went back into the room. Oh, what had become of Roger? In another moment he could have escaped with his booty. The main entrance to the timber yard was in the opposite direction to the private door opening into the garden of The Holms. Even if Roger and her father were coming in this moment, Fergusson would have no difficulty in eluding them. It was true the door was locked and Timothy had the key, but he could easily swim across the canal and reach the towing path unseen.

Alison's agony was rising to a pitch that almost justified rashness. She was becoming desperate in spite of her terror. A sudden thought came to her, thrilling her with horror—could she do it? Yes, for Roger's sake she would try. Another second she was gliding round the little building and passed the curtained window with a gleam of light shining through the crevice. As she passed it there was sudden darkness; he had extinguished the candle. In another instant Alison had shut the door, almost knocking Fergusson back, if she had known it, and had turned the key in the lock. Alison had felt a quick, hysteric sob rise in her throat as she heard the key turning under her hand. Had she really done it? Had some unseen presence beside her given her the needful strength? Was the dishonest servant a prisoner, and she his captor? But Alison had no time to do more than ask herself these questions, for Timothy came out of his shed, and was hobbling toward her, and the next moment the key was in Alison's pocket, and she was standing at bay.

"What does this mean, miss? How came you here?" exclaimed the old man, suspiciously.

"I have locked Mr. Fergusson in; he is stealing papa's money out of the safe," returned Alison, turning her white face to Timothy, and the sob rising in her throat again, "I will not give up the key until papa comes."

A fierce kick at the door behind her drove her from it a few paces.

"Let me out, Timothy!" thundered Fergusson. "The girl is mad; she must be out of her mind to say such things. Mr. Merle desired me to look over some papers for him; they are most important, and there must be no delay."

"You hear what he says, miss," returned Timothy, rather roughly; "we must not keep the master's manager locked up. I warrant you it is all right; they keep them papers in the safe. Give me the key and I will open the door for the gentleman."

"Not until papa comes," was Alison's reply; and, in spite of Timothy's surly remonstrances and Fergusson's imprecations, she remained firm. Timothy was driven to his wits' end, when suddenly footsteps were heard, and Alison darted forward to meet them.

"Papa, I saw him at the safe; he was putting the gold and notes into his bag. I saw him do it!" she cried excitedly. "He blew out the candle, and then I locked him in. Here is the key."

"Timothy, go at once to the police station!" exclaimed Mr. Merle, in a voice they had never heard before; it was so hoarse with indignation. "Roger, take your sister into the house. There is a fire in my study; I will wait here."

"No, no; I can go alone," returned Alison. "Roger must not leave you, papa."

But he repeated in the same curt way: "Take your sister away, Roger, and be back as soon as you can." And Roger, who understood his father, hurried her across the yard and the garden, and did not leave her until she was in the warm, brightly lighted study.

"Take off your wet jacket, Allie," he charged her, as he left her; but there was no time to say more.

Alison obeyed him. She took off her dripping hat also; and then she sat down on the rug and laid her head against her father's chair, and a flood of tears relieved her overwrought nerves. Roger found her still in the same position when he came in half an hour later; but the tears were flowing more quietly. In his boyish exuberance he lifted her up as though she were a child.

"Here she is, father, crying her pretty eyes out! And no wonder, when she is so cold and tired. Allie, do you know you are a perfect heroine! You have done a plucky thing, and no mistake!"

"Come and kiss me, Alison, my dear!" said Mr. Merle. "You are a brave girl, and have saved your poor father's credit. Roger and you have done nobly to-night. I have let myself be duped by a dishonest rogue. Give me your hand, boy; it does not become a man to ask his own son to forgive him, but I think we shall understand each other better from this day."

Appearances Deceitful.

"Looks like rather poor soil in this part of the country," said the stranger.

"Well, it ain't," replied the native. "A man over on the adjoining farm plowed up a tin can with fifty dollars in it one day last week."

Up to Her.

The young housewife was engaging her first cook.

"Of course," she said, "I don't want to have any trouble with you."

"Thin it do be up t' yersilf, ma'am," replied the kitchen lady. "If yes make no complaints Oi'll make no trouble."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Henry Funk, of Corydon, has just begun his one hundredth year of life. He is quite active and feels sure he will round out a hundred years and have some to spare.

Theophelus Crumpacker, father of Congressman Edgar D. Crumpacker, died suddenly at his home in Valparaiso. He was 86 years old. He served in the State Legislature from 1872 to 1878.

That her husband spent on horses a fortune of over $100,000 he inherited, is alleged by Mrs. Emily Drybrough in a suit for divorce against Robert Drybrough, a veterinary surgeon of Evansville.

George Myers, an old-time trapper and fisherman, of Elwood, sent to President Roosevelt a snow-white stork, which the hunter found in the swamps adjacent to White river, south of Perkinsville.

While William Jones, a farmer near Princeton, was using an emery wheel, it burst and a piece cut through his chin and lips. The bone of the chin was cut through to the neck. He has a bare chance for recovery.

Wesley Dunham, aged 89 years and formerly mayor of Anderson, is suffering from a peculiar ailment. A few days ago he was bitten on the hand by a common house fly, from which blood poisoning has developed and has spread throughout his system, causing serious illness.

Fred Young, paroled from the Indiana Reformatory, July 25 last, to a farmer in Gibson County, has voluntarily returned to the institution, walking 120 miles to do so. He gave as his reason the fear that he would transgress some of the rules of his parole and thereby render himself liable to recommitment.

Norman Krider, Burt Gingerich, Bartlett and Manny Stiffler, four Elkhart boys, inflamed with nickel novels and cigarettes, were caught breaking into Lake Shore cars in the Goshen yards. When pursued by the police they made a fort of a box car and fought the police. Krider was caught, and squeaked.

The mascot of the Indiana University football team, which journeyed to Lafayette recently, was a Brown County hoot-owl, captured a week ago, and since then adorning a window of a downtown store. The owl was bedecked with cream and crimson ribbons and taken to Lafayette by a crowd of enthusiastic students.

One hundred and thirty hunters' licenses were issued by the clerk of Grant County in one day recently. All told, over 1,800 hunters' licenses have been issued at Marion this year. Game is very scarce in Grant County, and it is estimated there are not enough quail to go around if they should be distributed one to each hunter who has obtained a license.

The rear seat of an automobile in which Mrs. Henry Bradley and Mrs. B. E. White, of Wabash, were riding, slipped off as the car was going at a high speed. The ladies were left a mile behind in the roadway before Mr. White and the chauffeur in the front seat of the car learned of the mishap. Mrs. White was painfully hurt in the fall from the speeding machine.

Herman Burghardt, who came to English two weeks ago, has become mentally unbalanced. He continuously repeats the Lord's Prayer. While in his room he murmurs the Lord's Prayer, and goes to the church, kneels in front of the building and repeats the prayer. He says his home was in Oklahoma, where he recently sold a farm for $1,500. He brought with him $750 and deposited it in the bank.

Muskrats in many places along the Kankakee river, it is said, are doing much damage to fields and especially to cornfields. On corn land adjoining the river the rats have dug a perfect network of burrows in which stores of ear corn are frequently found, ranging from a peck to three-fourths of a bushel. R. J. Manson, a farmer near Morocco, with the help of two dogs, filled fifty-six muskarts in one day.

Elmer E. Hastings, of Washington, past Grandmaster of the Indiana Odd Fellows, has received from the Grand Lodge, as a token of appreciation of the order for his services, a beautifully designed jewel, showing his official rank in the fraternity. Mr. Hastings was retired from office at the recent meeting of the Grand Lodge. Under his administration was finished the new Odd Fellow building at Indianapolis.

Messrs G. Donahue and B. W. Parker, trainmaster and chief train dispatcher, respectively, of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway Company, on coming to Milan to look after the water supply of the company, were surprised to find the big lake, which had been supposed would never fail, contained only sufficient water to meet the demand of a few more days. Arrangements were at once made to bring water to Milan from Cochran.

The Knights of Pythias of Newcastle, one of the largest lodges in the State, is making preparations for the annual roll call meeting, which will be held this year on Monday evening, December 14.

John Stout is the second of the quarto indicted for the murder of Columbus Croy, marshal, at Woodburn, on July 7, 1907, to be convicted and sentenced for life. The jury returned its verdict after having been out only forty-five minutes.

Dirk Munk, known as the Ashkum giant, died at his home in Ashkum, Ill., last week, at the age of 36 years. He was a giant in stature, measuring six feet ten inches in height and weighing 300 pounds. He was born at Ashkum in 1872, and lived in the township all his life. He was unmarried.

Apparently just because he was tired of living, George Bolten, aged 30, a prosperous farmer near Lipton, committed suicide last week by drinking carbolic acid. The man was in good financial condition, and enjoyed good health. His body was found in the barn with the bottle at the side of it.

The ring used in the marriage ceremony that united Dr. Charles Kniese, of Cambridge City, and Miss Alice Beeson, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver H. Beeson, at Milton, has a history peculiarly its own. It was made from gold belonging to Dr. Kniese, the bridegroom. The doctor melted the gold and fashioned the ring himself, after a mold of his own design.

Christian Easterday, aged 79 years, one of the pioneer residents of Portland, has never had a barber's razor on his face. He now wears a snow-white beard. When a young man he shaved himself, but he has not shaved himself since Washington's birthday in 1862. Two days later, on his thirty-third birthday, he enlisted in the Union army, serving for three years and ten days. Since that time he has allowed his beard to grow.

Elkhart's new $80,000 school building was formally opened by a very elaborate program, of which State Superintendent Fassett A. Cotton's address was the principal feature. This building is one of the best equipped and most modern in the northern part of the State. It is constructed of Bedford stone, two stories high and contains twenty rooms, the entire building having a seating capacity of 800. It is equipped with a very efficient system of fire escapes.

J. S. Hensler, a farm employe near Bunkum, was unusually unfortunate in his election bets. He bet that Stevenson would be elected Governor of Illinois. As a result he will husk 750 bushels of corn free of charge for his employer, instead of receiving 10 cents a bushel for the work. He will also husk 100 bushels of corn free of charge for another farmer because Bryan did not carry Indiana, besides losing $35 on Watson's failure to defeat Marshall for Governor by a plurality of 2,000.

Members of the Improved Order of Red Men at Noblesville gave their annual rabbit supper last week. One hundred and eighty-seven rabbits were slaughtered for the feast. The menu also included 483 mince pies, 315 pumpkin pies and seventy-nine gallons of sweet milk and cream. Seven hundred members of the lodge were seated at the tables. Addresses were made by Judge Christian, Auditor-elect George Griffin, W. R. Fertig, Capt. T. J. Gray and others. Over 100 large baskets of pies and meat were left and these were distributed among the poor people of the city.

Acting upon the authority of the dog muzzling ordinance, which was signed by Mayor Shattuck, the police force of Brazil carried shotguns and killed unmuzzled dogs as fast as they were found. Ten dogs were killed in one day, some of them being valuable hunting dogs, whose owners believed the ordinance was for a "bluff." As soon as the reports of the shots were heard, dog owners began scurrying to get their dogs under cover, while the children were sent to the various stores for muzzles. The warfare on the dogs will be continued until every unmuzzled dog in the city is killed.

Fred Pierce, of Muncie, just appointed a game warden, and with a brand new commission in his pocket, sallied forth Thanksgiving day to arrest violators of the law which says that every hunter must possess a hunter's license. The first arrest he made was that of the Rev. J. Walter Gibson, pastor of the Normal City United Brethren church, who is charged with hunting without a license upon the farm of Joseph Jones, in Salem township. It is also alleged that he was hunting upon a farm whose owner had not given him permission to hunt. The minister's hearing will be before a local justice of the peace next week.

Typhoid is fast assuming the proportions of an epidemic in Jeffersonville, and the number of certain cases can not be less than forty, with fully that number more under observation of the doctors, but not yet developed far enough for diagnosis. The water from various sources, contaminated on account of the long drought, is under suspicion, and Mayor E. N. Flynn, who is also a physician, is urging that all water shall be boiled. The following warning has been issued:

You'd better boil your water,
And mind what you're about;
For the Typhoid Germ will get you
Ef yer don't watch out.

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

The demand for farm implements is again springing up and manufacturers expect a return to normal conditions next year.

The American Society of Equity organized at Fargo the Tri-State Grain Growers' department for Minnesota and both Dakotas.

In a speech to the National Grange, Gifford Pinchot, chief forester, urged the farmers to aid in saving the water power from monopoly by a few big corporations. He said the farmers would soon be using electricity and would need this water power themselves.

President Barrett told the delegates attending the convention of the Farmers' Union at New Orleans that it was within the power of the southern planters, by restricting their output to bring the price of cotton back to last year's level and add $150,000,000 to their wealth. Over 1,000 delegates attended the convention.

Ole Swanson, a big Swede, working on the Holbertson farm, southwest of Lake City, Iowa, claims that he can husk more corn in eleven hours than any other man. He recently husked 141 bushels in eleven hours and ten minutes, measurement by wagon box.

Most men prefer to be broke than half cracked.

A pusher will beat a kicker to the goal any old time.

One reason for eating ice-cream with a spoon is that a fork leaks.

Some people construe laws as restrictions that govern everybody but them.

You can get a coat of tan from Old Sol, but you must pay the tailor for a pair of trousers.

To avoid sunstroke—er, I beg your pardon—Have you bought your Christmas presents, YET?

Johnny was asked to tell the names of the meals of a day. He replied: "Supper, dinner, breakfast and oatmeal!"

I don't see anything strange about starting a building from the top and building down. That's the way you dig a well, isn't it?

When a bashful young man finally musters up enough courage to kiss a pretty girl, he is disgusted with himself for having neglected his opportunities.

The muzzling regulation for dogs in Washington is about to be suspended but news comes that the German Chancellor is trying to muzzle somebody at Potsdam.

The colored theologian who informed his congregation that there were two roads, one of them leading to hell and the other to damnation and advising them to take to the woods, must have lived in the good old time before the woods were infested with amateur gunners.

Congressman Burton of Ohio, one of the ablest and most distinguished Republicans in the lower house, since he has been in conference with President-elect Taft at Hot Springs makes the statement, apparently authoritative, that Mr. Taft favors thorough and honest revision of the tariff; and he also intimates that unless Speaker Cannon has similar views with reference to this question, it will be indispensible to put someone in the Speaker's chair whose views more nearly coincide with those of the President elect. There are some tariff schedules in which the protectionists of Ohio, from which state both Mr. Taft and Mr. Burton come, have a strong interest. These are iron and steel manufactures, wool and woolens, glass and earthenware. Mr. Carnegie, in a recent interview, has given the first schedule a staggering blow when he declares that steel can be made more cheaply in this country than any where else. This statement coming from Mr. Carnegie is impressive, but it has long been known to all who are acquainted with statistics. The many successors of Mr. Carnegie in the steel industry are no less eager for their share of the tariff spoils than was he when he was connected with the iron industry some twenty years ago. The generous contributors in Ohio to the political fortunes of the President elect and Mr. Burton, as well as the owners of millions of sheep in the ranges about the Rocky Mountains will fight desperately against any reform of the wool and woolen schedules. The duties on wool should be reduced, smuggling will continue and thousands of Americans will continue to suffer and die from insufficient clothing. All clothing that is not of the best and cheapest that can be had anywhere in the world is insufficient and the fact that the American man and woman and boy and girl have to pay more for the best quality of woolen clothing than is paid anywhere else in the world, is notorious and outrageous, or as Mr. Adams expresses it with reference to the tariff beneficiaries, "hoggish and thievish". It was Charles Lamb who said that he was quite willing to do without the necessities of life if he could have the luxuries, and Mr. Carnegie is not well advised when he asserts in his plea for freer trade that the Americans tariff almost exempts the poor and heavily taxes the rich, just as it should. Of the taxed imports last year, upward of seventy-five per cent, consisted of necessities and comforts used by the masses of the population of the United States. Sugar and molasses, wood and its manufactures, iron and steel, fruits and nuts, cotton fabrics and manufactures of flax and hemp, these are not luxuries, used only by the rich. They are the necessities used only by a large majority of the people. Such real luxuries as tobacco, distilled spirits, diamonds, toys, etc., bear but a relatively small amount of taxation.

Headache Every Month

You may think, because you have long had it, that you must have a headache every month, being a women.

But if you think so, you are wrong, since a headache is a sign of disease of your womanly organs, that thousands of other women have been able to relieve or cure, by the use of that wonderful, woman's medicine,

WINE OF CARDUI
WOMAN'S RELIEF

"I recommend Cardui to all sick women," writes Mrs. A. C. Beaver of Unicoi, Tenn. "I suffered with headache, bearing-down pains, feet swelled, pains in shoulders and many others. At last I took Cardui, have gained 20 pounds and have found it the best medicine I ever used for female troubles."

Medicine that is Medicine.

"I have suffered a good deal with malaria and stomach complaints, but I have now found a remedy that keeps me well, and that remedy is Electric Bitters: a medicine that is medicine for stomach and liver troubles, and for run down conditions," says W. C. Kiestler, of Halliday, Ark. Electric Bitters purify and enrich the blood, tone up the nerves, and impart vigor and energy to the weak. Your money will be refunded if it fails to help you. 50c at H. Milliman's drug store.

Has the Christmas spirit struck you yet? Of course you know, without referring to the calendar, that it is only two weeks from Friday until December 25th, the day you remember friends with the things they don't need and don't want and the day you are forced to smile over similar presents.

Undoubtedly you have been thinking of what would make appropriate gifts and Christmas, in a way, has struck you, but have you the real Christmas spirit yet? The spirit that makes you want to remember friends regardless of the cost of a gift, the spirit that will make a letter from some one else as welcome as an expensive remembrance would be. Often in selecting and giving presents the real value of the day, the "peace on earth, good will toward men" thought is entirely lost. Of late years various imitations of Old Scrouge have come among us and we sometimes meet with him when he says, "Times are too hard, no Christmas presents for me." Such people have lost the meaning of the day. Even though they did not feel able to put much money into presents, they could be happy in the thought that even a letter or card may carry the glad tiding as well as a costly gift. Stinginess, however, is not a characteristic of American people, they are a generous people who treat their friends well. Most of them know that the price is not what counts in gifts, it is the fact that the present has come from some dear one. It is cherished for this reason and valued on account of the good will it carries with it. As good a Christmas gift one can send to a far away friend would be THE NEWS for one year. It is better than a letter and it will be appreciated by a friend. It's only $1.00 per year.

Marked for Death.

"Three years ago I was marked for death. A grave-yard cough was tearing my lungs to pieces. Doctors failed to help me, and hope had fled, when my husband got Dr. King's New Discovery," says Mrs. A. C. Williams, of Bac, Ky. "The first dose helped me and improvement kept on until I had gained 58 pounds in weigh and my health was fully restored." This medicine holds the world's healing record for coughs and colds and lung and throat diseases. It prevents pneumonia. Sold under guarantee at H Milliman's drug store. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Are You Sick?

Much sickness is due to a weak nervous system. Yours may be. If it is, you cannot get well until you restore nerve strength Your nervous system is nature's power house; the organs of your body get their power from it. If the power is not there, the action of the organs is weak, and disease (sickness) follows. Dr. Miles' Nervine cures the sick because it soothes the irritated and tired nerves and gives the system a chance to recuperate. Try it, and see if you do not quickly feel its beneficial effect.

"I was given up to die by a leading doctor. Got one of Dr. Miles' books and found that Dr. Miles' Nervine fit my case. From the very first dose I took I got better. I am better now than I have been for years, and do all my own work on the farm. That's what Dr. Miles' Nervine has done for me, and I am glad to recommend it to others."
JOHN JAMES, Riverton, Nebr.

Your druggist sells Dr. Miles' Nervine, and we authorize him to return price of first bottle (only) if it fails to benefit you.

Being Poor.

It is often the very poor who reveal the perception of the relative value of things which lies at the bottom of every art. Misery dwells with them, a thousand forms of wretchedness; yet often, too, kindness, sympathy, zest in living—treasures too often cast away by those who descend to poverty from easier circumstance—are their frequent guests.

"Hard times" force upon many a life a stern test. What is cast overboard first that the ship may weather the storm? Amusements? Dress? The fine horse? The pew in church? Are hospitality and charity luxuries to be abandoned, or necessities to be kept at any cost? Are books and magazines part of the vital stuff of life, or merely idle adornments?

Occasionally one is rejoiced to find a family where the test is not only met quietly and calmly, but made to reveal the true riches of life, as in the case of the mother who, when hard times came upon the family, talked the whole matter over with her children, and made them decide their share of the problems.

The family had been one of open-hearted hospitality, where every child was free to bring his friends as he would. The mother, having explained affairs clearly, told the children that they could invite their friends as they had always done, but to very simple meals, with no desserts and meat but once a day, or they could have the usual table and—no friends.

The children decided unanimously for their friends. Such a family will master the fine art of living under any conditions.

"Yes'm, 'tis so," a poor woman is said to have explained to a friend. I believe in economizing as much as any one, but I figger it this way: A body can't afford to be too poor."

It was sound philosophy. It remains only to define poverty.

Thoughts of a Crank.

The happy, successful farmer has many friends with odd names. Have you ever noticed it?

He has Experience, Contentment, Patience, Mercy, Faith, Hope, Charity and Love. You will find yourself happy, and successful, too, when all these can be found under your roof.

Did you ever notice how much good there is in honest laughter? The man who is laughing never strikes his horse or cow at that time, neither does he kick the dog.

Any story, the reading of which made one life brighter, one household happier, one heart less sad, was well worth the writing.

The compensation should be equal for men and women, where the amount of work done and the quality are the same.

A mule once drew a heavy load up a steep hill; when he had almost reached the top he kicked himself loose and the load rolled down the hill. That mule had to go back and draw the same load to the top of the same hill again. There are lots of mules in the world. Ponder, and be wise.

From December Farm Journal.

This is Worth Reading.

Leo F. Zelinski, of 68 Gibson St., Buffalo, N. Y., says: "I cured the most annoying cold sore I ever had, with Bucklen's Arnica Salve. I applied this salve once a day for two days, when every trace of the sore was gone." Heals all sores. Sold under guarantee at H. Milliman's drug store. 25c.

Useful Hints.

Sheffer guarantees all work he trys to please. Try him.

Never use tarred rope for strings to hang meat by. Tar has a very penetrating odor.

Do you know that light weakens the strength of vanilla extract? For that reason keep it in a dark place.

Pumpkin seeds are very attractive to mice, and traps baited with them will soon destroy these little pests.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills relieve pain.

It is Sheffer that gives satisfaction. In horse-shoing and repair work, try him.

Do not cook cranberry sauce too long, and do not add too much water. The finest sauce can be made from one quart of cranberries with one cupful of water. Boil for ten minutes, then add two cupfuls of sugar. Stir well and set away to cool.

On mild days in winter give the cellar a good airing. This not only keeps mold from developing and makes the whole house more healthful to live in, but it also helps to keep the floor timbers in good condition. Rot may develop pretty rapidly in these timbers in a damp, poorly ventilated cellar, and in consequence danger or loss follows.

Let us stand right by Santa Claus and the Christmas giving. He has made the world brighter and better and happier. His work is not yet done. As long as there is a poor lonely heart anywhere in the world; as long as there is a man or woman who needs to be cheered up; as long as there are boys and girls to love,—so long will there be something for this Saint of the Big Heart to do.

Birds of several species can be kept around the farmyard all winter, such as chickadees, downy, hairy and red-headed woodpeckers, redbirds, bluejays, etc., if food and shelter are provided for them. The food should include nuts, which may be chopped or broken into small pieces; wheat, cracked corn, beef suet, breadcrumbs and table scraps. They may be shy at first but if these things are put daily in the same places they will become tame. If you begin to feed them and thus encourage them to stay with you, you ought to keep it up without intermission, since they have counted on your charity.

A Dangerous Operation

is the removal of the appendix by a surgeon. No one who takes Dr. King's New Life Pills is ever subjected to this frightful ordeal. They work so quietly you don't feel them. They cure constipation, headache, biliousness and malaria. 25c at H. Milliman's drug store.

MYSTERY OF DREAMS

Whence Come the Warning Visitors We See In Sleep?

TWO VERY PUZZLING CASES.

One Where Mother and Son Both Got Tidings of Disaster at the Same Time and One Where a Child Saw Her Father Saved In a Shipwreck.

Out of 149 dreams of a very striking kind investigated by one of the leading psychic research societies no fewer than seventy-nine related to a death, and perhaps the rarest of all these dreams is the case where two persons dreamed the same thing on the same night, and the episode came true. This striking instance is reported by the Rev. R. B. Elrington:

"A woman parishioner of mine," he says, "whose husband was a fisherman, at that time on the sea, dreamed one night in terribly vivid fashion that his little craft had been cut in two by the towering steel bows of a great liner. Her eldest son was with the husband, and as she woke she screamed out, 'Oh, save my boy, my boy!' This was remarkable enough, considering the sequel, but almost at the very moment the poor woman was in her distress, yet still asleep, another son was pounding at her door, half asleep and half awake, and crying, 'Oh, mother, where is father?' The terrified woman now rose and let the boy in. He was crying. He told her he had distinctly heard his father's heavy tread coming up the stairs and his ponderous kick with sea boots against the door, as had been his manner when returning abruptly from a long cruise. Next morning the alarmed mother and wife told all the neighbors, and before the day was out the dreadful news came that every detail of her dream was true. The little trawling lugger had been run into by a coasting liner, nearly cut in two and sunk with all hands, including her husband and son."

Premonitory dreams occupy a large part of the psychological records, and the following case is a very puzzling one: A Mrs. Spruit lived at Balmain, one of the suburbs of Sydney, Australia. Her husband was a sea captain in command of the Atacama, a wooden ship of 1,300 tons, which had arrived in Sydney in a leaking state and was picked up cheap by a firm known as Cowlishaw Bros. for $3,500. Twice as much was spent in repairs, and then the Atacama was sent up the coast with a cargo of coal. She delivered this and next set out for San Diego.

But when 500 miles out from Sydney she sprang a leak, and Captain Spruit decided to put back. In spite of the pumps the water gained, and soon there was a depth of eleven feet in the hold. Spruit now resolved to abandon the ship and launch the three boats. The captain himself, with one seaman, the steward, boatswain and an apprentice, was in the twenty-four foot lifeboat, while the rest of the crew, twelve in all, were in the other two boats. Heavy seas were running, and the boats were nearly swamped. As Spruit could not swim, he was nearly drowned. Some of his men were lost. Their situation was indeed fearful in boats half filled with water and exposed to a fierce gale 400 miles from land. Again and again was Spruit washed out, but at last his boat was picked up when its occupants were in the last stages of exhaustion from fatigue, exposure and lack of food. A reporter of the Sydney Morning Herald called to interview the captain and found him barefooted, with terribly swollen legs, covered with severe cuts and bruises.

Now consider Mrs. Spruit's report to the Psychical Research society, which is most remarkable.

"Last Thursday week," she writes, "at 3 o'clock in the morning my thirteen-year-old daughter Lily came into my bedroom and woke me by a tap on my forehead. 'Oh, mamma,' she cried in a breathless whisper, 'I'm so frightened!' I tried to soothe her, but she only covered her face with her hands and whispered tremblingly: 'Oh, look! My papa's ship is all wrecked! Papa's come home all in rags, with his feet and legs cut, and I see two or three of his men drowned out of the boat.'

"I told Lily sternly it was all nonsense.

"'It isn't!' she said passionately. 'I've seen it in my dream, and I know it's all true!'

"But I coaxed her off to bed. The girl kept worrying about it until the next Sunday. A week after her dream my husband returned, and Lily found me crying when she came in from school.

"'Oh, mamma,' she cried sharply, 'is the Atacama wrecked?'

"I told her evasively her papa had come home.

"She was not to be denied, however, and asked, with strange persistence, 'Are papa's legs cut?'

"I said they were.

"And the very first thing she said to her father was: 'Why, you didn't have those clothes on when I saw you! The ones you had on were all torn in the shipwreck.'"

Lily Spruit herself furnished a report to the Psychical Research society. She said she woke in terrible fright, having seen every microscopic detail of the shipwreck and its sequel. She saw her father get into the big boat and keep close to his ship for some time. She watched his boat capsize and the boy Allen drown. What woke her, she said, was the howling of the wind about the wreck, and the last she saw was the other men pulling her father back into the waterlogged boat.—William T. Fitz-Gerald in New York Tribune.

His Eye In Danger

Dr. Ben Shook has been having a serious time with one of his eyes. Last week he was bothered with a pain in his eye and it became more serious until he was unable to see any thing. He had the eye examined and thought that perhaps it would be necessary to remove it, but at this writing he seems to be easier and it may be that the eye can be saved.

Word From Colorado

Wallace Steward received a letter last week, from Joseph Webb at Messex, Colo., stating that his family had arrived safely and that he had been without the asthma until he was carrying carpet from the car, getting a sniff of the dust and within five minutes he was coughing as much as ever. His health is very poor and his family seems discouraged in their moving there. He also states that he will commence building a new house within a week.

UNCONSCIOUS DETERIORATION.

By Rev. Charles F. Aked, D. D.

Gray hairs are here and there upon him and he knoweth it not.—Hosea viii., 9.

The comic paragraphists—gentlemen whose elevating trade it is to take all the dignity out of sentiment and all nobility out of life—are in the habit of making fun over the discovery of the first gray hair.

There is nothing funny about it. When some piquant experience forces upon us the realization of that for which the gray hair conventionally stands; when we realize with a shock that our youth has fled forever and that age is creeping on, the flood of new emotions may easily carry us off our feet.

If this is not true for you and has not been, then you are either much better or worse than the average of humanity. Either you have already grown unthoughtful, shallow and callous, or else you have a strong, close grip upon the unseen but everlasting realities of life. And it would be good for us if there were some physical sign, corresponding to the approach of gray hairs, which might warn us of moral deterioration and awaken us to the necessity of renewing our youth by waiting upon the Lord, by taking in great re-enforcements of moral energy to repair the waste and decay of moral tissue.

The shock, in the nature of things, could not be pleasant. The awakening might be rude and painful. But it would be salutary. It would be chastening. And if for the moment it was humbling, in the providence of God it might be permanently uplifting. If we could really see this soul destroying process at work, leading downward to something worse than a second childhood, leading to a second slothfulness, unreasonableness, barbarism, back to the old unspiritual, unaspiring life from which we have emerged, would not that be good for us? "With great price," said the officer to Paul, "I purchased this freedom." With great price, indeed, we delivered ourselves from the cramping littleness and debasing pleasures of other days. And now are we to sacrifice the freedom which cost us dear to open our fingers in mere summer wantonness and let it slip from us while the years bind us again in the old bondage to folly or sin, while strangers devour our strength, though we know it not, and gray hairs are here and there sprinkled upon us and we cannot see them?

The poet tells us of hair growing white in a single night from sudden fears. It may be so. But this moral deterioration is slow, gradual, silent. No man becomes desperately wicked all at once. When discovery, scandal and prosecution at the hands of the law present to you a spectacle of one who has held an honored position, a betrayer, an outlaw and a castaway, the real tragedy is not that which you see; and the very tears are for the long, slow processes which no eyes but God's have seen. How the high resolves must have drooped and died, and how the man has juggled with words, played fast and loose with honor, tampered with the sacred realities of conscience. Do you think he has deliberately lied to his own soul, lied in church, lied to his God? Indeed, but you are wrong. He has lost his soul and lost his God before he comes to high-handed, brazen-cheeked, deliberate lying.

First, the mining, then the explosion! First, the moral muscle grown flabby, then the helpless weakness before temptation. First, the gray hairs here and there sprinkled upon him and he knows it not; finally the spiritual senility and swift oblivion. This is the course of unconscious deterioration.

IMMORTALITY OF FRIENDSHIP.

By Henry F. Cope.

"That where I am ye may be also" —John 14:3.

Friends go on before, but friendships abide. The grave cuts no chasm; through love and through the dark door of death runs warm and holds firm the cable of affection.

No voice may come to us; no eyes look into ours; years may dim the memory of features, but still within us is this cherished treasure of their love and firm as eternity the faith that they love us still.

We plant the flowers on the mounds in the churchyard not because we ever think they are lying there, but because our love for them must find some expression; welling up within it must work itself out at hands and finger tips. Blinded by tears, watering those flowers, we weep not with sorrow that they are gone, but with surfeit of emotion, more the pain of joy than of bitterness, that we can thus in such a little way express our love to them.

Here is a form of friendship altogether unaffected by the passing of the years or by the tides of fortune. It has laid hold on that which is eternal. Its bonds bind not flesh nor clay, but spirit to spirit and heart to heart. Friendship defies the fading leaf, the withering cheek, the devouring worm; its possessions are in personality, its treasures are beyond moth and rust and intruder.

This would be a dark world for the living, but for our love for the dead. It comes to pass that some of us have the best part of ourselves over there and all of us are made more tender by thoughts of unseen eyes that look down on us, measuring us with hearts free from the bias and lusts of the world we yet are in.

We need not worry whether we will know them again, those friends whose faces lightened ours in days gone by, for though they be changed to an seraph's beauty, we shall see not their faces, but their affection. He lives yet in the dust who worries as to physical preservation and identification. This we all know, who hold deep within us the friendships of those who are living in larger life, that love can never die, that affection enlarges despite the decays of time and grave, and that something of the self which is the basis of friendship is immortal.

This sense of the persistence of friendship is more than a state of feeling; it is the first flower of immortality; it is the eternal and divine in us answering to eternal and divine in lives that have been loosed from our limitations. It has nothing to do with alleged communications from the other world. It is the deep, abiding and strengthening sense that the web of love cannot be cut by the keen edge of death, that friendships abide through all, that love is immortal and loving the measure of our immortality.

No wonder the immortal hope burns low when unfed by this secret supply; no wonder men doubt the future, when their hearts find no vital contact with its life, when they must depend on what the head may reason from analyses and probabilities.

I am not worried as to life beyond, because I know there is love beyond. The only going out from life I need to fear would be going out into a world where love was not. Precise plans of eternal redemption lie beyond my reasoning, but on the fact of infinite friendship I rest and know that the eternal affection will find me and teach me the larger life of the world where love shall have its liberty and shall be the law of all.

I know not where I shall meet those friends, where father and mother and child will wait, but a love light, that burns clear within, will lead me to them and I shall know them by that light. Love will come into its own; friendship into its fullness. The barriers will have been broken down. We shall know even as we are known, for we shall love even as he loves.

So what can I do better in these days than cherish this hope, magnify this life of loving, make more friends that I may have greater fullness of living there, and if the great hope of that life be this free fullness of friendship, bring into this drear world as much of that life as I may by being good friend to as many as I may?

SHORT METER SERMONS.

No man ever overshoots his own moral aim.

All worthy education is training of the will.

The dogmatic are always strong on barking.

Counting your blessings discounts your burdens.

Character is what we make of life's conditions.

It takes more than good living to make the good life.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't kill hope if you would avoid moral suicide.

Don't expect to find rest by retreating from duty.

Don't fail to sow happiness if you would reap heaven.

Don't make the mistake of blaming fate for the fruitage of your fears.

Don't expect to reap reward until you have earned it.

Don't consider it less your duty to cultivate joyousness than to seek holiness.

Don't pray with iniquity in your heart if you want the Lord to hear you.

Don't expect to safely reach the shore if you insist on being your own pilot.

Don't cultivate the habit of serving superstition if you would avoid enslaving your soul.

Don't fail to see the difference between the works of friendship and working your friends.

Don't make the mistake of basing your honesty wholly on policy for the tempter can always show you better premiums.

Smiles of The Day

According to Contract.

House Owner—You failed to pay your rent last month. What are you going to do about it?

Tenant—Oh, I suppose I'll do as you said when I rented it.

House Owner—What did I say?

Tenant—You said I must pay in advance or not at all.

He Meant Business.

Gladys—Tom made me feel foolish when he proposed last night.

Evelyn—Got down on his knees and all that, I suppose?

Gladys—No, indeed. He went about it in such a businesslike way that at first I didn't know whether he wanted me to be his wife or his confidential clerk.

A Hard Wur-ruld.

Denny—What are yes t'inkin' about now, me mon?

Paddy—Faith, luk ut the automobiles. Some kin go motorin', whoile we hove to be satisfied wid morthar-in'.

Wonderful.

"More than five thousand elephants a year go to make our piano keys," remarked the student boarder who had been reading the scientific notes in a patent medicine almanac.

"For the land's sake!" exclaimed the landlady. "Ain't it wonderful what some animals can be trained to do?"

Somewhat Different.

"Most men get their walking papers when they are discharged," remarked the letter carrier, "but it was different with me."

"In what way?" asked his friend.

"I got mine when I was appointed," answered the man of letters.

It Had a Pull.

The nerves of the victim in the chair were working overtime.

"Excuse me, sir," said the alleged tonsorial artist, "but you'd better keep still. Aren't you afraid I'll cut you?"

"N-not with that r-razor," gasped the nervous victim.

Matter of Duty.

Shopper—What makes these goods so expensive?

Clerk—The duty, ma'am.

Shopper—Oh, then they are imported?

Clerk—No, they are domestic goods. But the proprietor thinks it his duty to increase his bank balance.

Pertinent Inquiry.

"At last," said the poet who had ceased to commingle with the struggling push, "I am now in a position where I can rest on my laurels."

"Do you think," queried the privileged friend, "that you will be comfortable standing on your head?"

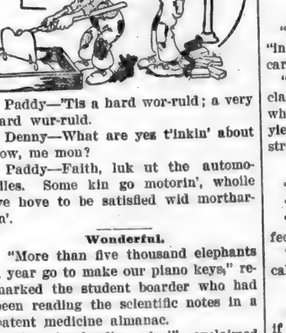
Different Now.

Enpeck—You don't act like you did before we were married.

Mrs. Enpeck—Why don't I?

Enpeck—I don't know why you don't—but you don't. Whein I first proposed you said "Yes." Now every time I propose anything you say "No."

Couldn't Resist.



He—But why do you accept me now when you have always rejected me?

She—George, you never looked so handsome before.

A Definition.

A little girl who had listened to a discussion of nature fakers in literature, when asked to define the human and animal families replied:

"A brute is an imperfect beast; man is a perfect beast."—Judge's Library.

Outside the Pale.

Bob—Introduce me to the old guy.

The Hostess—Why, you must know him. He's the president of your college.

"No, I don't. He isn't interested in athletics."—Life.

She Accepted.

Mayme—Pshaw! You are joking?

Ethyl—No, I'm not. Every time a young man proposed soda or ice cream I accepted.

Juvenile Philosophy.

"Young man," said a father to his precocious son and heir, aged 7, "here's where I pay you that whipping I owe you."

"That ain't fair, dad," protested the youngster. You never pay anybody else that you owe, and I don't see why you should make a preferred creditor of me."

As Amended.

"Experience," remarked the thoughtful thinker, "is worth all we pay for it."

"It would be," rejoined the contrary person, "if we didn't go and run up the same sort of bill again."

Faithful for Years.

Gyer—There goes a man who certainly loves his country.

Myer—Why do you think so?

Gyer—He has held a government job for thirty years.

The Real Thing.

Little Willie—Say, pa, what is persistency?

Pa—It is the trait a woman displays when she attempts to remove a wrinkle, my son.

It All Depends.

"This simple life must be pleasant," said the city boarder.

"It is," replied the old farmer, "when you are not compelled to live it."

Fortunate Moment.

"Alas!" confessed the penitent man, "in a moment of weakness I stole a carload of brass fittings."

"In a moment of weakness?" exclaimed the judge. "Goodness, man! what would you have taken if you had yielded in a moment when you felt strong?"—Boston Globe.

Often Hastens Matters.

"Married, eh?"

"Yep."

"I thought it was purely platonic affection."

"It was; but another fellow began to call."—Exchange.

Cheer Up.

Mr. Jawback—The doctor said that if I kept on working so hard I'd break down in five years.

Mrs. Jawback—That won't make any difference, dear. We'll be able to afford it by that time.—Cleveland Leader.

Cut Rates.

Young Doctor—You don't mean to tell me that old Sawbones charged you $25 for amputating your big toe?

The Victim—That's what he did.

Young Doctor—Next time you send for me. I'll cut off both legs for $10.

Information Wanted.

The Lady—What are you waiting for?

Weary—Dere don't seem to be no directions how to use dis ting on it.

A Sort of Warpath.

"A joker said the other day that Lover's Lane in his town had been changed to Affinity avenue."

"Yes, such cases have been frequent of late."

"But how is a fellow to know when he gets on Affinity avenue?"

"Oh, that's easy. Every wife you see there carries a club."—Birmingham Age Herald.

Strange.

"So you lost $100, eh?"

"Yes."

"Why don't you consult a clairvoyant?"

"I did; I offered her $10 of the $100 if she'd tell me where to find it."

"That was good business."

"Yes, but she said she'd rather do it for half a dollar cash."—Houston Post.

A Real One.

Mr. Oldwed—Had a house-warming in your new house yet?

Mr. Newed—Yes; my wife fired the cook yesterday.

Those "Stepping Stones."

Poorman—I understand you are a millionaire. Would you mind telling me about your stepping stones to success?

Richley—I inherited them.

Poorman—Beg pardon?

Richley—I inherited my wise old father's "rocks," see?

Why.

One of the Fiends—Pardon me, sire, but why do they call you Satan?

His Diabolical Majesty—Oh, that's just an Old Nick name.—Cleveland Leader.

Selfish Boy.

Mother (reading telegram—Henry telegraphs that the football match is over, and he came out of it with three broken ribs.

Father (eagerly)—And who won?

Mother—He doesn't say.

Father (impatiently)—Confound it all! That boy never thinks of anybody but himself. Now I must wait until I get the morning paper.—Tit-Bits.

A Receptacle.

"My hair is falling out," admitted the timid man in the chemist's. "Can you recommend something to keep it in?"

"Certainly," replied the obliging assistant. "Here is a nice cardboard box."—Tit-Bits.

The highest public house in England is said to be the Tan Hill, in Yorkshire (1,747 feet). The second highest is the Cat and Fiddle, in Cheshire (1,690 feet), and there is also the Traveler's Rest, in Westmoreland (1,476 feet). The Tan Hill house is very lonely. One winter no stranger crossed the threshold for eleven weeks.

A congress of Mohammedan women will be held at Cairo this winter to discuss methods for improving the condition of Egyptian women. It is expected that Turkey will send a delegation. The Turkish women are reported to be taking an active part in the politics of their own country and express themselves as willing to lend a hand to help their Egyptian sisters.

The oddest named country home is in Jackson County, according to a Columbian friend who is a friend of the owner. The name as it appears at the front gate is "Hadherway," and never fails to attract attention from passers-by. For years the wife wanted to leave Kansas City and go to a farm. When the family finally moved they named the home "Hadherway."—Columbia (Mo.) Herald.

"Yonder comes another pair of 'em," said the hotel clerk, nodding toward two drummers entering the lobby. "It's getting to be a great act among traveling men of late to move over the country in pairs. Those two fellows there always come together. They're in entirely different lines of business, too. They claim they can save money by traveling together not only on their hotel bills but in other ways, and that the scheme has divers and sundry other advantages."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The thick forest along the banks of the Semliki, in eastern Africa, is densely inhabited by pygmies. They are cannibals, and when pressed for food exchange their children for those of other families. They refuse to eat members of their own families. At the southern end of the frontier of the Congo Independent State there are people who owe allegiance to no chiefs, each family owning its own village and recognizing no head. The whole community, however, is dominated by a clan of witch women, who are extremely hostile to Europeans.

Everybody is interested in the remarkable showing of the life insurance business as reported by Superintendent Kelsey of New York. The falling off has been enormous between the years 1906 and Dec. 30, 1907. The point of Mr. Kelsey's report is the great decrease in the amount of insurance last year, $241,496,308. Of the 370,000 policies which terminated only 53,167 were by death and 14,247 by maturity, while 99,554, amounting to $211,008,495, were surrendered, and 210,565, amounting to $307,639,953, lapsed. Five times as many policies were dropped as were paid in full and the diminution in insurance through lack of confidence or through inability to meet premiums was more than three times the amounts paid.

There has just been erected on the Bass Rock, the precipitous island of the Firth of Forth, off the Haddingtonshire coast, a new foghorn which has cost $200,000. It will be interesting to note the effect of the hooter on the nerves of the sea birds, of which thousands of one kind and another are to be found on this desolate spot. At dusk the captains of the passenger steamers in passing generally sound their whistle or siren for the amusement of the passengers, and it is a sight not easily forgotten to watch myriads of sleepy birds fly a short distance and then return, after uttering their protest after the manner of the owl in Gray's "Elegy." The new foghorn will give three blasts every two minutes.

A successful blind masseuse was employed at a well-known hydropathic establishment in Matlock, England, a few years ago. Recently there was a blind teacher at the Hampstead General Hospital for all massage cases. This blind teacher, then a resident of Hampstead, obtained his training through the interest of a woman guardian, and his first cases were at the Hampstead Hospital. The blind man, walking alone into the hospital and up to the wards with unerring directness, grew to be a familiar figure, and his gentle, kindly personality made him a favorite with nurses and patients alike. An English doctor says that as massage depends for its success almost entirely upon manipulation and the sense of touch, it can be strongly recommended as an employment for the blind.

One Fish Didn't Grow.

A number of men were telling of remarkable catches off Atlantic City, and one of them said that one day he caught a very small cod, and, not caring to take home such a little fellow, he took a piece of copper wire, ran it through the tail of the fish, and on one end of the wire he attached a copper tag with his name scratched upon it. "The next year when I was off there," continued the man, "I got a heavy pull on the line, and after five minutes' fighting landed a twelve pound cod, and there on its tail was my tag."

"That reminds me of a similar experience off there," said another man. "I caught one of those small cod, and I wanted to hang some sort of identification on it, but I couldn't find anything in the copper tag line from one end of the boat to the other. I did find, however, a little tin whistle in one of my pockets, and, running a wire through the tail of the fish, I hung on the whistle and threw the cod back into the water.

"The following year I got a most peculiar bite on my hook, and after pulling in the line I got the surprise of my life. There was the same little cod. He hadn't grown an inch, but hanging on his tail was a long fog horn."—Philadelphia Press.

Whiskey for Lame Back.

The increased use of whiskey for lame back rheumatism is causing considerable discussion among the medical fraternity. It is an almost infallible cure when mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly. The following formula is effective: "To one half pint of good whiskey add one ounce of Toris Compound and one ounce Syrup Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and before retiring."

Toris compound is a product of the laboratories of the Globe Pharmaceutical Co., Chicago, but it as well as the other ingredients can be had from any good druggist.

Could Not Afford It.

Improvident Citizen—Would you like to subscribe a dollar or two to help out a poor old washerwoman in bed with rheumatism and the house full of hungry children?

Provident Citizen—Sorry, old man, but I can't afford it. Will you come along with me to some lively show at the theater where we can forget these sordid miseries, and a nice little supper after?—New York Press.

A Fly Stops a Train.

In north Wales there is a section of single line worked on the electric train staff system. When the signalman tried recently to draw a staff from the instrument in order to dispatch a train he was unable to do so. The failure of the instrument lasted for nearly five hours. Investigation revealed that a small fly had crept into the instrument and apparently died while in the act of examining the delicate mechanism of one of the contacts, leaving its tiny body as an insuperable barrier to the passage of the electric current.—Great Western Railway Magazine.

Absurd Beliefs About Hedgehogs.

In olden days the hedgehog was accredited with the possession of many wonderful powers. Pliny and after him Aelian and others have related how it would climb apple and fig trees, shake down the fruit and afterward fall upon and impale the fruit on its spines and carry them off upon its back. The belief that it was in the habit of milking cows during the night is likewise a very old one.

Dyspepsia Is Often Caused By Catarrh of the Stomach—Peruna Relieves Catarrh of the Stomach and Is Therefore a Remedy for Dyspepsia.

Hon. M. C. Butler, U. S. Senator from South Carolina for two terms, in a letter from Washington, D. C., writes to the Peruna Medicine Co., as follows:

"I can recommend Peruna for dyspepsia and stomach trouble. I have been using your medicine for a short period and I feel very much relieved. It is indeed a wonderful medicine, besides a good tonic."

CATARRH of the stomach is the correct name for most cases of dyspepsia. Only an internal catarrh remedy, such as Peruna, is available.

Voted Twice.

Sir Gavan Duffy, formerly Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Victoria, was once returned to his seat by a single vote majority. On visiting his constituents subsequently, he was received with special warmth by an Irish fellow countryman.

"And so," said Sir Gavan Duffy to his friend, "you were one of my supporters?"

"No, sir," was the reply. "I was two of them."

CURE

BUYING THINGS

"The question is, can we get along without it?" said the married man.

"I feel quite sure you can get along without it," said his wife, with some asperity. "It's exactly what I've been wanting ever since I've been housekeeping and the cost doesn't amount to anything, and——".

"It amounts to something, my dear," said the married man. "I don't suppose they're giving them away. It may cost, what you consider a small amount or it may not, but it certainly costs something."

"I mean 'nothing to speak of,'" said his wife. "We ought to be able to afford it. I don't see why there should be any question about it. If it was something that you wanted it would be different."

"My dear," said the married man in an exasperating tone of patience, "I think you do me an injustice. There are very many things I should like to have which I hardly feel justified in buying."

"Of course, I'm the one who is extravagant. You never buy anything that you don't actually need, do you?"

"I have done so," said the married man. "I might say that I did not, but——"

"But you know that I know better."

"I might say that I did not and I might easily defend myself from any such accusation. I bought a new hat the other day when I might have continued to wear my straw hat two or three weeks longer. I could urge that my straw hat was rather badly soiled and that since it got rained on it warped unbecomingly."

"Oh, I wasn't talking about straw hats."

"No," said the married man. "I was talking about them, for the reason that my conscience has troubled me ever since I bought the fedora and paid $2 for it."

"I suppose that edition de luxe of Ancient Empires' was a necessity," said his wife, tartly. "We couldn't have got along without that. If it had cost $100 instead of only $50, you would have been quite justified in giving the agent the order, wouldn't you?"

"Things that tend to elevate and instruct the mind and cultivate the understanding are not to be classed with extravagances, I think," said the married man.

"You've had the set nearly six months and you haven't looked at it since the day it came. You wouldn't read it if you lived to be a thousand years old, and you know it. You bought it because you hadn't the moral courage to send that glib-tongued agent about his business. What about that silver-mounted meerschaum pipe you bought a few weeks ago? Don't you think we might have managed to get along without that? And was it strictly necessary to order a new rosewood desk for your office? I thought the old one looked very well and answered every purpose. I should think it was bordering on extravagance to take three of your friends to an expensive restaurant to dine. Of course they were old college chums and you wanted to give them the impression that you were prosperous, but I think if they wouldn't—or couldn't—accept your invitation to line here you might have managed to entertain them for something less than $6 a head. You said it cost you nearly that, you know. I didn't call you extravagant at the time, but when you accuse me of being extravagant because I want something useful, something that every woman has, something that——"

"Oh, get it if you want it," said the married man.

"Thank you, I've already got it," said his wife. "I ordered it to be sent out yesterday."—Chicago Daily News.

USE OF HERBS DECLINING.

Good Old Remedies Our Grandfathers Used Have Passed Away.

In the village of Greenwich, England, in a quaint old street where the buildings are so thick that they tangle themselves together in a knot, there is a queer little shop with a sign over the door that reads, "An Herb for Every Pain."

On the shelves of this shop are to be found hundreds of different kinds of herbs for the cure of all bodily ailments. There can be found all the old-time herbs that our grandmothers used to have hanging around the walls of the kitchen and stored away in the attic, ready to be made into teas and drugs in case of sickness.

People who still have old-fashioned ideas about health and sickness go there for bugleweed, sumach, wintergreen, sassafras, camomile, horehound, yellow dock, catnip, cherry bark, mullein, extract of oats, lobelia and so on. All these herbs have the reputation of being good for some one or more ailments. Catnip for nervousness, sassafras for the blood, horehound and boneset for colds, sumach for sore throat, wintergreen for rheumatism, lobelia as an emetic in case of poisoning, mullein for consumption, etc.

Nearly all of these herbs are made into teas. Sassafras tea, boneset tea and catnip tea are brewed and served either cold or hot. Among the many hundreds of herbs that are sold in this little shop are some that are deadly poisons, and they are labeled and sold under the same restrictions as other poisons.

The good old remedies that our grandfathers hunted and dug in the woods, those that our grandmothers planted and tended in the garden have given way to harmful remedies, to drugs that leave the patient in a worse condition than when he began their use. We believe it has been a mistake to give up the old remedies.—Medical Talk.

OUR HAWAIIAN COLONY.

Policy of American Government Advantageous to the Islands.

Hawaii is one portion of America's territorial possessions that has required little tinkering since it came into our hands. Our problems in the islands have been industrial rather than political, says the Washington Post. Their social problems they have shown a large capability to adjust themselves. Our principal worry with them has been over matters of production and labor.

For this reason Secretary Garfield's official trip to the islands was probably productive of a great deal of good which does not appear. The Hawaiians were not at all in sympathy with our policy of excluding foreign laborers from American territory. Since 1856 they have depended on the production of sugar almost exclusively as the source of their wealth. Native labor, that of the pure-blood Kanakas, was unreliable and inefficient. White labor was scarce and costly. The sugar planters consequently got coolies from China to make their crops. With annexation came the exclusion of the Chinese, which, until then, had been the mainstay of the islands. At that time Japanese were seen on the sugar plantations only in small numbers. The Hawaiians turned their attention to inducing laborers to come out from the countries of Southern Europe to the sugar fields. The contract labor laws of the United States shortly quashed that. The close of the Russo-Japanese war left thousands of young Japanese foot lose. Discharged from the army, with home ties broken, and a spirit of adventure aroused by the Manchurian campaigns, thousands of them swarmed to the islands, and now the disfavor of the home government has once again operated to shut off the supply of coolies for the sugar plantations.

Secretary Garfield finds, however, that the Hawaiians have begun to see the far-sighted policy of America and approve it. They are holding out more inducements to European immigrants with their families. The land holding class, which has long been jealous of its position and privileges, and clung to its land desperately, is beginning to loosen its grip. It is encouraging smaller plantations and more diversified cultivation.

Perhaps this last is the most important sign in the development of Hawaii. It is a wonderful sugar country. It will do as well with rice. It is capable of raising excellent coffee; also cacao, indigo, cotton and fruits. The fullest prosperity of the islands is assured when the cultivation of these varied products is given into the hands of the small farmers.

The Salad, Not the Hostess.

The wife of Thomas Hood, the English author, is described by one of their friends as a most amiable woman, of excellent manners, and full of humor and goodness. Walter Jerrold, in his biography of Hood, quotes from a letter a description of an evening party at Mrs. Hood's:

True to his humorous nature, Mr. Hood loved to tease his wife with jokes and whimsical accusations, which were responded to only by "Hood, Hood, how can you run on so?"

"Perhaps you don't know," said he, "that Jane's besetting weakness is a desire to appear in print and be thought a Blue."

Mrs. Hood answered, laughingly, "Hood does not know one kind of material from another. He thinks this dress is blue print." On looking at it, I saw it was a very pretty blue silk.

The evening was concluded by a supper, one of those elegant social repasts which Flemish artists delight to paint, so fresh the fruit, so tempting the viands, and all so exquisitely arranged. Mrs. Hood has frequently smiled when I complimented her on setting out "picture suppers." This was truly one.

Charles Lamb oddly walked round the table, looking closely at any dish that struck his fancy before he would decide where to sit, telling Mrs. Hood that he should by that means know how to select some dish that was difficult to carve, and take the trouble off her hands. Accordingly, having jested in this manner, he placed himself, with great deliberation, before a lobster salad, observing that was the thing.

Mr. Hood, with inexpressible gravity, but his mouth twitching with smiles, sang his own comic song of "If you go to France be sure you learn the Lingo," his pensive manner and feeble voice making it doubly ludicrous.

Mr. Lamb, on being pressed to sing, excused himself in his own peculiar manner, but offered to pronounce a Latin eulogium instead. This was accepted, and he accordingly stammered forth a long stream of Latin words, among which, as the name of Mrs. Hood frequently occurred, we ladies thought it in praise of her. On inquiring of a gentleman who sat next me whether Mr. Lamb was praising Mrs. Hood, he informed me that was by no means the case, the eulogium being on the lobster salad.

We never yet knew a cook who had any sense of proportion of sweet to sour in cooking the cranberry, and the result is always such that you are welcome to ours.

Every man thinks that the other fellow's business is all profit.

TORTURED SIX MONTHS

By Terrible Itching Eczema—Baby's Suffering Was Terrible—Soon Entirely Cured by Cuticura.

"Eczema appeared on my son's face. We went to a doctor, who treated him for three months. Then he was so bad that his face and head were nothing but one sore and his ears looked as if they were going to fall off, so we tried another doctor for four months, the baby never getting any better. His hand and legs had big sores on them and the poor little fellow suffered so terribly that he could not sleep. After he had suffered six months we tried a set of the Cuticura Remedies and the first treatment let him sleep and rest well; in one week the sores were gone and in two months he had a clear face. Now he is two years and has never had eczema again. Mrs. Louis Beck, R. F. D. 3, San Antonio, Tex., April 15, 1907."

Innocence.

"Why," he asked, "do girls like so much to display diamond rings on their engagement fingers?"

"Well," she replied as she carelessly twirled the jewel on her third finger, "you know there is nothing like a shining example to stimulate one when he has a purpose in mind."

When she had time to speak again she cried:

"Oh, Fred, I hope you don't think I was trying to throw out a hint. I never suspected that you cared about me at all!"—Judge's Library.

Honor for Jefferson.

"Waal, yes," said Mrs. Bragley of Jefferson City, "I reckon that feller that writ out the Declaration of Independence deserved the honor."

"You mean the honor of being assigned to write it?"

"Not at all. I mean the honor o' bein' named fur our town. They called him Jefferson, you know."—Philadelphia Press.

EARTHQUAKES IN AFRICA.

That Country Has Long Been Immune from Such Visitations.

The fact that two earthquakes have been reported in central Africa is worth mentioning because, for all the white race has known, Africa has long been immune from earthquakes, excepting along its northwestern and north-central borders, which have sometimes shared the disturbances that have afflicted the Spanish peninsula, says the New York Sun. But since Mungo Park ushered in the modern era of African exploration nobody had ever heard of earth movements in the tropical central part of the continent.

Two earthquakes, however, have occurred this year in the eastern part of the Kongo state, under the equator, affecting wide areas but doing little damage, for in regions whose peoples live in grass huts there is little damage to be done unless life is lost.

On April 2 a region some hundreds of square miles in extent on both sides of the upper Kongo and from 1,200 to 1,400 miles from its mouth was rather severely shaken for from three to fifteen minutes about 7 o'clock in the morning. The region included the lower parts of the Lomami and Bazoko river basins, tributary to the Kongo and on its southern and northern shores. The vertical movement of the houses and trees was plainly visible and the natives were badly frightened for such events were unknown to them even in their traditions.

On June 7 a much larger region embracing nearly the whole administrative district of the Welle, in the extreme northeastern part of the Kongo State had a sharp earth movement lasting only about twenty seconds. The white officials say that the surface rolled in little waves from the northeast to southwest; that furniture in widely separated stations was thrown about and that many thousands of negro huts performed a sort of dance that was awesome to see. Not a single life was lost in these occurrences, which, however, have deprived tropical Africa of its reputation for immunity from seismic catastrophes.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

Indigestion and the attendant discomforts of mind and body are certain to follow continued use of improper food.

Those who are still young and robust are likely to overlook the fact that, as dropping water will wear a stone away at last, so will the use of heavy, greasy, rich food, finally cause loss of appetite and indigestion.

Fortunately many are thoughtful enough to study themselves and note the principle of Cause and Effect in their daily food. A N. Y. young woman writes her experience thus:

"Some time ago I had a lot of trouble from indigestion, caused by too rich food. I got so I was unable to digest scarcely anything, and medicines seemed useless.

"A friend advised me to try Grape-Nuts food, praising it highly, and as a last resort, I tried it. I am thankful to say that Grape-Nuts not only relieved me of my trouble, but built me up and strengthened my digestive organs so that I can now eat anything I desire. But I stick to Grape-Nuts."

Iceberg Gardens.

"We passed many icebergs coming home from Europe," said a Philadelphian, "and on one of them a garden bloomed."

"It was a beautiful sight. The great berg shone like an enormous emerald in the sun, and in one level recess, fenced in by pale green peaks, a yellow garden gleamed.

"The captain said that iceberg gardens are not uncommon. Moss, it seems, is brought on to the bergs by animals' feet. The moss grows, it decays, it forms a soil for the pollen of buttercups and dandelions that are blown through the air during the brief arctic summer.

"Soon the incredible spectacle presents itself of a great cold berg adrift in the salt sea with yellow flowers springing from the hard, cold ice."

PROVED BY TIME.

No Fear of Any Further Trouble.

David Price, Corydon, Ia., says: "I was in the last stage of kidney trouble—lame, weak, run down to a mere skeleton. My back was so bad I could hardly walk and the kidney secretions much disordered. A week after I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I could walk without a cane, and as I continued my health gradually returned. I was so grateful I made a public statement of my case, and now seven years have passed, I am still perfectly well."

Ocean Cables.

The diameter of the Atlantic cable varies according to the depth of the water, the character of the bottom on which it lies, and the probabilities of interference from anchors. It is smallest in midocean depths. There is little or no movement at the bottom, and it is important that the cable should not have great weight. A heavy cable in deep water would be difficult to bring up for repairs if repairs were needed. In the shallow water a heavier type of cable is used. These types are known as "shore end," "intermediate," and "deep sea." The diameters of the commercial cables are: Shore end, 2⅞ inches; intermediate, 1⅝ inches; deep sea, 1 inch.

A Darkening Race.

Where are the fair-haired people we used to admire? Look where we will, brown hair or dark hair predominates. There are some who tell us that the time is coming when the genuine golden-haired beauty will be as rare as the "copper" butterfly, and that to have a head like a wheat sheaf will be to proclaim aloud that the coiffeur's artful aid has been invoked.—London Lady.

Preserved Currants.

I asked the waiter at a hotel in Paris to find out how the currants which were served with soft cream cheese and bread for dessert were cooked. Miss Jennie Steward left Friday for Marion Normal College where she will attend the oratorical commencement, the guest of a former school friend who graduates. She will remain a couple of weeks to visit friends.

IMPORTANT

To the Spencerville People.

The editor of THE NEWS made a visit to Spencerville last week and enjoyed the hospitality of its dusiness men. They took a kindly interest in the proposed improvement the News is making, and so generous were they with advertising and good wishes that the publishers have decided to print one page each week in the interests of the Spencerville people. This new departure ought to be of interest not only to Spencerville readers and business men but to all readers of the St. Joe News everywhere. We feel assured that our Spencerville friends will support this new venture. We want you to feel that we have an interest in your welfare, and regard you as our own home people. The St. Joe News is your home paper and as such it ought to do more for you and at the same time receive the hearty support of every loyal citizen in Spencerville and locality. It is not our purpose to neglect St. Joe in any way to render you the service you deserve. Every department of the paper will be improved in order to better serve the needs of both towns. And so we extend a hearty greeting to the people of Spencerville and solicit your kindly interest and support in this our move in your behalf.

Brighten Up

"Brighten Up" time is here—the time to clean up about the house, renovate, and make the old things look neat and clean again. We can help you in the work with our line of

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS PAINTS AND VARNISHES.

It is really surprising what a little paint or varnish will do toward brightening up dingy surroundings. Take The S-W. Family Paint, for instance. This is a linseed oil paint specially prepared for home decorating and painting. With it any one can renew the appearance of a hundred little things that now look worn and old. It dries with a good gloss and will stand scrubbing with soap and water. Comes in 26 attractive shades.

The S-W. Floorlac is another splendid household brightener. It is a stain and varnish combined and can be used on old or new woods equally well. Imitates the natural woods and gives a most pleasing effect.

These offer a few hints for you. Come in and have a "Brighten Up" talk with us and learn more about how we can help you in your Fall cleaning. Our line has a paint or varnish for every purpose.

10 YEARS AHEAD OF ALL OTHER CREAM SEPARATORS.

In skimming efficiency, simplicity, durability and convenience, the new 1908 Improved DELAVAL CREAM SEPARATORS are fully ten years ahead of any other machine on the market to-day. Thirty years of experience, protecting patents, and the many valuable improvements devised and perfected by the DE LAVAL engineers in all parts of the world during the past three years, are responsible for this fact. Every feature of the DE LAVAL has been improved, from the supply can to the base. The new centre-balanced bowl with its separate spindle is alone a triumph in separator construction and must be seen to be fully appreciated. Then, there is the new one-piece "anti-splash" sanitary supply can, adjustable shelves for skim-milk and cream receptacles, new frame designs, and many other but less important improvements,—all combining to make the DE LAVAL an absolutely ideal separator for farm and dairy use. There is the proper size machine for every size dairy from the smallest to the largest and no cow owner can afford to be without one of these improved machines. It will cost you nothing to see and examine the new DE LAVAL, and right at your own home too, if you will but say the word. Call on us or let us know somehow that you are in need of a separator and it will be possible for you to have a free demonstration of the improved De LAVAL at your own home. It will pay you to do so and your only regret will be that you did not investigate sooner.

Special Announcement.

We wish to inform our many readers that beginning with our first issue of January 1909, THE NEWS will be published on Thursday instead of Wednesday. This change is made so as to get the Spencerville correspondents on the Spencerville page as it is the desire of our patrons at that place. This will be better for us as it is almost impossible for us to get out on Wednesday morning in time for the morning mails. Please bear this in mind. It will be necessary for advertisers to have their ads in as early as possible each week.

Yours truly,
Fred B. Leighty, Pub.

Special Notice.

If you are in debt to me call and settle by cash or bankable note not later than January 20th.

Sunday morning at the Christian Sunday School, the superintendent Clarence Woodcox and chorister Ida Williams were treated to a pleasant surprise. The former being presented a beautiful gold watch fob and the latter an Oxford teachers bible. The presentation was made by Dr. Sheffer.

Rev. McCain and family were royally entertained at Christmas dinner, at the home of Adam Shilling and wife. P. A. Shurtz and family were also present. The day was one long to be remembered. The sumptuous dinner was past discription. The afternoon was spent in listening to music by the guests and Master Howard the accomplished son of Mr. and Mrs. Shilling. Life was made bright for all present, by the most pleasant gathering.

Culture Club

One of the most pleasant social events of the season, occurred at the beautiful and spacious home of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Krabill, corner of Washington and Main Sts., on Wednesday evening, Dec., 23rd. 1908, it being the Christmas meeting of the Culture Club. The committee on arrangements was Mrs. Krabill, hostess, and Mrs. W. C. DeLong. The following musical and literary program was carried out. Piano duett, "Melody of Love" Mrs. F. B. Leighty and Flossie Copp. Reading appropriate to the season, by Mrs. Maggie Thomas. Piano solo, "Song at Twilight" Ethel Leighty. Recitation, "Eve before Christmas" Agnes Krabill, which was highly appreciated. Mrs. Blanch Leighty then rendered one of her pleasing solos entitled, "Star of the East", which was pretty and appropriate. After this came a very interesting Xmas Story by Miss Edna Provines, in which she brought out the fact that money does not make happiness. Lora Leighty then rendered a beautiful piano solo entitled "A Whirlwind." Flossie Copp sang "Love Me and the World is Mine", which was pleasing to all. Then came a talk by Mrs. Kate A. Leighty on "Early Christians" or "A visit to Rome." She having been in Rome some thirteen years ago, where she visited the Catacombs, Ceasar's Palace and other various places of interest, was well able to give an interesting and beneficial talk on this subject. She portrayed the pictures of "the loaves and fishes", "The Wise Men", etc. as they were cut in marble by the christians of ninteen hundred years ago, with the appropriate inscriptions accompanying them. Then came another pianoduett by Mrs. Fred Leighty and Flossie Copp entitled "The Tannhauser March". The committee then conducted an age contest, having written ten questions on large stars of white and gold, each one to be answered by a word ending in "age". Ten minutes was given the contestants to think and write. Miss F. Copp having the most correct answers was awarded the prize. It being a very pretty Christmas booklet in blue and gold. The president, Mrs. Mahlon Baker, then conducted the business part of the programme. Roll call was responded to by twenty-one members with Christmas quotations. Next was the Exchange. Small white and gold stars were distributed, having numbers on them to correspond with the number on the gifts to be exchanged. Then the question arose, "Where are the gifts?" But wassoon answered when the committee invited the members up stairs, where they found awaiting their arrival, a Christmas tree. It was made of white, trimmed with tinsel and bitter sweet berries, and lighted with twenty-four wax tapers of various colors. After the distribution of presents, the ladies were handed tickets admitting them to the fortune booth, free of charge. There "Madam Togo" the gipsy queen, told them the past, present and future very satisfactorily. From this, much fun was derived. Next on programme was the distribution of pretty cards, cut in fours, which the ladies were to match for supper, after doing so, they formed in line, double file, and while Miss Agnes Krabill played "Corporal Guard March" they wended their way down stairs, where they found several luncheon tables scattered about the rooms. They were seated four at a table, and were finally ready for the most interesting (also distressing) part of the programme. The tables were dressed in white. The paper napkins were white, with purple flowers and tints of gold.

The appetising course was, first course, grape juice and nabisco; second course, buttered sandwich, red beet salad, pressed chicken, pickles and coffee: third course, brick ice cream and snow cake; fourth course, bon bons and salted nuts, served in tiny boxes made of purple crepe paper and tied with gold ribbon representing the club colors.

At a late hour the ladies departed to their homes carrying with them a white rose, a tiny box of purple and gold, and a white and gold star, as souvenirs of an evening long to be remembered and one of perfect enjoyment. The committee certainly should have words of commendation bestowed upon them for their royal entertainment. Much interest is being manifested in the Culture Club, although it is only a few months old, but being made up of refined ladies, young and elderly, also of musical and literary ability. A club member.

Local Briefs

Frank Leighty went to Garrett, last Thursday, to work in the Millikin Meat Market as cutter for the next two weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Ham Frysinger and daughter Bessie, of Auburn Junction, spent Christmas with the former's sister, Mrs. Belle Ridgway and family.

The Christmas tree and program at the Concord church was a success in every way. The tree was covered with useful and costly presents, the program was excellently prepared and rendered to the complete satisfaction of the large crowd present. All the scholars of the Sunday School were remembered by their teachers, and the teachers by their scholars. Supt. Jackson was given a fine book and the pastor and family were remembered with a buggy load of good things for the inner man.

J. D. Leighty and wife spent Christmas with relatives at Detroit and then left for the south. They go first to Vicksburg to be present at the unveiling of the monuments, December 29, erected in memory of Indiana soldiers on this famous battlefield where many lives are blotted out. Mr. Leighty was wounded at this battle. He believes that he can go to the spot where he was shot. The fields will probably be changed, the roads and forests may be different but the hills and dales will be the same and it is by those that he believes he can locate it. After the dedication of the monuments they will go to Sacksonville, Florida, then, perhaps to some other point in Florida where the winter will be spent.—Dispatch.

Given a Surprise

Mr. and Mrs. Chris Curie were the victims of a very plesant surprise on last Sunday, as they had previously been invited out for dinner, they were not looking for company and consequently were not prepared for so many. By previous arrangement the children and grand-children to the number of 35 came with well filled baskets and soon the table was ladened with every thing that was good to eat. The centre piece being a choice bouquet of cut flowers, a present from the children. Other decorations were holly, mistletoe and a Christmas tree. Those present were Mr. Will Curie and family, Mrs. Laura Meese of Kansas, Mrs. Manda Kloffenstine and husband, Mrs. Emma Skilling and family, Mr. Morris Curie and family, Mrs. Arline Koch and family, Mr. Frank Curie and family, Mrs. Maud Beams and family and Grover Curie and Miss Deama Ridgway. Those of the family absent were Mrs. Anna Henderson and family, Lester Curie, of Oklahoma and Mrs. Blanch Boydston, of Kansas. Suffice it to say that all were happy and enjoyed the kindred association together at The Old Home.

Fire in New York Tenement House.

Fire broke out on the upper floors of the double tenement 122-124 West 127th street, New York City. When the firemen arrived many women and children were seen huddled in the windows and on the roof. They were warned not to jump, but in the excitement it is feared there was loss of life. The second alarm was turned in quickly and hurry calls were sent to Harlem and nearby hospitals. The two upper floors were quickly enwrapped in flames and the structure appeared doomed. The flames spread so rapidly, enveloping all five floors of No. 122, that a third alarm was turned in and ambulances hastened to the scene. The three upper floors of No. 124 were soon gutted and it was impossible to ascertain whether or not anyone had perished. Two women and two men were carried from the building suffering from severe burns and rushed to the hospitals.

Summoned by Phone, Saves a Village.

Farmers called by rural telephone from a distance of four and five miles, saved the hamlet of Herbst, seven miles southwest of Marion, Ind., on the Kokomo, Marion & Western traction line, from destruction by fire. The fire originated in the frame store building of John Nesbit. This, with the stock of general merchandise estimated at the value of $2,500, was destroyed. The building was insured for $1,000, but there was no insurance on the stock. The farmers summoned by telephone assisted the villagers in covering their houses with wet blankets and carpets, thus saving a dozen or more houses of the town. The trolley wire of the K., M. & W. traction line was severed by the fire and traffic was blocked for three hours.

Mother Killed Her Child in Play.

While helping his mother dress a Christmas tree at their home in Chicago, Pearl Locke, 3 years old, playfully picked up an old revolver and said to the mother, Mrs. Earl Locke: "Shoot me, ma." The mother, unaware that the revolver was loaded, pulled the trigger and shot the child through the heart, killing it instantly. The revolver had been lying about the house for six months and only one chamber was loaded.

T. F. Ryan Quits Active Business.

Thomas F. Ryan, of New York, admittedly one of the greatest powers in the financial world, has announced that yielding to the advice of his physicians he had resigned from the directorate of thirty-one corporations. The only enterprises in the management of which the noted financier retains a hand are the Morton Trust Company, the National Bank of Commerce and the American Tobacco Company.

Worcester Banker a Suicide.

Frank W. Cutting, for the past forty years connected with the Worcester Mechanics Savings Bank at Worcester, Mass., and for seven years its treasurer, was found dead by suicide at his home. The bank officials express the belief that his accounts are correct, as two examinations have been held recently.

Business Part of Lima, Ohio, Burns.

Fire starting in the A. Davis & Sons livery stable, in Lima, Ohio, spread in all directions, and for a time threatened the entire business district. Thirty horses were cremated in the Davis livery stable before rescue could be made. It is thought the property loss will not exceed $150,000.

Pioneer Medical Man Dead.

Dr. Samuel R. Seawright, one of the pioneer physicians of Indiana, is dead at his home in Lafayette, Ind. He was 84 years of age, and had practiced medicine in Indiana for nearly fifty-five years.

Bank Robbers Invade Kansas.

Robbers dynamited the safe of the State Bank at Halls Summit, Kas., secured $3,000 and escaped. The explosion wrecked the safe.

Veteran Fatally Scalded in Bath Tub.

Benedict Higdon, a veteran of the Civil War, who was a patient in the hospital at the National Soldiers' Home in Marion, Ind., was scalded to death in a bath tub.

DARES DEATH TO TELL NIGHT RIDER SECRETS

Horrors of Crimes Related in Detail by Man Who Risks Avenger.

DENOUNCES OLD COMRADES.

Woman Whipped by Masked Desperadoes—Story of Torture in Tennessee Trial.

JUDGE JONES.

The secrets of the night riders who have so long terrified the South were laid bare in Union City, Tenn., Monday at the trial of the eight men charged with being in the mob that killed Captain Quentin Rankin at Reel Foot Lake on the night of Oct. 19 by Frank Fehringer, confessed night rider, who turned State's evidence. Fehringer's dramatic evidence was given under a guard of half a dozen militiamen with drawn revolvers, while a squad of other militiamen with loaded rifles were stationed in the court room. Fehringer entered the court room under a guard of troops, cool and apparently thoughtless of his danger, while the crowd in the room strained toward him and was restrained with difficulty, even under the guns of the militiamen. The secrets, oaths, passwords, leader's name, as well as the places and times of meetings of the marauder bands were exposed in full by the witness before he left the witness stand. He positively identified four of the eight men on trial as members of the band that murdered Captain Rankin and implicated all of them. Judge Jones presided at the trial.

Fehringer stated that there were thirty-five masked men in the party that made the assault on the two men. "We took them out and walked them up the slough. Garrett Johnson talked to them and said that every time he thought of their taking money from us and using it to buy shares in the company we were fighting he felt like shooting them. When we got to the tree we threw the rope over the limb. As the rope was pulled Bob Huffman shot him. Several more shots followed. and Mr. Taylor, who had been sitting there, jumped into the slough. We shot at him and I struck a match to see if I could find him. Some one took a stick and poked around in the water. We thought he must be dead."

The cruel whipping of Mrs. Emma Johnson, because she would not drop the divorce suit against her husband, was also told by Fehringer. Without a show of emotion he told how the woman was dragged from her home and lashed until she was unconscious.

FIRE IN NEW YORK THEATER.

Herald Square Playhouse Burns Shortly After Audience Leaves.

Just after the curtain went down on the last act of "The Three Twins," at the Herald Square Theater in New York Tuesday night smoke began pouring from the wall back of the first balcony. There was a cry of "fire" and a confused rush for the exit doors by about 200 men and women left in the house, who were standing in front of their seats arranging wraps and coats. They all got out safely, but not a moment too soon, for about three minutes after the alarm flames burst through the wall back of the balcony and swept across the balcony seats. In ten minutes more the whole rear part of the theater, from orchestra to gallery, was ablaze.

At midnight the fire was about under control, but the theater was practically gutted. All the auditorium part was gone, and the flames had penetrated into the section back of the stage. The girl members of the company were the last to leave the place. Some of them fled to Broadway and to 35th street in their costumes and ran into adjoining buildings. Bessie McCoy, the star, fainted on the stage when she saw the flames break through the balcony wall. Some of the other dancers carried her off.

Had the fire burst through into the balcony ten minutes sooner or even five minutes, there might have been terrible loss of life. But most of the audience of 1,000 or so of men and women were out of the theater or in the lobby leading to Broadway when the cry of "fire" arose.

Lee Shubert, one of the lessees of the Herald Square Theater, said that the damage was about $30,000 to the building and $10,000 to the interior.

BRIBE PUTS OFFICIAL IN CELL.

Former Member of City Board Sentenced to Penitentiary.

Fred Lied, formerly member of the Columbus board of control, was sentenced to four years in the Ohio penitentiary for accepting a bribe from Nelson Cannon, representative of the Trinidad Paving Company of Cleveland, in connection with East Broad street paving. Fred Immel, another former member of the board of control, is serving a term in the penitentiary.

ANOTHER ROMANCE SHATTERED.

JAIL FOR LABOR MEN.

Leaders of American Federation Sentenced for Contempt.

One year in jail is the punishment for contempt of court meted out in Washington to Samuel Gompers, head of the American Federation of Labor. Briefer terms are given John Mitchell and Secretary Morrison. As he had announced that he would go to a cell rather than abandon the boycott and blacklist, Mr. Gompers is expected to be behind the bars for a twelvemonth.

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

The famous contempt case of Buck's Stove and Range Company against Gompers, Vice President Mitchell and Secretary Morrison of the Federation of Labor was decided by Justice Wright of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia adversely to the Federation officials. Gompers was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment, Mitchell to nine months and Morrison to six months. The case grew out of the alleged boycott of the company's products and the placing of the company on the unfair list, and the Federation's alleged violation of Judge Gould's recent mandamus attracted wide attention.

ROBS A BANK A NIGHT.

Some Gang Believed to Have Gotten Over $8,000 in Nebraska.

Robbers the other night raided the State Bank of Ceresco, eighteen miles north of Lincoln, Neb., overpowered a boy who surprised them at work, demolished the vaults, secured $3,000 and escaped. Wednesday night a bank in Chase was robbed. Thursday night banks at Keene and Gibbon were looted, the robbers getting $5,500. James Malone, chief of Burlington detectives, stated that the same gang undoubtedly robbed all the banks. He believes they are traveling in an automobile.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

Milwaukee is after the next bowling congress and looks good to get it.

Percy Houghton has been elected football coach at Harvard for another two years.

James R. Keene was the largest winner on the American turf this season. He won $282,075.

Cornell's track team will meet the Marroons on an indoor track at the Bartlett gymnasium this winter.

In the relay run from New York to Washington nearly 1,000 boys carried a silver tube containing a message from Rudolph Foster to President Roosevelt.

Patsy Donovan, who has been let go as manager of the Brooklyn National League team, will in all probability be appointed manager of the Boston club next year.

Fred Bradley of Boston was knocked out in the fourth round of a boxing bout with Al Kubiak of Grand Rapids, Mich., at the West End Athletic Club in Philadelphia. He became unconscious and was hurried to a hospital.

MAIL FINES ABOLISHED.

Railroads Expect to Save Money as Result of Federal Order.

Thousands of dollars will be saved to the railroads of the United States annually on account of the new order issued by the Postmaster General. It eliminates from the regulations of the department governing the transportation of mails the requirement that the roads shall be fined for failure to maintain schedules on mail trains. The order also provided that the roads no longer shall be required to make out and forward to Washington the voluminous monthly reports showing in detail the full performance of each mail train that is delayed over thirty minutes at any point on its route. The order was received with great satisfaction by the railroad officials, who long have contended that the regulations of the Postal Department were unreasonable.

Heretofore a fine of 10 per cent of the earning capacity of a mail train, based on its contract remuneration, has been imposed on the road for a delay of thirty minutes or over at any point on its route, the fine being based on the distance traveled while the train was that amount behind its schedule.

EXTRA SESSION DATE.

Practically Decided to Call the New Congress on March 15.

March 15 is the date upon which Congress will be called in extraordinary session by President Taft to revise the tariff, according to unofficial advices. The sixtieth Congress will expire by constitutional limitation on March 4. It is the expectation that immediately following his inauguration President Taft will issue a proclamation convening the new Congress in special session.

Republican leaders believe, according to a Washington correspondent, that the new Congress will sit until late in the summer. While the tariff revision bill to be reported to the House may be passed in that body early in April, its consideration in the Senate will be marked by more mature deliberation. It is believed that many weeks will be consumed in debate upon the measures in the Senate.

BROTHERS TO SHARE MILLIONS.

Carpenter and Railway Clerk Are Part Heirs to Delaware Estate.

Arisone Lyle, a St. Louis carpenter, and his brother, William A. Lyle, a railway clerk, have been informed that they are part heirs to an estate in the heart of Wilmington, Del., worth $80,000,000. The estate was originally owned by a German baron named Christopher Springer, who came to America nearly a century ago. He leased the property to various persons and died without leaving a will. A sister of the baron was the grandmother of the Lyle brothers. The lease expired last January. Arisone Lyle is 40 years old and has a wife and three children. His brother is 38 years old. Mrs. George M. McCollum, who conducts a candy store in Alton, Ill., is also said to be an heir to the estate.

Plan World Sunday School Meet.

The world's executive committee of the International Sunday School Association met in Washington to outline plans for the world's sixth Sunday school convention, to be held there in May or June of 1910.

Swiss Elect President.

A. Deucher, minister of commerce, was elected president of the Swiss republic for 1909 by the Federal Assembly. He will succeed Dr. F. Brenner, whose term of office expires Jan. 1.

CASTRO'S MEN OUSTED.

Vice President Gomez Forms Own Government.

Vice President J. Vicente Gomez, to whom General Cipriano Castro handed over the presidency on his departure for Europe, has established a new government in Venezuela. He has replaced the old ministry, the leader of which was Dr. Jose de Jesus Paul, minister of foreign affairs, who has been the one figure outside of Castro himself in the negotiations that culminated in the ousting of Minister de Reus and the severance of diplomatic relations with Holland, with a new body of men who represent various factions in the state and who have figured prominently in various ways in the political history of the country.

Not only has Dr. Paul disappeared from the counsels of the nation, but Dr. Baldo, who now is traveling in Castro's suite abroad, also has been removed from his official position as minister of education. Secret advices received from Caracas, where the strictest censorship is being observed, indicate that the whole of Venezuela has been in a ferment ever since President Castro sailed, and that the crisis was reached a few days ago when it became necessary for Acting President Gomez to take decisive steps, which he did by eliminating from his cabinet those who were closely affiliated with the Castro rule and under the Castro domination.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

Gov. Folk has decided that under the law the entire electoral vote of Missouri should be cast for William H. Taft. The Taft plurality in Missouri is 1,020.

Congressman Theodore E. Burton of Ohio has been tentatively offered the secretaryship of the treasury, in Taft's cabinet, but has not decided whether he will accept. His friends in Ohio want him to be a candidate for the Senate.

J. J. Sullivan of Columbus, who was appointed judge of the Nebraska Supreme Court by Gov. Sheldon, has filed his resignation. Gov. Sheldon accepted the resignation. Judge Sullivan took the oath of office and served one day. He declined to issue a statement explaining his resignation.

The statement of the expense account of Robert M. La Follette's presidential campaign committee has been filed at Madison by Alfred T. Rogers, law partner of Senator La Follette and member of the Republican national committee. According to the statement contributions aggregating $17,629.10 were received to carry on the campaign of La Follette for nomination for the presidency, and an equal amount was expended.

The announcement that President Roosevelt had insisted upon the immediate appointment of John D. Pringle, editor of the Labor World at Pittsburg, to be appraiser of that port, with a $3,500 salary, has disturbed the regular Republican leaders of that part of the State.

Dr. Charles P. Neill, commissioner of labor, in a short time will be reappointed to his present position by President Roosevelt. Dr. Neill was made commissioner of labor by President Roosevelt in succession of Prof. Carroll D. Wright, who accepted the position of president of Clark university at Worcester, Mass.

STATES ARE WARNED TO PROTECT THE FISH

Annual Report of the Federal Commissioner Is Alarming to Anglers.

SOME KINDS ARE DISAPPEARING

Greed Said to Have Destroyed the Sturgeon on East Coast—Vast Output of Hatcheries.

"The most serious condition now confronting the American fishing industry is the failure of the States to afford adequate protection to migratory fishes in State and interstate waters." This is the serious note of warning sounded by George M. Bowers, United States Fish Commissioner, in his annual report. Mr. Bowers graphically depicts the great destruction wrought to certain species of fish and makes an earnest appeal for their preservation.

Pointing to the history of the New England salmon fishery as a warning, the Commissioner declares that some of the States seem yet absolutely indifferent to the crying needs of fisheries for species of similar habits, whose obliteration, he says, is certain unless radical corrective measures are taken. Mr. Bowers states that the fishes most in need of consideration are the shad, the striped bass and the sturgeon on the Atlantic coast and the salmons in the Pacific States.

The disappearance of the sturgeon from nearly every east coast river, Mr. Bowers states, "shows how greed and indifference may in a single generation destroy a valuable fishery."

The report shows that the bureaus hatcheries in 1908 yielded 376,000,000 more fish than in any other year and delivered about 458,000,000 eggs to State and foreign hatcheries. The total output was over 2,871,000,000 eggs and fish, of which over 2,400,000,000 were fish.

HOLD TWO JOBS? NO.

Pay Roll Patriot Gets Blow When Chytraus Decides Galpin Case.

A smashing blow to the pay roll patriot was administered by Judge Axel Chytraus of the Appellate Court in Chicago when he handed down a deep-delving decision holding that no person can draw two salaries from the public treasury simultaneously.

The decision came in the case of Herman B. Meyer against County Clerk Joseph F. Haas, an affair of two years' standing in the court records of Cook County and involving the right of Homer K. Galpin, chief clerk of the Chicago Municipal Court, to sit in the State Senate, representing the Second District. Galpin's term as Senator is officially waning, and for all practical purposes has expired. Judge Clifford refused to issue a writ of mandamus to County Clerk Haas on the petition of Herman B. Meyer, who had sought Galpin's seat in the Senate. County Clerk Haas in turn had refused to notify Governor Deneen officially that a vacancy existed in the Senate from the Galpin district following Galpin's election as chief clerk of the Municipal Court. Judge Chytraus and the Appellate bench now hold that Judge Clifford was in error and that Galpin had no right to a seat in the Senate during the last two years.

The point of interest to politicians generally, but most specifically unpleasant to more than thirty members-elect of the incoming Illinois General Assembly, is that the common law is against two salaries going into the pockets of one man at the same time from the public treasuries, and specifically that a State legislator under the constitution is forbidden to hold any other remunerative office under the United States or State government.

It is known within legislative circles and among politicians that a large percentage of the personnel of the Cook County delegation in the Legislature has an intimate acquaintance with some public pay roll. There are examples of the same situation with regard to some of the down-State members of the General Assembly. Federal, State, city and Sanitary District employes, who are drawing pay now, will be noted on the official roll call of the Legislature.

PLAY BAD, AUDIENCE DANCES.

Actors, Refused Hearing, Sit on Stage While Waits Reigns.

When a company of actors was presenting "The Peddler's Parade" in the town hall at Agosta, Ohio, the other night, the audience demanded the price of admission back after the first act. The floor of the auditorium then was cleared and a dance held. The crestfallen actors watched the dancers from seats on the stage. For the benefit of the actors and actresses many wore placards with the word "Stung." Similar cards were placed in all the shop windows of the village.

Elbert Hubbard Injured.

A falling tree seriously injured Elbert Hubbard, the author and lecturer, in the woods near his colony at East Aurora, N. Y. While assisting workmen he miscalculated the direction that the tree would fall and was crushed.

Blow Up Bank; Steal $2,500.

Five highwaymen blew up the Holloway Exchange bank of Gibbon, Neb., held off the inhabitants and stole $2,500 from the vaults. They escaped in an automobile, citizens pursuing them.

WORK OF CONGRESS

The postal savings bank bill was before the Senate Thursday for over an hour, Senator Burkett of Nebraska making a comprehensive argument in favor of its passage. The Senate listened also to the reading of a message from the President recommending a change in the form of government of the District of Columbia, by which a single executive head would take the place of the board of three commissioners who now jointly act as a governing board. At 2:30 o'clock the Senate adjourned until Saturday. By unanimous vote the House adopted a resolution presented by the special committee of five calling on the President for proof of his charge that members were fearful of an investigation by the secret service agents. The remainder of the day was given over to consideration of bills on the private calendar, a large number of which were passed.

-:—:-

The Senate was not in session Friday. Because of the general exodus of members for their homes for the Christmas holidays, the attendance in the House was far short of a quorum. Nevertheless a good deal of business was transacted. This consisted mostly of the passage of war claim bills, some of them giving rise to considerable discussion.

-:—:-

A brief Senate session was devoted to routine business in accordance with the agreement reached before the adjournment Thursday. Several messages on minor legislation were received from the President and bills and other measures were introduced. At 12:50 o'clock the Senate adjourned until Jan. 4, 1909. After passing a bill granting the Southern Pacific Railroad Company a right of way across the Fort Mason military reservation in California, the House, on motion of Mr. Payne, of New York, adjourned at 12:14 p. m. till Monday, Jan. 4, 1909.

Progress of Surgical Grafting.

During the sessions of the American Philosophical Society at Philadelphia, Dr. Carrel told of the wonders of medical surgery now being performed at the Rockefeller Institute of New York. Recently the leg of a dead dog was grafted on the body of another dog so that in three weeks the wound had healed and the dog was able to use the new leg with perfect control. Dr. Carrel also told of the transplanting of cats' kidneys, even after the organs had been in storage sixty days. Human arteries and jugular veins have been interchanged and the patients have not been able to tell the difference. The chief difficulty in the way of applying these methods to saving human life is to find healthy organs to transplant. Dr. Keen suggested that when a healthy man died his kidneys and other organs be kept in cold storage until some patient should be in need of them. Already the knee joint from the leg of a dead man has been used to replace an injured joint in a living person.

Lockjaw Sensations Described.

Dr. F. W. Grundman of St. Louis who has recently recovered from the dreaded disease, lockjaw, which he contracted as the result of a cut on the knee, caused by a fall from a street car, gives an interesting account of how he followed the symptoms from the first indication. About a week after the accident when the knee was all healed, he noticed that he had a slight fever and that the muscles of his neck pained and were constricted. Spasmodic jerkings of the limbs followed, and soon the muscles of the jaw began slowly to contract. He sent for a doctor and used all his will power to control the muscles until the physician arrived with the antitoxin serum. In one day about a fluid ounce was injected, and though the jaws continued to lock, a victory was finally won and the doctor lives to tell the story.

A Post Card Panic.

The post card business is seriously depressed at present, while some of the great foreign markets are bordering on panic. Over-production and wild speculation in the commodity are the causes. The public has watched the gradual encroachment of the souvenir post card with surprise, perhaps, but without realizing the enormous proportions of the industry. In order to supply the little stands in every store, at every cross roads the country over, an immense industry has been developed in practically all civilized lands. Incidentally the United States imported from Germany in a single year more than $6,000,000 worth of the bits of cardboard. The post card panic is most acute at present in Germany. The card industry lost heavily as large orders were canceled.

NEWS OF MINOR NOTE.

Twenty men were hurt in a railroad collision near Brussels, Belgium.

Trustees of Columbia university, New York, decided to give the alumni representation on the board.

Several persons were hurt in a clash between artillery men and citizens at Port Townsend, Wash.

Reports from Hawaii indicate a record pineapple crop for 1908 far in excess of any production yet recorded.

Dr. Cyrus Northrop, president of the University of Minnesota, will retire at the end of the present college year. He has held the position twenty-five years.

TORN BY GRAFT ARRESTS.

Conspiracy and Corruption in Deals Involving Pittsburg City Funds.

Seven members of the Finance Committee of Councils, including the president of the Common Council, were arrested in Pittsburg charged with conspiracy, corrupt solicitation and bribery. The accuser is Tensard De Wolfe, secretary of the Civic League of Allegheny County, which has been aiding Mayor Guthrie in gathering evidence. The accused are William Brand, president of the Common Council; Jacob Soffel, Jr., Hugh Ferguson, Captain John F. Klein, W. H. Melaney, Joseph C. Wasson and T. Ellis Atkinson. All are members of the Common Council except Atkinson, who is a member of the Select Council.

Informations were also made against President W. W. Ramsey and A. A. Vilsack, cashier of the German National Bank, by De Wolfe, charging them with conspiracy. Mr. Vilsack was arrested and his brother furnished $15,000 bail. President Ramsey was arrested also. It is alleged that the German National Bank gave the members of the Common Council $17,500.

Wasson, Soffel, Klein and Brand are members of the Common Council known as "The Big Six." They have been obstructing legislation.

So great a stir was caused by the arrest that the boards of directors of a number of banks were called into extra session to conceal the banks which are to be charged with bribing the Finance Committee in order to be selected as depositaries. This is one of the charges which will create the greatest stir because the banks will undoubtedly be dragged into the trials.

The charges against the seven men, stripped of legal phraseology, are as follows: That they offered bribes to obtain and influence the votes of a number of members of the Select and Common Council to secure the passage of certain ordinances designating the depositaries for the funds of the city, bridge ordinances, bond ordinances for freeing bridges, ordinances for filter beds, the Heberton Street Railway ordinance, resolution to pave Fourth avenue with wood blocks and other resolutions. The informations say the charges referred to cover a period of two years. The amounts of money the members of the Council are said to have received are fabulous. They are alleged to have held up all city legislation against Mayor Guthrie.

TO COMBAT MRS. ANNIS' STORY.

Lawyers for Hains Promise to Discredit Testimony of Widow.

In the trial at Flushing, N. Y., lawyers for Thornton Jenkins Hains asserted that every effort will be put forth to shatter that part of Mrs. Helene E. Annis' testimony that the defendant beckoned his brother and the two men went to the float, where Capt. Hains shot and killed William E. Annis as he was making a landing with his boat. This evidence, Hains' counsel declare, was suggested to Mrs. Annis in order that her testimony might bring the defendant within the meaning of the statute that there must be some overt act to show that he induced or procured his brother to commit the crime.

DIVORCE DUE TO "MAN HUNTING"

Philadelphia Rabbi Deplores "Husband Catching" by Women.

"Man catching" by frivolous women was deplored in a sermon by Rabbi Joseph Krauskopf at Philadelphia. This, he declared, was responsible for a large portion of American divorces. The rabbi said: "From the day the daughter enters young womanhood the sole thought of many homes is man catching. No artifice is shunned that shall enable the gorgeously decked-out huntress quickest to entrap her victim. "There is probably no thought which occupies a young society woman more than that of being married; there is probably no thought which occupies her less than that of being happy when married or making a husband happy."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

T. E. Williams shot an eagle on his farm, three miles northwest of Rockville. The bird measured seven feet and seven inches from tip to tip, and was carrying away a young pig when shot.

Miss Mary L. Jay, for nineteen years assistant principal of the Fort Wayne High School, is dead. Miss Jay was one of the best-known teachers in the State, having held several offices in the State Association.

James Bomer, aged 70 years, a farmer near Jeffersonville, and member of an old family, was found dead in the barn lot by his daughter, Eliza Bomer, soon after he had gone out to attend to his stock. Apoplexy was the cause. Eight children survive.

LaGrange citizens are working hard to make their city one of the best commercial points in that part of the State by endeavoring to locate factories and otherwise helping to increase the population. The officers and members of the LaGrange Business Men's organization are saying they will double the size of the city within the next two years.

Robert Jamison, 39 years old and unmarried, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Jamison, of Noblesville, died at his home from sciatic rheumatism. He was bandmaster in Ringling Brothers' circus and left the show in the South about two weeks ago on account of illness. He had held similar positions in the Forepaugh circus and the Ben Wallace shows.

While Eugene, the 8-year-old son of Grant Smith, colored, was looking at some toys in a show window in Columbus, a white boy, whose name is not known, appeared and, pointing a blank cartridge pistol full in the face of the colored boy, pulled the trigger. The colored boy's face was badly powder burned and the paper wad made an ugly wound in his forehead.

"Do snakes eat sweet potatoes?" That question caused an argument between two women near Clay City. A woman was digging her sweet potato crop and pulled out a large potato and a black snake. The snake had its head in a hole in the potato. She said the snake was eating the potato. Her neighbor denied it, saying a mouse had made the hole in the potato. The question has not been decided.

As he was sitting in a wagon ready to drive away from the home of a friend, Abraham Long, one of the best known farmers in the vicinity of Lafayette, suddenly straightened up on the seat, pitched headlong to the ground and was picked up lifeless by his companions. The fall broke his neck and caused instant death. It is believed that a stroke of apoplexy caused him to fall from the wagon.

George Brewington, of Milan, paid $25 for two registered cockerels last spring. When he opened the coop one morning recently one of the fowls left the premises as fast as possible and the other one jumped five feet straight into the air and crowed lustily. Brewington made a careful inspection. He found that some one had taken his blooded cockerels and substituted two fowls of a more common stock. He says the strange roosters are about 27 and 42 years old, respectively.

Charles, the 11-year-old son of Weldon Luse, of Elwood, while on his way to school, found a blacksnake that had crawled into the roadway. The boy's father was called and he took the snake home, wrapped it in rags and straw and placed it in a barrel which was sunk in the ground inside the barn. The snake is four feet three inches long. Mr. Luse will attempt to domesticate it in order to rid his barn of rats, as blacksnakes are known as enemies of rats and mice. Blacksnakes are not poisonous.

The mystery of the disappearance of Anna Smith and Bessie Krieger, two 16-year-old Hammond girls, last week, when they left their homes, has been cleared up by their arrest at Kavanaugh by Officer Halon, of the Hammond police force. Both girls rented masquerade cowboy costumes last week to attend a ball and then disappeared. They were found in a houseboat on the Calumet river attired in buckskin garments, sombreros and fully armed. The girls said they preferred the freedom of the woods to life in society.

E. A. Brown, formerly of Carmel, who recently invented a rapid-fire gun that attracted attention, has just applied for a patent on an ingenious device for a phonograph. The new appliance is small, not as large as an ordinary thimble. The device is attached to the cylinder, on which the records are placed. It holds the record so firmly that it is impossible for it to vary, thus doing away with the rasping noise. The record is placed on the cylinder, a miniature gate is closed and when the selection is finished the gate opens automatically and the record is removed. Mr. Brown believes his invention will bring him a small fortune.

Leroy Deeds, a veteran of the Soldiers' Home, who was recently fined and received a jail sentence for assaulting a comrade, Jacob Lill, has been dishonorably discharged from the Marion home.

A dog thought to have been suffering from rabies was killed at Bedford after it had bitten Mark Coulter. It is thought that twenty-five or thirty dogs were bitten, and many have been killed. The dog's head has been sent to Bloomington for examination.

M. M. Justus, of Bluffton, wants to be appointed custodian of the State House at Indianapolis.

Rev. Eugene Neubauer, of Goshen, who has taken a religious census of the city, says that 4,101 folk there belong to church.

Marion Bergert, 26 years old, a law student and married, threw himself in front of a B. & O. S. W. train at Washington and was killed.

W. H. Hall, an old-time writing master, who conducted writing schools over northern Indiana thirty years ago, is dead at Converse.

Under a new rule conductors on Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley cars must not permit intoxicated men to board their cars as passengers.

Frank C. Zimmerman, who died very suddenly at his home in Fort Wayne, was probably the oldest dry goods clerk in the State. He had pursued that vocation in the city for fifty years.

Business at Ossian has increased sufficiently to warrant the advance of the postoffice there from the fourth to the third class after January 1. The salary of the postmaster will be $1,100 a year.

William 'VanNoorman, a Chicago steeplejack who visited Kendallville last week, can neither read nor write, but he finds no difficulty in earning from $50 to $100 per week at his profession.

Joseph McBride, ex-Deputy Sheriff of Shelby County, and for sixteen years a member of the Council of Shelbyville, has been adjudged insane and will be committed to the State asylum.

F. W. Barrett, night operator at the Indianapolis Southern station at Sullivan, was held up by two men as he was leaving the station. The highwaymen took several dollars in money and a gold watch, then walked quietly away.

Several Mormon elders have begun their customary mission efforts in Terre Haute, visiting business and professional men mostly, although some go to residences, always in couples. They also do some street preaching and they sell their Bible.

James T. Stipp, of Bedford, who thought he was dying slowly from consumption, recently took a violent attack of coughing, and feeling something give way, examined a clot of blood, finding a pin imbedded in it. He has been happily relieved since the incident from any pains. He remembers swallowing the pin ten years ago and had forgotten about the occurrence until reminded of it when the pin made its appearance after having been coughed up.

Elvet Rhodes, owner of the Rhodes farm in southern Martin County, lost a valuable team of horses by drowning at the Haysville ferry. John Rhodes and some companions had been hunting and were returning from the neighborhood of West Baden. When at Haysville they stopped and left the team standing in the highway. The horses became frightened and ran away, plunging into White river and in a few minutes were drowned. The team was valued at $500.

Mrs. Emma Branson has brought suit against Jacob Clark, a saloon-keeper of Muncie, and against his bondsmen for $2,000 damages, charging that Clark sold her husband liquor after he had been warned not to do so, and that as a result of this Branson, on November 22 of this year, came home drunk, terribly beat her and then deserted her. Drink caused Branson to lose a good-paying position as a conductor on the Central Indiana railway, she avers, and she blames the saloonkeeper.

Orville Stevens, 17 years old, and son of Mrs. Anna Stevens, drowned within sight of his own home. In company with a number of companions he was skating on the Mississinewa river, which is partly covered with thin ice. He was skating close to the open water when suddenly the ice gave way and he sank from view. Homer Miller, a companion, jumped into the water in an effort to save his friend, but the Stevens boy had been carried under the ice by the current. Miller regained a place of safety only after a great struggle.

James Sims, a driver at the Vandalia mine, No. 10, near Linton, is accused of punching out both eyes of his mule. It is a rule at the Vandalia mine that no more than three cars should be attached to one mule. It was late in the afternoon and Sims had several cars that should have been pulled to the shaft earlier in the day, so he decided to make a load of five cars instead of three. The mule was unable to pull the cars, and after beating the animal he is alleged to have pulled a "sprag" from his car, with which he knocked out both eyes of the animal. He then left the mule and has not been seen since. Warrants have been issued for his arrest.

That a cat can live five or six days without anything to eat or drink was demonstrated at the home of Frank Turner, in Owensville, where the family cat was held a prisoner in a closet almost a week before it was released.

William McBride, an old soldier, of Washington, has a pumpkin that when cut open showed that the seeds had sprouted and little vines had grown to four inches long. There were no holes in the pumpkin to give the sprouts air.

30,000 WORKERS KILLED IN YEAR

Government Report Shows Protection of Employes Neglected.

Between 30,00 and 35,000 deaths among workingmen and 2,000,000 injuries is the accident record in the United States for last year, according to a bulletin issued by the bureau of labor. Of those employed in factories and workshops, it is declared that probably the most exposed class are the workers in iron and steel. Fatal accidents among electricians and electric linemen and coal miners are declared to be excessive, while railway trainmen were killed in the proportion of 7.46 deaths for 1,000 employes.

The bulletin declares that much could be done for the protection of the workingman that is neglected, though many and far-reaching improvements have been introduced in factory practice in the last decade. It is pointed out that the possibilities for successful accident prevention have been clearly demonstrated in the experience of foreign countries.

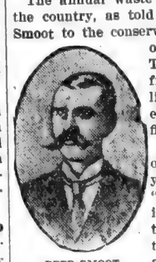
"Granting," the bulletin states, "that the underlying conditions in European countries are often quite different and that many of our industrial accidents may be the result of ignorance, reckless indifference or carelessness, the fact remains that an immense amount of human life is wasted and a vast amount of injury is done to health and strength, with resulting physical impairment, which has a very considerable economic value to the nation as a whole."

It is insisted that it should not be impossible to save at least one-third and perhaps one-half by intelligent and rational methods of factory inspection, legislation and control.

50,000,000 FOREST WASTE.

Senator Smoot Tells of Great Yearly Loss in Nation's Woods.

The annual waste in the forests of the country, as told by Senator Reed Smoot to the conservation congress, is over $50,000,000. This includes loss from fire. Fifty lives also are lost each year by forest fires, he said.



REED SMOOT.

"We take from our forests each year," he said, "twenty-three billion cubic feet, or two and one-half times their yearly growth. The condition of the world supply of timber makes us dependent wholly on what we produce. Our forests now cover 550,000,000 acres.

"We must plant up the lands, now treeless, which will be most useful under forest, and must continue and perfect, by State and nation, the preservation by use of forests already publicly owned; and we must extend it to other mountain forests more valuable for the permanent benefit of the many than for the temporary profit of a few."

Does Plague Threaten America?

This question in all seriousness is answered in the affirmative by various scientific authorities cited in an article for Collier's by C. P. Connolly. The term "bubonic" is used to distinguish the popular disease from its less frequent forms. The bubonic form attacks the lymphatic glands and causes buboes or angry swellings mostly in the groin, often in the arm pit and rarely in the neck. In some cases these are intensely painful, in others not at all so. Other forms are the pneumatic, when the lungs are attacked, and the septisemic when the blood current is the seat of the disease. The plague has been mistaken for all of the various common contagious diseases, but it is the most tenacious and insidious of all epidemic diseases. Its death rate in San Francisco has always been 50 per cent. in China and India 90 per cent. The present pandemic (an epidemic whose feeding ground may be universal) began fourteen years ago in southern China, where it caused a frightful epidemic in Hongkong and then moved to Bombay and other cities of India. Last year 1,400,000 cases were recorded in India, out of which 200,000 survived. North America, Australia nor South Africa was ever known to have the plague before the present outbreak. This is due to the change in trade routes, as the disease follows the highways of commerce. Although there has been no human case of the plague in San Francisco since Jan. 30 last, the authorities say that the danger is not over, as the plague often lies dormant a long time before becoming virulent and active in a given territory.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

NEW YORK.

Holiday trade shows further expansion and most cities report buying of this character equal to or slightly in excess of last year's. In some sections, particularly in the South, holiday trade is not so good as in 1907. The larger centers are doing well and armies of shoppers are in evidence, but many small cities report a relatively light business and demand shifting to cheaper lines.

In regular retail lines unseasonably warm weather has been a drawback, particularly Southwest and South. Wholesale trade is quieter, except for some hurry orders to sort up depleted stocks.

Inventories and stock takings naturally predispose to less activity from now till after Jan. 1. Reports from leading industries are of gradual gains and slow progress back to normal.

There are some orders for steel rails from railroads, and the tin plate mills are busier; there is a better supply of water in New England and paper mills are running more freely; Eastern shoe manufacturers report three months' orders ahead, and there is more demand for lumber, some of this on account of railroad buying, with firmer prices for yellow pine.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Dec. 17 number 310, against 298 last week, 300 in the like week of 1907, 227 in 1906, 235 in 1905 and 249 in 1904. Business failures in Canada for the week number 31, against 60 last week and 40 in this week of 1907.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

CHICAGO.

The general state of trade testifies to well-sustained recovery, although new demands in the heavy industries do not appear with the promptness expected. This delay does not detract from the outlook, as the requirements are known to be accumulating. Trading defaults again are large, but the volume of payments through the banks makes a gratifying exhibit. Retail activity in Christmas and general merchandise would be of ampler proportions were the weather more seasonable. Early buying, however, has been unusually strong and the prospects brighten for a satisfactory aggregate. Interior advices indicate that stocks undergo rapid depletion, and this has induced frequent reorders. Wholesale lines have a rather light house trade, as expected at this time, and attention is now given to inventories. Mail orders for spring and summer wares show increases.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 41, against 40 last week, 28 in 1907, and 28 in 1906. Those with liabilities of more than $5,000 number 13, against 13 last week, 12 in 1907, and 9 in 1906.—Dun's Review of Trade.

For Female Ills

You should take, for female ills, a medicine which acts on the female organs and functions.

Cardui is not a man's medicine. It is for women. Its pure, healing, curative, vegetable ingredients, go direct to the womanly organs, relieve their pain and inflammation, and build up their strength.

"Tongue cannot tell," writes Miss Nola Smith, of Sweetser, Ind., "what has done for me. I am on my third bottle and am so much better. Before I began to take Cardui, I could not do a day's work. Now I can work all day. Mother took four bottles of Cardui before confinement, got along fine and has been real strong ever since."

WINE OF CARDUI

It is definitely predicted, from apparently reliable sources, that the Panama Canal will be completed in 1915, or six years hence. It is certain however, that it will, during the present Winter, be subjected to the keenest official as well as unofficial criticism. President-elect Taft will set sail for Panama on the 25th. of next month, accompanied by engineer experts. Mr. Pulitzer of the New York World is on the way to the canal in his steam yacht, accompanied by a number of journalists and expert engineers; and there is every prospect that the country will be reliably informed as to the actual condition of work and progress with regard to the Canal.

There is no doubt that the inauguration of Mr. Taft will be quite as splendid in its pageantry as the inauguration of any of his predecessors. A guarantee fund of seventy-five thousand dollars greater than the total received four years ago at President Roosevelt's inauguration. But its probable that this large sum will be considerably increased, for money continues to be sent in. Arrangements have been made to accomodate from seventy five to one hundred thousand visitors in rented quarters outside of hotels. Only about twenty per cent of the visitors during inauguration week, it is expected, will be accomodated in hotels. The rest of the two hundred thousand tourists expected will be guests of their friends in Washington. These estimates are made by the Inauguration Committee from observations and statistics of previous inauguration events.

At a recent meeting of the Ways and Means Committee a Georgian appeared. He was a lumberman and standpatter, Chairman Payne asked him: 'Why should you people from the South always come here asking for the very highest rate of duty and always voting for the lowest?' The browbeaten man answered: "I did not vote that way myself. The returns show that Mr. Taft got more than forty thousand votes in Georgia. I was one of those voters." But Chairman Payne was inconsistent. It would be strange indeed if there were not people in the South desirous of securing an enhancement of the value of their products through the tariff or by any other means. Greediness is not confined to sections of individuals and there are some planters in the South who would gladly snatch protection against the pittance of Egyptian cotton that is brought to this country. Southerners of this type, however, are few indeed as compared with the hungry horde north of the Mason and Dixie line. Per contra, the tariff is a fetish with actual millions of people in the North who have no direct interest in its spoils, but who have been told that it is the primal source of prosperity until they believe it.

Passenger train No. 414, southbound, on the Jackson-Fort Wayne branch of the Lake Shore, was derailed at the gravel pit switch, a mile north of Pleasant Lake, at 8 o'clock Thursday evening. The engine and six cars went down the bank and sixteen persons were injured.

The trainmen hurried to Pleasant Lake and the news of the wreck was telegraphed to Angola. Several doctors went to the scene of the wreck on hand cars, and gave temporary aid to the injured. Meantime a relief train had been wired at Hillsdale and upon its arrival the injured were taken to Angola where they were cared for. It was at first thought that a defective flange had caused the derailment of the engine, but Engineer Maurice Hickey, of Jackson, Mich., believes that someone tampered with the switch. Mr. Hickey says that the switch-light showed a clear track, and he put on full speed. Before he approached the switch, however, the light seemed to turn. An examination of the switch showed that the lock was broken. This gives rise to the theory that the disastor was caused by wreckers who planned to derail the train. The officers have been notified and an investigation is in progress already.

The train was behind time and had reached a speed of forty miles an hour when it reached the switch. The engine left the rails first and plunged down the bank, followed by the baggage car and five coaches. The second coach turned completely over and the passengers were thrown about like dice in a box. It is a miracle that none of them were killed outright. The other cars turned partly over and slid down the embankment on the east side of the track. A wreck train was made up at Airline Junction but the track was not blockaded, the cars going down the bank. The injured passengers were taken to Ft. Wayne where they arrived about 2 o'clock.

Heart Troubles

The heart may be weak just the same as the eyes, stomach or other organs. It often happens that a person is born with a weak heart. Then again disease, fevers, over-exertion, anxiety, nervousness, rheumatism, etc. weaken the heart. The result is shortness of breath, palpitation, pain in the heart, or in some of the nerves of the chest or abdomen. The heart should be strengthened with a tonic, and for this nothing equals Dr. Miles' Heart Cure.

"I had LaGrippe last fall as I thought in a mild form. I was weak, tired feeling, and short of breath; could hardly go about, and a good deal of the time sort of an asthmatic breathing and extremely nervous. I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and Nervine and now I feel so much better in every way. I am so thankful that I began taking this medicine, and shall not hesitate to tell others how much good it has done me."

When you are thinking of buying a farm, look for plenty of wood for fuel and other purposes, for good water, good neighbors and good market advantages.

"Isn't it strange," remarked a wayback farmer, as he watched an up-to-date neighbor sawing wood with a patent saw, run by a gasoline engine, "how men will scheme to get out of honest work."

Put everything down in writing when you lease a farm. Memory can not be relied on. It is remarkable how different men will remember different things. If it is all down in black and white, there can be no mistake.

When it is not convenient to apply heat to frozen pipes to thaw them, spread a cloth thickly with unslaked lime, fasten it around the frozen pipe and throw water on it. The heat produced as the lime slakes is great enough to thaw the ice.

There was a belief common for many generations that boys, like wheat, must be well thrashed to get the best out of them. The rod is no longer plied in the school or family, and yet there is after all a pretty fair crop of boys.

Have things gone wrong with you this past year? Now don't get discouraged and imagine you are going to wind up at the poorhouse. The new year is here, good things may be coming around the corner your way. Brace up; have nerve. It is tough on the wagon to drive it over the rough, frozen roads these days. Especially where the ruts are deep it is hard on fellowes and other parts. It is a good plan to have a second-best wagon for these times, and so save the good one. But this utility wagon should always be a good solid one, that will not break down on the way to town.

Is After Mr. Bryan

Walter S. Dickinson arrived home last week from Cincinnati where he was giving character sketches on the vaudeville stage in the Arcade theatre in that city, to visit his parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. Dickinson of Auburn. He will remain there during the holidays and then return to Cincinnati to resume his profession.

Mr. Dickinson is an Auburn boy who is winning plaudits everywhere as a vaudeville character actor, having traveled in different parts of the United States and Canada during the past summer giving his performances. His present visit is the first time he has been with his parents for a few years.

The Cincinnati Press says: "W. S. Dickinson who is entertaining Arcade audiences with 'rube' imitations, hails from Lincoln, Neb., known to fame and politics as the home of Bryan. Dickinson used to teach in the Lincoln Normal school and says he used to frequently borrow law books and maps from the three-time presidential candidate with whom he enjoys an intimate acquaintance. Soon after the recent election, Dickinson visited his home for a few days and, meeting Bryan on the street one day, joked with him about the result.

Bryan remarked that he guessed politics was a good deal like vaudeville, for you can never tell whether you are going to make good in either until after you try. Dickinson replied:

"Inasmuch as you have tried politics without getting a headline position, why not try your luck in vaudeville?"

To this Bryan, with a laugh, said he'd think it over and perhaps the two might go out later as a team.

In telling this story to Martin Beck in Chicago last week, the comedian says that Beck, who is a prominent factor in the vaudeville trust, said: "Tell Bryan the next time you see him that I will give him $35,000 for ten weeks in vaudeville, doing a six-minute monologue twice a day, and will give you $5,000 as a commission if you get him to sign a contract."

"Dickinson says he is serious in the matter and has cancelled the next two weeks engagements in order to go home and see if he cannot inveigle Bryan into the proposition."

Mr. Dickinson is a brother of Mrs. James White of our city and Mrs. Orson Quance of east of Spencerville.

Given a Good Crowd

Rev. Victor McCallie gave an interesting lecture on the modes of living of the people of India. He tells of the marvelous work done by the few missionaries with small means, and he says that if the church would make a sacrifice of its member-ship's pocket book, many thousands of souls could be added to the christian side of life. Why can not the church raise its membership fee from a postage stamp per month to a fee that it would not be ashamed of. Think it over.

A Letter From Carlisle

The following is the reproduction of a letter written to Mrs. Mariah Oberholtzer by her grand-son who is in the Navy and now located at U. S. S. Idaho, League Island, Philadelphia, Pa.

I received your card and as I have nothing to do now I will write. I suppose you have read the order that all Marines are to leave the war ships. They have left the Idaho, so each division takes its turn at Grand Duty. The Assistant Secretary of the Navy came aboard today to inspect before we leave for big gun practice. I have been in the Navy a few days over a year. The weather here is quite cool, and one or two light snows have fallen. There are about seven hundred men aboard and if we do not have a fine time Christmas, I miss my guess. I would certainly like to walk into your place on Christmas Eve. Tell Harry I received his letter and will answer it after Christmas when I can send the menu. My folks are all well as far as I know. I was home the last of July. I will write more the next time. So sending all my best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year I close and remain.

FAITH AND FORMULA.

By Henry F. Cope.

"He that doeth good is of God."—III, John, 11

One reason that religion means so little to many is that we have for a long time been accustomed to thinking of it from the wrong end; we have worried ourselves over its forms instead of using its simple facts; we have substituted its philosophy for its practice; we have acquired the habit of thinking of faith as wholly a matter of creed and opinions.

In those days when the reason feared to trust itself, when ignorance made the many slaves of the few who sought to keep a monopoly of knowledge, men were willing to accept the authoritative statements of the religious specialists that they must give personal unquestioning assent to those philosophical statements prepared by the institutions upon which those teachers lived.

Once men gave the same blind allegiance to the doctrines of religion that they also gave to feudal overlords; they knew not at all what the quarrel was about, but, being told they must defend the faith or be eternally damned they defended the faith, they paid their dues and counted that they had performed their duties for religion.

But opinion is no more religion than a guide book is a journey. If you had a million copies of even so practical a code as the ten commandments there would be less religion in the whole pile than in one little kindly deed done by one for another. We seem to think still that you can make a man religious by getting him to recite phrases of pious opinion.

There are no meals in a cook book. Health is not the same thing as a doctor's book. You cannot buy wisdom at a book store. Nourishment, health, wisdom are all the product of vital processes. They come through life. You may define all these in words, you may describe them in books, but the things themselves you can neither put into such forms nor get out of them.

Religion is not the Bible, nor the creed, nor the church. These are but its symbols, its descriptions and guide books. It takes a good deal more than faith in Baedeker to take a man to Italy; it takes something more than believing the Bible to make a man religious.

You can never make a child know that two and two are four by repeating that formula to him; he must somehow in his experience put this two and that two together. Then addition becomes simple, delightful (because helpful), practical. The gravest difficulty in helping people to the religious life is that we are insisting on putting the formula before the experience.

Let the definitions, the descriptions, the symbols of religion take care of themselves. Let every man express his views in his own way. His need is not some form of expression identical with all others; his need is to find by the actual test of living, by practical experience, that the religious way of life is the best, the most satisfactory, the most serviceable.

Do not worry over the forms and symbols that others use. Get the fact, the great fact, that life has in it higher values than those of the beast and the burden bearer, that man is more than dust, that living for the good of all is the secret of finding all the good in life. Steadily reach out for the best in life and your religion will formulate itself through experience.

When men are sick they do not need pathological definitions—they need the right life. When this world is wrong, when we find ourselves in conflict with the order of rightness, we need the fresh, invigorating experience of living for the things that are high and worthy.

We can all grasp religion in the concrete. We all believe in good lives. We have no skepticism as to sincere service for sacrifice, we all agree on the creed of character. We can all take hold of religion at the end of duty, of high living, of clean citizenship, of social service, of every-day goodness, kindness and love.

Doing the things that are right, following the light of high ideals, why fret and quarrel or even give ourselves special concern over descriptions, definitions, creeds? Take the facts of the right life, enjoy its experience and let the logic of such a life give its own account of our faith.

NATURE IS MAN'S AID.

By Rev. J. Lewis Hartrook.

The stars in their courses fought against Sisera.—Judge v. 20.

The first lesson that we learned in our contact with life is that in nature great forces operate which have the power to deliver or to destroy. Law is invariable; nature is constant and man is variable.

Our first conclusion, therefore, and which we may learn by the simple experience of burning our hands with fire, is that whether things shall hurt or not lies primarily with us. Deborah, in that immortal poem known as "The Song of Deborah," recounting the victory of Narak and the host of Israel over Sisera and the Canaanites, sang "The stars in their courses fought against Sisera." This strange judgment is the poetic statement of that which is profoundly and eternally true. The stars—which is but symbolic for nature—fought against Sisera, because Sisera was against the stars.

The principles of morality have their roots in the foundation of the universe, and he who does evil is at war with the principle of the universe. The laws which undergird society are not mere rules made by man or voted by government. They are laws which run throughout the universe. Hence a man's conduct bears a relation to the great universal life. Sisera was against the hosts of God, and he who is against God finds God's world against him. The stars fought against Sisera as the best instincts.

Truth is the power that holds the world in magetic unity, and the man who is true and righteous altogether is in harmony with the force that lifts the tides and projects the sunbeams, and finds about him a world in which many forces are fighting for him. Anarchism grows out of the false idea that things are against the man when the situation in which he finds himself is but the logic of a false relation to life itself. There are levers and handles waiting to be grasped and worked. Also for the blindness and perversity which passes by these outstretched arms of nature, these lifting, helping hands of God.

Nature is never against man save as he is against it. A thousand pathways stand open for the tread of his feet, the vast forces of the universe wait to do his bidding, the invisible power of the air follows with willingness and docility the wise ways which his skill and determination have ordained, crying to all, from atom to archangel, "We are thy helpers." If the same forces are abused the world which was with us is against us and the final judgment of life for us is that which the ancient poetess pronounced of the enemy of Israel, "And the stars in their courses fought against Sisera."

DOING THE IMPOSSIBLE.

By Rev. Charles E. Locke, D. D.

Text: "Nothing shall be impossible to you."

Tertullian once said of an event: "It is certain because it is impossible," and Richard Cobden, when told that a certain thing was impossible, replied: "If that is all, let us set about it at once." General Armstrong of Hampton, said: "Doing what cannot be done is the glory of living," and his great schools for Indian and negro youths became possible. Carlyle impatiently wrote: "Impossible! It is not a lucky word! Who is it says there is a lion in the way? Sluggard, thou must slay the lion; the way must be traveled!" Mirabeau shouted: "Impossible, that blockhead of a word!" And the great Napoleon characteristically declared: "Impossible! It is not a French word. Genius is the art of overcoming the impossible."

Christianity is the art of overcoming the impossible Impossible is not in the vocabulary of the Christian. This is the program of Jesus.

Christianity has already achieved the impossible in the overthrow of the vast Roman empire.

Christianity has achieved the impossible in the final eradication of human slavery. So, indeed, shall the day surely come when nations shall not learn war any more.

At the dedication of the Bunker Hill monument, when it appeared that an accident was imminent by the surging crowds against the speakers' platform, Webster requested the people kindly to move back. A man in the crowd answered: "It is impossible!" Thereupon the great Massachusetts statesman cried out: "Impossible! Impossible! Nothing is impossible on Bunker Hill!" And so let us keep near the cross. The battle of the ages was fought there, the freedom of the race was there achieved. Nothing is impossible on the Hill of the Cross—on Calvary.

The Sunshine of the Family

CHAPTER XVII.

Dr. Greenwood had given Alison strict injunctions that she was to keep her sister as quiet as possible, but it seemed impossible to check the storm of excited talk. Mabel's only relief was to accuse herself, and put all her conduct in its blackest light. A weight of intolerable misery lay on her mind; she felt her own pains were richly deserved, but the thought that she had risked her father's life by her disobedience was more than she could bear. Every hour she questioned Alison about his state. Would he recover? Was he in any danger? What did the doctor fear? Alison at last called Roger to her aid.

"What shall we do?" she exclaimed, half crying. "Missie will not get any sleep to-night; she is working herself into a fever, and Dr. Greenwood does not wish to give her an opiate. It breaks my heart to hear her going on about papa. I think if she could only see him she would be more contented."

"Shall I go to her?" he asked, hesitating a little, for Missie had expressed no wish to see him.

"Oh, yes, perhaps that will be best," she said, brightening a little. "I am so tired and harassed that I probably do not say the right thing."

"I will come presently; but, Allie, I am so sorry you are so tired. Miss Hardwick is downstairs, and she says she must see you; she seems very much upset. Do you think you could speak to her for a moment?"

Alison made a gesture of repugnance. It was plain that she did not wish to see Miss Hardwick, but Roger was bent on carrying his point.

"I have to go to my father now," he said, quietly, "but in about a quarter of an hour I shall be ready to see Missie. I will wait for you here. Miss Hardwick will not detain you many minutes; go, dear Allie." And Alison reluctantly obeyed him.

Eva was pacing up and down the long drawing room, and came up to Alison quickly, holding out both her hands.

"Oh, Alison," she said, and the tears were running down her face unchecked, "I know you do not want to see me, but I begged so hard of Mr. Roger to send you. Of course, you hate the sight of me. You think I am the cause of this; but, indeed, indeed, I never knew Mr. Merle would be so angry!"

"You tempted Mabel to deceive and disobey her father," returned Alison, severely, for her heart was hard against the girl. "You knew that he disapproved of Captain Harper, and then you encouraged and planned this scheme. How could any father fail to be angry when his commands are so entirely set aside?"

"You must not speak against Anthony, Alison," returned Eva, in a subdued voice. "I am engaged to him; he is only my half-cousin. Mabel knew this, and she thought it would not matter coming with us. Mamma would have told you, only I did not wish it to be made public. All this has quite spoiled my happiness. Poor, dear Mabel; if I could only see her, and help you to nurse her. But Mr. Roger says it is quite impossible." And she wiped away some fresh tears.

There was so much feeling in Eva's words and manner that Alison's coldness relaxed a little.

"You must not see her," she said, gravely; "I believe papa has forbidden that for the present, but I can give her your love, and tell her that you asked after her."

"Tell her I shall come every evening to inquire; tell her, too, that I shall not have a moment's peace, thinking that I am partly to blame for this. It was wrong of us, Alison; I see that now. I deserve to have something to bear as well as she, poor darling! You and Mr. Roger must not be too hard on me, for, indeed, I am as unhappy as possible; Anna will tell you so."

"I will try to forgive you," returned Alison, with a warm kiss, that evidently surprised and gratified her. "It does not make things better to be hard and bitter against people. We need not add to our own unhappiness in that way. Now I must go, please. Give my dear love to Anna; I know she will be fretting about us." And with a quick nod Alison ran upstairs.

"Well?" observed Roger, interrogatively, as she came to his side.

"I am glad you told me to go down," was her reply; "there is good in every one, and Eva certainly appeared to advantage this evening. She is really fond of Missie, and she cried so about it all. She is not a bad-hearted girl."

"No; and all this will do her a great deal of good. 'Evil is wrought by want of thought, as well as want of heart,' Allie. Now let us go to poor Missie."

Missie flushed up very much when she saw Roger, but the next moment her face grew wan and pale.

"Well," he said, cheerfully, taking her hot little hand, "this is a sad affair; but at least we may be thankful it is not worse. I almost think father looks a little better to-night; Mrs. Meyrick thought so, too. There was certainly a slight concussion of the brain last night, but this evening he seem more like himself."

"Oh, Roger!" and Missie's eyes were filling in a moment, "do you really think so?" But the last word became a sob.

"Yes, dear, and Nurse Meyrick said the same; he spoke more clear and articulately. Now," kissing her forehead, "you will be easy about him, and will try to sleep?"

"There is no sleep in my eyes," she returned, with a little of her old excitement. "Oh, Roger, you don't know what it is to be bruised and battered all over, and not to be able to turn without pain. If it were not for that I would go to him."

"Perhaps you will be able to go to-morrow," he returned, humoring her, for her flushed face and excited look made him anxious. "You will try to lie patiently until the morning, Mabel dear, will you not? Alison is so worn out, she must sleep to-night, and, indeed, we are all overtired and harassed."

"Yes, and I am the cause," she returned, restlessly. "Oh, Roger, I will not ask you to forgive me; Alison has, but then she is different. But you, of course, you can never care for me again!"

"Indeed, you are wrong, my dear little sister," he said, soothingly; "I do care for you very much, all the more that you are so unhappy. When you get well again you shall see how proud I shall be of my two sisters, and what nice times we shall have."

"Oh, no," she returned, bursting into tears, "I never expected any one to be fond of me again. I have made your life miserable, Roger; I have tormented you just for love of teasing. If I were not so wicked I should like to die, and then perhaps you would be sorry for me. If anything happens to papa, I could not live. Oh, if I could only see him, and ask him to forgive me!"

"My dear, he has forgiven you over and over again," returned Roger, in rather a husky voice, for he found all this very trying; "that is the best of it. One need never be afraid of losing a father's love, it is not to be lost, Mabel; the thing is against nature. If I sinned against father ever so, I know he must forgive me, just because I am his son."

"'I will arise and go to my father,'" murmured Alison, half to herself, but Missie heard it.

"Yes, read that to me; I have been repeating fragments of the verses all day; that is, if you are not too tired, Alison," with renewed thoughtfulness.

"Roger will read it," returned Alison, feeling the task would be good for her brother, and distrusting her own voice; and though Roger looked a little shy over it, he did not refuse.

Missie lay with closed eyes and listened, and he harassed expression passed from her face.

"Thank you; that was beautiful," she said, when he had finished. "How nicely you read, Roger! Now I will try to be good and not wake Alison. Perhaps when the light is shaded, I may drop off to sleep."

Alison was in sore need of rest by this time; her head ached as well as her limbs; but she had one more duty to perform before she laid down in the little bed that had been prepared for her in Missie's room, and that was to bid her father good-night.

He welcomed her with a smile. "I feel easier to-night," he said, and his voice was stronger. "My good nurse has made me very comfortable, and I dare say we shall both be able to sleep a little. How is Pussie?" the old name escaping from his unawares.

"I do not think she is any worse," she replied, cautiously; "but she still suffers a great deal, and she is making herself so unhappy about you."

"Tell her not to do that," he replied, with a little effort; "he need not take the blame of the accident on herself; she has enough to bear without that."

"May I give her your love, papa?"

"Oh, yes," he said, as though surprised by the question, for he knew nothing of the child's misery. "Tell her I hope she will have a good night." And then, as he seemed weary, she left him.

Missie received the message in silence, and, as the light was dim, Alison could not see her face. She fancied that just as she was dropping off to sleep there was a sound as though some one was crying; but her senses were too drowsy to take in the fact that it might be Missie sobbing in the darkness. Her last recollected thought was about Aunt Diana. Roger had promised to write a few lines from the office, and she had wondered if he had done it.

"How shocked Aunt Di will be," she thought, "and how sorry for us all!" The half-finished sentence was completed in her dream, for she dreamed that Greville was rowing them both among the water lilies, and Aunt Di was gathering roses and throwing them into her lap.

"Do not cry, child, it will all come right in time," Alison heard her say; "there is a silver lining behind every cloud, you may be sure of that." And then she woke with a start. Something, she did not know what, had disturbed her; she sat up and looked round in bewilderment. The moon was shining full into the room, and Missie's bed was empty.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Nurse Meyrick was sleeping on a couch in the dressing room. It had been placed so near the dor of communication that she had a full view of her patient. He had just sunk into a tranquil doze, and she had followed his example, when a faint sound, like an opening door, roused her, and a moment after she caught a glimpse of a white-robed figure with long, fair hair. A young girl in a loose dressing gown was standing by Mr. Merle's bed. Nurse Meyrick's quick eyes discerned that one arm was bandaged and in splints. It must be the young lady, she thought, who had been injured in the accident; perhaps she was light headed. The next minute she touched her softly.

"Come, my dear, come," she said coaxingly; "you ought not to be out of your bed at this time of night; let me help you back, there's a dear young lady," for Missie's wide, feverish eyes alarmed her.

"No, no," returned Missie, recoiling from the nurse's gentle touch. "I could not stay in bed, I could not sleep until I had seen papa. Let me stay and look at him; I will be good and not wake him." But the nurse shook her head at this.

"You must not stay," she whispered, not daring to raise her voice; "your feet are bare, and you look as bad as possible. Come, my dear, let me carry you back to your room; it will scare your father to see you standing there."

"No, no," returned Missie, shrinking still more; "I must stay with papa. Why does he look so pale, and He so still? Is he dead? No one told me he was dead. Papa!" she cried out, for she was bewildered by the dim light and her own feverish fancies. "Speak to me only one word, just to tell me you are alive."

"Oh, hush!" exclaimed the nurse; but she was too late. Mr. Merle woke up; but in his weak condition his daughter's presence did not seem to startle him.

"My dear," he said, feebly; "they ought not to have allowed this. You will make yourself ill leaving your warm bed."

"But I could not sleep," she sobbed; "I could not rest. I thought they were hiding things from me. If you had died, and I had never told you I was sorry, I should have died, too. Oh, papa, it must have killed me!"

He smiled faintly, and gathered the hot little hand in his.

"You were sorry all the time, my pet, were you not?"

"Yes, I am sorry now," creeping still closer. "I could not ask God to forgive me until you had forgiven me. Oh, papa! why do you look so kindly at me, when you know it is all through my wickedness that you are lying here? Of course, no one can love me any more."

"Not love you, Pussie! Come, come my child, fathers are not like that. I forgive you freely; everything is right between us. But, my poor darling, you are ill and suffering, and if you care to please me let nurse carry you back to bed."

"Will you let me kiss you first?"

His only answer was to stretch out his arms to her; but he wondered to see how slowly she came to him. How could he guess each movement was agony to the poor child? How she had ever managed to crawl from her bed and across the passage only she herelf knew.

"I have only one arm to put around your neck," she whispered, as her long hair fell over his face. "Dear, dear papa, if I could only bear it all!" And as he felt her tears upon his cheek he understood how her young heart was wrung with remorse and sorrow, and holding her a moment tried to comfort her, and besought God to bless his pet.

Alison was just sitting up in affright, looking around the empty room, when Nurse Meyrick appeared, carrying Missie in her arms.

"Oh, Mabel, where have you been? You have frightened me so!"

"Go to sleep, Alison," returned Missie, in a happy voice. "I have only been to see papa, and he has forgiven me, and now I can rest."

"She will be quiet now," whispered the nurse. "I have covered her up warm, and she will rest until morning." And she was right. Though Missie lay awake, feverish and full of pain, she gave no more trouble, and poor Alison was allowed to sleep undisturbed until morning.

For the next few days Missie was very ill. Her agitation of mind brought on a slight feverish attack, and when this had yielded to the doctor's remedies her weakness was excessive. Her nerves had been jarred and unstrung by the accident; and the least noise, the slamming of a door, or even a louder voice than usual, made her change color and burst into tears. It was impossible for her in her shattered state always to repress irritability. Again the old sharp tones and words recalled Missie's faulty temper. But there was this improvement—she struggled bravely against her besetting sin, and would ask pardon quite humbly of Alison. "I have been so cross to-day," she would say, with tears in her eyes; "I wish you would not be so sweet and patient with me."

"I will promise to scold when you are well enough," Alison would say, in her most cheerful manner, for she knew Missie must not be encouraged to be morbid. "Just now, darling, I can only remember you are ill, and that your poor arm is giving you trouble. I know I should be cross if I had so much to bear."

But in spite of Alison's assumed cheerfulness she was growing pale and thin. Her close confinement in Missie's room tried her; no one but Alison suited the sick girl's fancy—no one else seemed to understand her little ways. Miss Leigh's gentle mournfulness irritated her; she had never cared much for Anna, and she had lost all desire for Eva's companionship, and though her father had generously withdrawn his prohibition, Eva had only once been admitted to her room. The interview had been a little embarrassing. Eva had cried and begged Missie to forgive her, and Missie had been kind and magnanimous in her answer; but after the first few agitating minutes their talk had drifted into silence; Missie was languid and out of spirits, and Eva did not possess the art of soothing—the bond of sympathy between them seemed broken. Both of them had yet to learn that similarity of tastes and the boisterous spirits of youth do not lay the foundation of a lasting friendship. While Alison and Anna seemed to cement their intimacy more every day, as the good qualities of each became more apparent, there were symptoms that Missie and Eva would drift still further apart.

(To be continued.)

Everybody—Nobody.

"You have come to see us at a bad time," said the Best Citizen. "Everybody has gone away for the summer. I would not be here myself if it were not for some unexpected business matters."

"What do you mean?" queried the Man from Mars. "You say that everybody has gone away, and yet the streets seem to be actually crowded with people."

"Of course; how stupid of me!" returned the Best Citizen. "That is one of our idioms, you know. I mean everybody who is anybody has gone away. The workers are all here, to be sure."

"Who is anybody?" persisted the Man from Mars.

"Well, you see that is another of our idioms," responded the Best Citizen. "I hardly know how to explain it. It means anybody who amounts to anything."

"Don't the workers amount to anything?"

"Well, not in that sense. Of course they amount to a good deal in their way." The Best Citizen was beginning to feel that he was in deep water.

The Man from Mars reflected a moment. Then he said: "Anybody who has gone away for the summer is somebody, and anybody who is compelled to stay at home is nobody."

"Very clever, very clever," agreed the Best Citizen.—Success Magazine.

OLD-FASHIONED DRINKS.

Baked Buttermilk for the Complexion and How Prepared.

Buttermilk in days gone by was almost a fetish in the hands of the beauties of the times, according to the London Standard. When Marie Antoinette and her ladies rolled up the sleeves of their flowered muslins and played with churns and cream bowls in the laiterie at the petit Trianon, the buttermilk craze was at its height.

Unguents for the face as well as the potions in which they indulged were probably responsible for the lovely complexions which made poets compose odes to the bloom of their cheeks and painters almost implore on their knees that disdainful beauties should relent so far as to have their charms immortalized. In baked buttermilk one of the strongholds of the complexion was said to lie. In a few days it worked wonders, while perseverance in its use during the whole of the summer months would preserve the skin smooth and soft as a roseleaf.

Where the sour-milk prophet errs today is in insufficiently diluting the buttermilk, the proportions in the genuine old recipes of the past being that of a gill to a pint of fresh milk. This was poured into a jar with a fitted lid and placed before the open range during the whole of a day.

By night the milk has turned to the consistency or clotted cream, in which state it was poured from a height from one vessel to another until, by some magical means, the contents had gone back once more to the smoothness of fresh milk. It was then sweetened with cane sugar and inclosed finally in a stone bottle and corked down tightly and placed before the fire, but not too near, for five or six hours. At first baked buttermilk does not always appear particularly pleasing, the mere fact that it is distinctly sour making it an acquired taste.

If it was not acid, however, it was scarcely considered to have been perfectly made, while if it effervesced when the bottle was opened it formed not only a more refreshing summer drink, particularly when well iced, but was thought to be particularly efficacious as a means of improving the complexion.

Sermons of the Week

Impossible Ideals.

Impossible ideals make for lawlessness rather than for righteousness and the betterment of life.—Rev. H. Martin, Disciple, Brooklyn.

The Worldly Man.

The man who permits himself to be the victim of his sense is what the Scriptures truly denominate the worldly man.—Rev. E. L. Powell, Presbyterian, Louisville.

Framing God.

God is too big to be shut up in any set of definitions; for definition necessarily means limitation. The moment you define you confine. No one can frame God.—Rev. George Thomas Dowling, Episcopal, Brooklyn.

Perils of Play.

The perils of play lurk in our lack of self-control, in our failure to require more of ourselves than friends and custom do, and in our refusal to discriminate.—Rev. Orville A. Petty, Congregationalist, Aurora, Ill.

Unseen Forces.

How despairing we grow of the future! We ask, "What of to-morrow?" We see the menace of great evils in society and in the state, and we grow discouraged. But that is because while evil is so conspicuous the forces that are set for its overthrow are invisible.—Rev. James Avery Norris, Presbyterian, Glen Cove, N. Y.

God in the World.

We have more of God in the world now than in Bible days. Then God had to break through nature by a miracle in order to be recognized; now we realise that nature is God. Then He was over us, God, transcendent; now He is God immanent, Immanuel, God with us.—Rev. Frank Crane, Unitarian, Worcester.

Moral Constitution.

Let a man build up his moral constitution by thinking noble thoughts, derived from the habitual practice of reading good books, performing noble deeds, association with pure women and honorable men. Let a man walk in the spirit and he will not fulfill the lusts of the flesh.—Rev. William C. Stinaman, Reformed, New York City.

Unconscious Deterioration.

First the mining, then the explosion! First the moral muscles grow flabby, then the helpless weakness before temptation. First the gray hairs here and there sprinkled upon him, and he knows it not; finally the spiritual senility and swift oblivion. This is the course of unconscious deterioration.—Rev. Charles F. Aked, Baptist, New York City.

The Future Church.

The logic of events clearly proves that the only Christian church that will finally prevail must be that of ancient Rome, while modern Protestantism will continue to be torn into shreds by opposing parties that struggle beneath its banner. The logic of Protestantism is individual liberty and intellectual agnosticism.—Rev. Henry Frank, Independent, New York City.

Smiles of The Day

Probably She Meant It.

Lucile, a carefully-brought-up little girl of 5 years, returned from her first party in great glee.

"I was a good girl, mamma," she announced, "and talked nice all the time."

"Did you remember to say something pleasant to Mrs. Townsend just before leaving?" her mother asked.

"Oh, yes, I did," was the enthusiastic reply. "I smiled and said, 'I enjoyed myself, Mrs. Townsend; I had a lots better dinner than I thought I'd have.'"—The Delineator.

Pertinent Query.

Gyer—What's the trouble—can't he write his name?

Kid—Say, shuffer, would ye mind taking me an' me lady fren' fer a whirl in yer cart? I'm thinkin' of buyin' one jest like it.

Tim's First Impression.

Little Tim had never enjoyed a glimpse of the country. All his little life had been passed among the crooked courts of a great city. One day the teacher took him out for a jaunt in the woodlands.

"Tim," she said, impressively, as they stood on the crest of a hill, "isn't that a beautiful sunset! Just look at the great yellow orb, surrounded by the white, fleecy clouds."

Tim gazed at the beautiful picture for a few moments, and then answered:

"Yessum. It looks exactly like a fried egg."

Invisible.

"Say, sonny," he inquired, "didn't I engage your brother three hours ago to deliver a message and return with the answer?"

"Believe you did, boss," responded the messenger, nonchalantly.

"Well, he said he would go like the wind, and I haven't seen him since."

"And you won't see him, boss. Did you ever see the wind?"

What, Indeed?

"This dress doesn't suit my complexion."

"Why don't you change it?"

"Very well, if you think we can afford it I will see my dressmaker about it to-day."

"What in the world has your dressmaker to do with changing your complexion?"—Houston Post.

Her Scheme.

"He married a woman much older than himself."

"Yes, but she'll soon change that. Two years from now he'll be four years older than she is, according to her story."—Detroit Free Press.

Hopeless Case.

He—I lost my silk umbrella yesterday at the club.

She—Too bad! But you'll get it back, won't you? Aren't your initials on it?

He—Well, come to think of it, there are some initials on it, but they aren't mine.

The Fickle Bunch.

Said She—Yes, I have a large number of friends in society.

Said He—Then you haven't been in society long, eh?

Should Stay Down.

"You Americans shouldn't have much trouble keeping your meals on sea voyages," observed the foreigner.

"Why not?"

"Because you bolt them down."—Kansas City Times.

Chasing Lisa.

"Aw," boasted the English nobleman, in the smoking room of the steamer, "my father followed the hounds for years."

"So did mine," laughed the little man in the checkered cap.

"Aw, in England?"

"No, in America. He used to play the part of Simon Legree in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'"

Way of the World.

"I understand the Neweds are having trouble," remarked the spinster boarder. "Some people take her part, and some others side with him."

"And I suppose," growled the scanty-haired bachelor at the pedal extremity of the mahogany, "there are a few eccentric people who mind their own business."

Bad Luck.

"Mother," said 5-year-old Jack, "how much older than you is father?"

"Just thirteen years," replied the unsuspecting parent.

"Well, mother," seriously continued the child, "the next time you marry, don't marry a man thirteen years older than you; don't you know it is bad luck?"—The Delineator.

Barred.

Little Francis, 7 years old, was being questioned in the parlor by his oldest sister's beau as to what constituted his studies at school. "Reading, writing, spelling and arithmetic," promptly replied the little fellow.

"Do you know anything about vulgar fractions?" was asked.

"Yes," replied the indignant child; "I know they are something you oughtn't to be talking about before sister!"—The Delineator.

Always Busy.

"Any retail places around here?" asked the salesman in the strange town.

"There's a woman's club over there in the town hall," drawled the old postmaster.

"Great Scott! And what do they retail?"

"Gossip, young man, gossip."

Wherein They Differ.

Little Willie—Say, pa, what is the difference between a village and a hamlet?

Pa—In a village, my son, a shop is called a store, and in a hamlet a store is called an emporium.

His Only Criticism.

Simkins—Are you partial to the late songs of the day?

Timkins—I probably would be if the girl next door didn't transform them into the late songs of the night.

Not Ambitious.

"Had you no higher ambition in life than picking pockets?" asked the visitor at the prison.

"No, ma'am," answered convict 41144. "I never had no hankerin' t' be a porchclimber."

How About the Diamonds.

Manager—Hurry up, or you'll miss the train.

Actress—I can't find my diamonds nor my pocketbook.

Manager—Let 'em go.

Actress—But my pocketbook had nearly seven dollars in it.

His Business.

"Name?" asked the judge.

"Skovitch," replied the witness.

"Age?"

"Thirty-eight."

"Where born?"

"Russia."

"Business?"

"Picking up."

"I didn't ask you how business is, but what your business is?"

"And I said picking up; I'm a ragpicker."—Yonkers Statesman.

One Is Illegal.

"What is the difference between making money and earning money?" asked the youth.

"Sometimes the difference is a trip to the penitentiary for counterfeiting," answered the home-grown philosopher.

Might Have Missed the Last.

"I suppose you have read Shakespeare's works?" said the young man from the east.

"Yes, all of them," replied Miss Fitz of St. Louis, "that is, unless he has written something within the past year."

A Generous Girl.

"Estelle told Spenderly she thought too much of him to marry him. Oh, she was a friend to Spenderly all right."

"What makes you so positive?"

"The habitual expression on the face of the man she did marry proves it."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

About the Same.

"Always falling out of your airship," remarked the friend. "Why, I am astonished. You told me you were at home in the machine."

"That's just it," sighed the henpecked inventor, "I am always falling out at home."

How He Won Her.

The poor but otherwise honest young man had just proposed to the heiress.

"Has my wealth anything to do with your love for me?" she asked.

"Nothing whatever," he replied.

"Then I'm yours," continued the heiress. "I'd rather marry a liar than a fool."

INTOLERABLE ITCHING.

Fearful Eczema All Over Baby's Face — Professional Treatment Failed—Perfect Cure by Cuticura.

"When my little girl was six months old I noticed small red spots on her right cheek. They grew so large that I sent for the doctor, but instead of helping the eruption, his ointment seemed to make it worse. Then I went to a second doctor who said it was eczema. He also gave me an ointment which did not help either. The disease spread all over the face and the eyes began to swell. The itching grew intolerable and it was a terrible sight to see. I consulted doctors for months, but they were unable to cure the baby. I paid out from $20 to $30 without relief. One evening I began to use the Cuticura Remedies. The next morning the baby's face was all white instead of red. I continued until the eczema entirely disappeared. Mrs. P. E. Gumbin, Sheldon, Ia., July 13, 1908."

Walking on Your Hat.

"Nothing is wasted in this house," is the proud remark which you may often hear from the lips of an expert housekeeper. It is a boast, however, that few people could really justify. Take the case of a wornout derby hat. In the majority of instances this discarded article of headgear finds its way to the rubbish heap, or perhaps into the hands of a passing tramp. If only people were aware of the fact, the most excellent felt soles for the inside of their boots and slippers are thus being discarded. These soles can be cut from the sides of an old hat and are much more comfortable than the ordinary ones made.

In Use For Over Thirty Years

CASTORIA

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

Start the New Year Right!

START the new year with a clean mind and a clean body!

Most people are very neat and clean in their outward appearance, but how about the inside?

Are you clean inside?

And if not, how can you face the New Year with clean thoughts, clear intelligence, a fair, just, and bright mind, and your full share of capacity for work and enjoyment.

* * *

The holidays are over and everybody's had a good time—perhaps a little too much of a good time. Over-eating and over-drinking have been the rule ever since Thanksgiving Day.

Many people get little exercise in winter and breathe much stuffy, over-heated inside air.

At the same time they eat too much rich and indigestible food, while fresh fruit and fresh vegetables are scarce in the market. So stomach and bowels are liable to be over-taxed.

* * *

Clog up, stretch and paralyze the large intestine by over-stuffing it with undigested food, so it can not carry off the useless refuse, and it "backs up" the sewage, and compels the small intestine to absorb the poison of decaying matter, instead of wholesome nourishment.

That's what must happen. Isn't it plain as day?

What's the result?

Nearly everybody "gains in flesh" in the winter time, but it's pussy fat—not healthy flesh and muscle. The liver gets inactive; the bile doesn't "work off"; the eyes get yellow; the skin gets dead like putty and pale like dough, with boils, pimples, blackheads, liver-spots to break the monotony.

Dizziness, headaches, blurred vision, foul breath, sleeplessness and a temper like a wild cat make such persons very pleasant company to themselves and others.

* * *

But, you say—"I'll take a course of Spring medicine to clean me out next April."

Not considering your duty to yourself and family, isn't it certain that to leave the body full of poison all winter, and then suddenly attempt to force out all impurities by one violent attack is dangerous, absurd and unreasonable?

* * *

Keep clean inside all the time. That's the simple solution.

If you can not diet, or keep your mechanism going by proper exercise, the self-evident alternative is to take Cascarets, the sweet, fragrant, harmless little vegetable tablets, that "act like exercise" on your bowels, and gently but powerfully clean out and disinfect the whole digestive canal.

A Cascaret every night before going to bed will "work while you sleep" and make you "feel fine in the morning."

If you have been neglecting yourself for some time, take a Cascaret night and morning and break up the "constipated habit" without acquiring a "cathartic habit."

* * *

Cascarets are sold by all druggists, 10c. 25c and 50c. The 10c size trial box is a neat fit for the vest pocket or lady's purse.

Be sure to get the genuine, with the "long-tailed C" on the box and the letters "CCC" on each tablet. They are never sold in bulk.

Mrs. Lola Meyers and baby spent a few days this week with her husband at Auburn Junction.

Willie and Gladys Hathaway of Garrett were guests the past week of Clayton and Russel Hathaway.

On another page we print the list of articles to be sold at B. W. Dwyer's, on January 8, and D. L. Krabill, January 15.

The Misses Mae and Lola McCain returned Monday from New Haven, where they were the guests of friends the past week.

Charlie Shepard, formerly of Hicksville and well known to many of our citizens, died at his home in Shelby, Ohio, last Friday. He was buried in the Hicksville Cemetry, Sunday.

Geo. Milliman tinsels cards to order. Fine line on now.

The Pennsylvania railway system has adopted concrete for telegraph poles and will fill the requirements as the demand calls for them with concrete believing they will last for many years and be cheaper than the wood poles.

Frank Lothammer returned home last week after a five weeks stay with relatives at Payne, Ohio. He brought with him a specimen of corn raised there this year which has been placed in our window. The ears are of good length and we will say that it is good, but that is a corn country more so than in our community and we think we have corn on display equally as good.

Editor Tribune—

Dear Sir:

I notice in a recent issue of the Tribune the statement that a certain man of this (DeKalb) county, has voted in the same precinct for sixty years, and has never voted anywhere else, and is eighty one years old.

That is a remarkable case surely, but I can do him a few better. I have voted in the same township sixty two years, and never voted anywhere else, and will be eighty four years old next August, the Lord willing, and have lived on the same farm seventy years." R. F. COBURN,

St Joe, Ind.

Mr. Coburn's record is surely remarkable and highly honorable. To our personal knowledge he has always been a fine citizen of his county; a pioneer and a gentleman of the old school. DeKalb county contains no more worthy citizens in her limits. —Ed.—Hicksville Tribune.

An implement dealer by the name of Baughman at Wolf Lake has invented a shoe for corn planters which can be removed when worn out by the farmer himself and a new one put on without more expense than saving buying a whole shoe. A firm in Illinois will manufacture the shoe for the trade.

A bill is being drafted by the Indiana Brewers association to present to the next general assembly, it is understood. It will provide for a license fee of not more than $800 a year and the number of saloons are to be limited to one saloon for every four hundred population. The bill will also provide a saloon keeper convicted of a violation of law shall have his license suspended and for a second offense shall be revoked and the holder prohibited from entering the business for a period of two years. Heavy fines for violations are also provided.

WCTU Meeting

A very pleasant meeting of the W. C. T. U. was held at the home of Mrs Jennie White, last Thursday afternoon. A short program consisting of scripture reading, prayer and song was carried out after which the time was given to the national delegate from this district, Mrs. Edna Smith of Ray, Ind. Mrs. Smith is a pleasant speaker and gave a vivid description of the trip to Denver, and the report of the convention was portrayed in a manner which encouraged the hearts of the W. C. T. U. workers and inspired them with greater zeal for future work. The report occupied one hour and while the speaker rested for a short time, Helen Patterson rendered a splendid recitation entitled "The Result of Treating". After adjournment, light refreshments were served. Guests numbering about twenty were present, and at a late hour each repaired to their several homes feeling that the afternoon had been one profitably spent.

Makes A Purchase

J. W. Henderson, the ex-recorder, purchased from the Shutt estate, twenty acres of land near Spencerville between town and the station. His son, Charles, purchased seven acres in the same locality, thus making one hundred acres of the old Shutt farm they have acquired. J. W. will remain in Auburn and superintend the farming. Just across the road is ninety-four acres making with his son a farm of one hundred and ninety-four acres. Mr. Henderson has another farm in the county.

Going Dry

State wide prohibition went into effect January 1 in three southern states—North Carolina, Mississippi and Alabama. Georgia is the only other state wherein statutory prohibition exists, the law having been in operation one year.

A new law which seeks to regulate the liquor traffic in Louisiana became effective to-day, and although the law is not so sweeping in its terms as a state-wide measure, prohibitionists contend that if it is strictly enforced it will drive the saloons out of the remaining saloon strongholds. Having won their state-wide fights in four states, the anti-saloon forces have greatly enlarged the south's "dry" area, and they are now lining up for early campaigns in several other states.

Trappers living along some of the down state rivers and streams say the present winter will be the mildest in the history of that section. They base their belief on the fact that the pelts of the animals they have caught are in poorer condition than ever before. The fur of the minks and other animals is shorter and thinner, which is an infallible sign of an open winter, they say. The fur is so poor this year that it is almost valueless and they are finding hard work in disposing of the furs. During the recent cold snap quite a good many rats were caught in the streams about St. Joe and the fur was a good quality.

Held Citizens at Bay by Shooting.

Five robbers dynamited the bank at Wellston, Okla., and after exchanging many shots with the citizens escaped with $5,000. No one was hurt. The robbers, heavily armed, rode into Wellston after midnight. They erected a barbed-wire barricade around the bank and while some members of the gang went to work on the bank safe others stood guard. The citizens were soon up in arms and a lively exchange of shots with the robbers followed. The robbers were well armed and protected and for two hours they stood the citizens [illegible] while their comrades worked on [illegible] vault. When they [illegible] the money

Beginning October 19, 1909, they are to be placed in a college situated within 100 miles of Paris.

Twenty-Seven Dead Taken from Mine.

The latest news received at Norfolk & Western Railroad Company headquarters in Roanoke, Va., from the Lick Branch coal mine disaster is to the effect that twenty-seven bodies have been removed. Eighteen miners have crawled out unaided and five others have been brought out alive by rescue parties. It is now believed that from thirty-five to fifty remain in the mine and there is no hope entertained that any of them is alive.

Wabash County, Indiana, Votes Dry.

The "dry" forces were victorious in the special election held in Wabash County, Indiana, under the county option law. The majority was 889. The "wets" carried Wabash city by 188. A heavy vote was cast throughout the county and the rural vote favored the prohibition of saloons from the county. Noble Township, in which Wabash is located, was the only one that voted "wet."

WORLD'S GREATEST DISASTER

ALL ITALY STUNNED BY EXTENT OF CALAMITY

Province of Calabria Scene of Awful Engulfing Seismic Disturbance.

MANY THOUSANDS MEET DEATH

Sicily in Ruins and Entire Kingdom Terrorized, Fearing Greater Disaster May Come.

One hundred and fifty thousand persons of a population of 1,750,000 in the Italian departments of Calabria and Sicily devastated by the earthquake—one in every twelve inhabitants—are dead in the most disastrous catastrophe of modern times, in which Reggio, a city of 50,000, vanished from the face of the earth, leaving but five mad survivors. Another city was almost entirely washed into the sea and the whole face of a nation was changed in the space of thirty-two seconds. The measure of havoc cannot accurately be [illegible] No accurate figures on the [illegible]tainable, but apparent[illegible]es place the fatalities [illegible] The calamity is [illegible]istory of the [illegible] near the [illegible]ce no word [illegible] deemed reason to [illegible] no survivors to describe [illegible] fate. The destruction of property could not be as great as at San Francisco, for Messina and Reggio, the two principal cities destroyed, were not rich or magnificent from the metropolitan point of view.

Face of Country Is Altered.

As a great cataclysm of nature, however, this disaster is on a far vaster scale than the California phenomenon. The whole face of the country and the coast line have been altered. Even Scylla and Charybdis have changed the positions they have occupied since Aenas' legendary voyage. The three provinces where the greatest damage was done were Messina and Catania, in Sicily, and Reggio di Calabria, on the mainland. They comprise about 4,400 square miles. The rock of Charybdis now blocks the entrance to the strait of Messina. Several hundred persons perished and much damage was done outside of these provinces, but within them the devastation was so complete that scarcely a human habitation remains.

Upheaval Lasts 32 Seconds.

All accounts agree that the time occupied by nature's gigantic spasms was but thirty-two seconds. Some minutes later a great wave completed the havoc in the ill fated coast towns. The violence of the shock seems to have been unprecedented except by volcanic eruptions within a limited area. The buildings of Messina were not merely shaken down—their foundations literally were yanked from beneath them to one side or to the other, until they toppled from the perpendicular and fell in ruins alongside their original sites. That was the experience of Messina. That of Reggio, on the opposite side of the strait, must have been more violent, for scarcely one stone remains on another in that once flourishing city.

Chaotic Rocks Replace City.

Warships ordered to relieve the survivors were unable to approach the coast, owing to the changed configuration of the straits of Messina. Ultimately a torpedo boat ran close to the coast, but was unable to discover a trace of the city. Where a few days before stood the homes and works of men and busy streets there was found nothing but chaotic rocks and earth. The city had vanished as completely as Aladdin's palace under the magician's spell. Observations indicate that Reggio was completely swallowed by the earth's collapsing beneath it and the yawning site was filled by the sea which advanced in a huge wave there, as at Messina. Only five of the city's 50,000 inhabitants have been accounted for. These unhappy wretches reached Cattanzaro and Palmi half demented by fright. One of these was an army officer who telegraphed to Rome that the city had been entirely destroyed and that the dead were numberless.

The ministry of marine at Rome received wireless reports of the obstruction of the strait of Messina, showing its safe navigation to be impossible until it is recharted, while its future navigation is likely to be extremely difficult. The tidal wave wrecked the lighthouses in the strait, including Faro beacon, and they crashed into the sea. The news caused a deep impression in Rome, for its consequences from commercial and military points of view will be incalculable.

Other towns and villages on both sides of the strait of Messina have been leveled to the ground and nothing but ruins are left to indicate where they formerly stood.

Messina Warned Often.

Messina experienced a similar disaster in 1788. She had then the same preliminary warnings during the previous four or five years that she had recently in 1905 and 1907. Both Messina and Reggio are on the seismic line of contact or boundary between the primary and secondary formations which separate Mount Etna and Mount Vesuvius. It is a veritable storm center of earthquakes, yet Messina stayed for this last lesson in the light of modern scientific knowledge. Messina probably will not rise again from her ruins and ashes.

This last overwhelming calamity will alter the future history of Sicily and southern Italy. It will be regarded as certain that a considerable portion of the population of this fair land will bow before the wrath of the gods and seek homes elsewhere. Next to Italy itself, America will feel the effect of this calamity more than any other country, for a large proportion of the stricken population will seek refuge there as soon as the means of flight can be secured.

HISTORY MADE DURING THE YEAR OF GRACE 1908

Record Is of Change and Death, but Also of Peace and Prosperity.

NATIONS HAVE NEW RULERS.

Many Persons Known in Statecraft, Politics, Music and Letters Pass Away.

The year 1908, like most of those preceding it, has brought about many changes in all parts of the world. Death has taken rulers and governments have been changed, men and women of prominence and achievement in many lines have passed into the silent hereafter, fire and flood have levied their toll upon human life and property, greed and hate have incited to grave crime in numerous instances. But the record is not all dark. Man's activities along peaceful ways have gone steadily forward, achievement has made decided headway, the quiet lives of the majority of earth's people have moved on unvexed by war, pestilence or famine, and a grateful material prosperity seems to be the portion of most of the civilized nations.

Early in February the king and crown prince of Portugal were assassinated in a street of Lisbon and the crown passed to a young son and brother, the present King Manuel. The deaths, in November, of the Emperor and the Dowager Empress of China caused a change in the ruling head of the Celestial empire. A new president has more recently taken hold of affairs in Hayti, Bulgaria has declared itself independent of Turkey, and the last-named country itself has made radical innovations tending toward a constitutional government.

The necrology of the year is memorable for the number of notable men and women of prominence in the world of art, letters and music who have passed away. Among those to succumb during 1908 were ex-President Grover Cleveland, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, ex-premier of England; Tomas Estrada Palma, Cuba's first president; Bishop Henry C. Potter and Rev. Morgan Dix of New York, Ira D. Sankey, Pablo de Sarasate, August Wilhelmj, Edmund Clarence Stedman, "Ouida," Joel Chandler Harris, Murat Halstead, Bronson Howard, Victorien Sardou, Louise Chandler Moulton, Harriet Hosmer, Chas. Emory Smith and Wm. B. Allison.

A destructive theater fire and panic in Boyertown, Pa., the burning of a school house in a Cleveland suburb, mine explosions, forest fires in Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota, and storms and floods in various parts of the country caused the loss of many lives.

The year witnessed the starting of Admiral Evans' fleet of warships on its triumphal tour of the Pacific.

The horrible developments upon the murder farm of Mrs. Belle Gunness, near LaPorte, Ind., the unlawful activities of the night riders in Tennessee and Kentucky, and the race riots in Springfield, Ill., are dark spots upon the record of the year.

The principal events of 1908 may be thus epitomized:

Operation Reforms Drunkard.

By a simple operation on the head, removing pressure on the brain, caused by an injury, Dr. Herbert L. Northrop of Philadelphia has changed a man from a drunkard and a thief to an honest, industrious man, respected by his employers. The patient declares that his desire for drink and theft has entirely disappeared and during twenty-two months he has lived an upright life and been twice promoted by his employers. He was a man of good habits when at the age of 48 a timber struck him on the head, causing contusion of the scalp and a hematoma in the upper frontal region close to the middle line on the right side. He was unconscious for sixty seconds. During the twelve years following he developed drinking and stealing habits, neglected his family and was finally discharged from a good position for drunkenness and for misusing the company's funds. The operation was then performed, and after twenty-two months of well doing with no relapses, Dr. Northrop announces a complete cure.

A Wonderful Fossil Bed.

An expedition directed by Prof. H. F. Osborn of the American Museum of Natural History has recently returned from the Fayoum desert in Egypt laden with new skeletons of prehistoric animals. The Fayoum district is the bed of an ancient river, and in the sands are found the bones of all kinds of animals mixed indiscriminately. They are so soft that they can be removed only by pouring shellac over them. One of the most important finds is the skull of the giant arsinoitherium. The dominating feature is a long pair of sharp-pointed horns protruding upward and outward from the snout for nearly two feet. This animal was the brute king of its time. The body combined the shape of the elephant and the rhinoceros. The monster was named after the Egyptian queen Arsinoe, famed for her beauty. The animal stood six feet high and nearly ten feet long. The feet were adapted to walking on sandy or sinking ground.

Readers Want Facts First.

Prof. W. D. Scott of Northwestern university, in his new book on the "Psychology of Advertising," gives the results of a set of questions sent to 4,000 readers of the modern daily newspaper. From the answers sent by 3,000 men he has reached the conclusion that readers do not care to have a paper serve as interpreter of the news or as advocate of the truth. All that they want is a brief but comprehensive publication of the news. In his opinion that editor will be most appreciated who selects news most wisely and presents the unvarnished truth in all matters in which the constituency are interested. He adds: "The ideal paper would have to do only with facts. The news would have to be well written, but the interest would be mainly in the news itself and not in the reporter's or the publisher's views concerning it." The answers showed that local news leads all other features in interest. Then came in order named, political, sporting and financial.

Russell on the Firing Line.

In the November Everybodys, Charles E. Russell, known in two continents as one of the greatest of muckrakers, and who has been criticised for not doing something constructive, comes to the front with three specific proposals for civic betterment. They are: To establish a new standard of public service by discontinuing the practice of paying our public officials salaries, to abolish the political boss by establishing everywhere the system of direct nominations and "to clear our minds of the singular superstition that so long obsessed us concerning the public utility franchise" by adopting the simple plan of the annual lease. His belief is that "the best way to abolish the muckraker is to abolish muck."

The origin of the Great Banks of Newfoundland is said to have been in the boulders carried down by icebergs. The bank is 600 miles long and 120 broad.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

William Lohr, aged 15 months, son of Henry Lohr, of Winamac, died from being poisoned by drinking a liquid used to color butter.

Christmas plowing in Clay County is the latest. More ground has been stirred the last two weeks than at any other time in December in the county's history.

Struck by a falling tree and severely injured, John Dill, of West Township, Marshall County, lay in a woods for forty hours. His left leg was broken in three places. His condition was discovered by accident. He was then in a serious condition.

John Hively, living near Indian Lake Noble County, was chopping wood and severely cut his foot, and has been unable to walk since, and will be laid up for some time to come. He lives so far from a doctor, and his foot bled so badly, that he sewed it up himself and thinks he did a good job.

A movement has been started at Sullivan to purchase two bloodhounds to be used in trailing thieves, and to do away with the night watchman who has been patrolling the business districts in recent years. Merchants are behind the plan, and have raised practically enough money to buy two dogs.

Mrs. Emma Steele, of Greenfield, has brought suit against John F. Spaunhurst and Charles M. LaRue, of Indianapolis, doing business under the name of the Spaunhurst Institute of Osteopathy, demanding $10,000 damages. She alleges her health has been permanently injured by the Institute's system of treatment.

It was thought a plea of insanity would be made in the defense of Joseph Copeland, the Milton man who, it is charged, brutally beat his wife. It is alleged that he became incensed when she told him she had joined church. Copeland spent Christmas in jail and his peculiar actions indicate that either he is demented or is feigning it.

Henry Bundy, of Charlottesville, who is just recovering from typhoid fever, has suddenly lost his mind, and was taken to the insane hospital at Indianapolis. He is the third in the family to have typhoid fever in the last few months. His mother and sister died of the disease recently. One of his brothers was killed while out hunting a year ago Christmas day.

Dead fish in great numbers have been found lodged at a dam in the Mississinewa river, near Matthews, and the fear is expressed that strawboard plants above Matthews have been guilty of turning refuse into the river without awaiting a freshet to sweep the refuse away. The river at this point has had an inky appearance for several days, where, for months previous, the water had been clear.

The large flouring mill in Milan, owned by John F. Heimsath, of Napoleon, was destroyed recently by fire. The elevator contained 3,000 bushels of wheat, 1,000 bushels of which was placed there by farmers on deposit. This was the oldest mill in Ripley County, and was established in 1852. There were sixty barrels of flour in the mill ready for shipment. The loss is estimated at $10,000, and was not covered by insurance.

Upon completion of the oil well drilled at Oakland City last week it was found to be the best oiler yet opened in the field. The drillers have discovered an unusually heavy sand, having entered it to a depth of forty-eight feet and then ceased drilling without going entirely through it. After being shot the production of the well is estimated at from 100 to 300 barrels. This town is elated, as it proves a large field and indicates that the oil belt will extend nearer the city than at first expected.

J. C. Kimmell, Noble County chairman of the Agricultural Society, has given notice that there will be five farmers' institutes held in Noble County in January, as follows: LaOtto, Tuesday, January 19; Wolf Lake, Wednesday, January 20; Cromwell, Thursday, January 21; Cosperville, Friday, January 22; Albion, January 23. All of those meetings will be addressed by J. B. Burris, of Cloverdale, Putnam County, and Miss Ethel E. Berry, of Jewel City, Kan., will address the meetings at Cromwell, Cosperville and Albion.

Some of the troubles which Louis Glenn, a missionary, is encountering while publishing a monthly paper at Fayoum, Egypt, are rather extraordinary to say the least. Mr. Glenn formerly lived in Hasleton. His publication is chiefly a religious paper. Each article in the paper is printed in two languages, one for those who read English and the other for those who read and talk in the language used by the Arabs. Since his ten years' stay in Africa Mr. Glenn has acquired a thorough knowledge of the speech used in the Nile valley. Until he became familiar with the language of the natives, the publisher's life was one continuous round of trouble and error.

C. W. Kimmell, of Kendallville, Senator-elect in the coming Legislature, has resigned the agency of a big insurance company in order that he may be untrammelled in his legislative work.

Mrs. Maud Stonecipher has asked for a decree of separation from Dr. Alva E. Stonecipher, a practicing physician of South Bend. She demands $75,000 alimony, alleged the defendant is worth $200,000. Both parties have been twice married.

Dr. I. Nutt Plummer, the oldest and wealthiest physician in Shoals, dropped dead from heart failure as he was entering his home.

More than 1,000 men entered the army in the last six months through the Terre Haute recruiting station. This gives the station the sixth place among cities of the country, New York Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis and San Francisco being ahead.

A. Metzer, a millionaire and for many years engaged in the manufacture of soap in Evansville, announced that during the holidays for one week he will feed all horses in the city where the owners are unable to [illegible] feed. He has a large supply of feed on hand.

Farmers near Oakland City are having much trouble this winter protecting trees from the rabbits. The animals gnaw the bark from the tree, killing it. Rabbits are unusually numerous, and on account of the restrictions placed on hunting few of them are killed.

Thomas Myers, his wife and two small children were found living in a thin tent in a woods north of Marion. The woman and children had not sufficient clothing to keep them warm. The husband and father said he was unable to obtain work. The case has been reported to the Associated Charities Organization of that city.

Mrs. Sarah Ann Campbell, 73 years old, was burned to death at her home in Springerville. She was alone at her home at the time, and it is thought her dress caught fire while she was asleep in a chair near a stove. Neighbors saw smoke coming from the house and hurrying to the inside found the woman's charred body sitting upright in the chair. Mrs. Campbell's husband died a short time ago.

A Men's [illegible] Class, composed of members of [illegible] denominations, has been organized [illegible] Sivan, W. E. Woods is president, [illegible] Douthitt, vice president, David Crawley, Jr., secretary, I. L. Thompson assistant secretary, Joseph P. Duffy treasurer and R. A. Plunkett teacher. The officers are all business or professional men and each of the five denominations in town is represented in the enrollment list.

Albert G. Newsom, a farmer, who lives near Columbus, estimated that he had lost 150 bushels of corn from the field, so he decided to watch. He sent two of his men to the field, where they made themselves as comfortable as possible. In a short time William and Daniel Shatto, it is charged, drove into the field and began shucking corn. As soon as they had loaded some of the grain in the wagon they were captured and an officer called from Columbus. The men were placed in jail and charged with larceny.

Charles Warner, of Elwood, who spends much time hunting and trapping, while going over his traps recently, made a queer catch. He chased a rabbit into a muskrat hole on the bank of Pipe creek and dug it out. When he found the bunny at the bottom of the hole it was squealing loudly, and when pulled forth was found to be wrapped securely in the embrace of a large blue racer snake. The snake and the rabbit were brought to Elwood, and are now being exhibited in the show window of a local store. The snake was in a semi-comatose state.

Thieves entered the smokehouse of Nathan J. Leisure, a wealthy farmer and banker of Elwood, and carried away five dressed hogs, six large sides of meat, eight hams and six cans of lard, valued at $100. A wagon having a peculiar tire was tracked, and John E. Custar was taken into custody. The wagon was not located, and only two cans of lard were found at the Custer home. Custer is held in jail without bond until several clews can be run down. Farmers in the Leisure neighborhood have been much annoyed recently by thieves who do business on the wholesale plan, hauling away in a single night as many as 100 chickens from one farm, taking loads of hay, wood and almost anything that is loose.

Benjamin Mullican, of Macy, had a surprise for a party of rabbit-hunters a few days ago in the way of a rabbit-hunting pig. He carried a sack with him and told his companions that the bag contained a ferret. When the party had tracked a rabbit to its hole in the ground and Mr. Mullican drew the pig from the sack his companions were much surprised and hooted the idea that the pig would go into the hole and chase out the rabbit. But his pigship did that very thing, and the hunters were so surprised that not one of them managed to kill the rabbit and all five or them shot at it. The pig is two years old and is known as a dwarf hog. Mr. Mullican bought the hog a few months ago while visiting in Iowa. Since returning home Mr. Mullican has taught the little animal many tricks, rabbit-hunting being one of them. The pig is about the size of a 2-months-old kitten.

Taylor C. Shobe, a horseman well known all over northern Indiana, died a few days ago at his home in Ligonier. Mr. Shobe had his spine injured in a runaway accident a year ago and did not recover.

Owing to the failure of natural gas the Fort Wayne Gas Company has dismissed all its employes in the Blackford County field save two men. The pumping stations were abandoned some time ago for the reason that there was no gas to pump.

FRENCH PRESIDENT ATTACKED.

Man Throws Arms About Fallieres and Tries to Pull Beard.

While Armand Fallieres, the President of France, accompanied by M. Ramondou, his secretary, and Colonel Lasson, military attache at the Elysee palace, was taking a morning stroll near the Rue de l'Etoile in Paris, a poorly clad individual, who evidently had been lying in wait, suddenly jumped upon the President from behind and threw his arms about M. Fallieres' neck in an effort to seize his beard. Colonel Lasson and Secretary Ramondou sprang to the assistance of the President, dragged off his assailant and turned him over to two special detectives who had been following the party on bicycles. President Fallieres' cane was broken in the struggle, but beyond a scratch on the ear he was not injured and insisted on continuing his walk.

As the detectives slipped the handcuffs on the man he cried: "I am unarmed. I simply wanted to pull the President's beard." At the station house the President's assailant proved to be Jean Mattis, a cafe waiter, 24 years old and a native of the department of Savoie. Medals of General Mercier, the former Minister of War; stamps bearing the head of the Duke of Orleans, a card of membership in the Patrie Francaise and other Royalist documents were found on his person. During the examination Mattis boasted of being a Royalist and talked confusedly of having done his "duty" and obeyed the dictates of his "conscience." Quantities of Royalist reactionary literature were found by the police when they ransacked his residence.

The investigation reveals the fact that Mattis was in close relation with the Royalist organization, and this gives color to rumors that he was the instrument of a Royalist plot. Serious evidence in this direction, however, is lacking up to the present time.

INVITES TWO NATIONS.

President Roosevelt Asks Canada and Mexico to Aid in Conservation.

Announcement has been made at the White House in Washington of a proposed plan for a conference looking toward the conservation of the natural resources of North America, to be held at the White House Feb. 18 next.

Letters suggesting the plan have been addressed by President Roosevelt to the Governor General and to the Premier of Canada and to President Diaz of Mexico. They will be delivered to the officials in person by Gifford Pinchot, chairman of the National Conservation Commission and chief forester of the United States whom President Roosevelt has chosen as his personal representative to convey the invitations and to confer with the authorities of the two governments. Mr. Pinchot first will visit Canada. He then will carry the invitation to President Diaz at the City of Mexico.

The proposed North American conference is the outgrowth of the two conservation conferences held in Washington, in which the governors of the States and Territories were the principal conferees. The representatives designated by the Canadian and Mexican governments will, under the proposed plan, consult with representatives of the State and other departments of this government and with the National Conservation Commission. The main object of the conference, as announced, will be to point out that natural resources are not limited by the boundary lines which separate nations, to develop a better knowledge of the natural resources of each nation on the part of the others, and to invite suggestions for concurrent action for the protection of mutual interests related to conservation.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

Racing at San Antonio, Texas, has begun. A fair class of horses is entered, and the feature is a race at one mile, fourth on the card.

The Australian tennis players won the Dwight F. Davis international cup, finally defeating Messrs. Wright and Alexander, the American contestants.

Myron Curtis, who has coached the Carleton football team for the past two seasons, has resigned his position and will return East and go into business.

Harry Stover, manager of the track at Butte, Mont., says he has advices to the effect that there will be no legislation against racing in that State this winter.

Jem Driscoll, claiming to be featherweight champion of England, knocked out Charley Griffin, featherweight champion of Australia, in the eleventh round of a bout which proved the best boxing exhibition seen in Boston in many years.

No football game will be played between Iowa and Minnesota next fall and negotiations have been practically ended, as the Gophers insist that the game be played at Minneapolis and Iowa insists that it be played at Iowa City or not at all.

The State board of control of high school athletics will not decide on the place for the annual meet of the Iowa high schools, but the different institutions will be given an opportunity to choose the location of the big yearly event. Des Moines expects to capture the meet.

A fine row has been stirred up in baseball circles by statements from Umpire Klem and Johnstone that an attempt was made to bribe them at the decisive game between New York and Chicago at the New York Polo grounds. National League officials are investigating and prosecutions may follow.

These Bad Pains

which give you such exquisite suffering, every month, are caused, as you know, by female trouble. Relief seldom or never comes of itself. It is necessary to cure the cause, in order to stop the pains, and this can only be done if you will take a specific, female remedy, that acts directly on the womanly organs.

WINE OF CARDUI
WOMAN'S RELIEF

"Cardui did wonders for me," writes Mrs. H. C. Larson, of Olds, Ia. "I had female trouble for 3 years. I had displacement, which increased my suffering, the doctor could only relieve me at times. Now, I am so much better, I hardly know when my time begins or when it ends."

Installation

On last Friday evening the Rebecca,s and their husbands spent a very pleasant evening together at their hall. At this time occurred the installation of their newly selected officers who were as follows:

Eva Ridgway, N. G.
Mrs. Wm. Maxwell, V. G.
Grace Sechler, R. S.
Mrs. Ida Woodcox, F. S.
Mrs. Frank Walter, T.
Deama Ridgway, W.
Ethel Berry, O. G.
Mrs. Harry Meek, C.
Mrs. Allie Perry, I. G.
Mrs. Anna Rickett, R. S. to N. G.
Mrs. Ella Smith, L. S. to N. G.
Mrs. Etta Hull, R. S. to V. G.
Mrs. Belle Ridgway, L. S. to V. G.
Mrs. Ida Herrick, C.

Following the installation the ladies had prepared something which especially interested the gentlemen, it being the luncheon. The first course consisted of buttered sandwiches, chicken, salad, pickles, dough nuts and coffee; second course, fruit, cake and confectionary. At this time the sisters gave the brothers a rising vote of thanks for assisting them in purchasing a new piano. All departed at a late hour after having thoroughly enjoyedthe evening.

Another Accident.

Mrs. Mary Topper, of Butler, was struck by a west-bound B. & O. train at 1:30 o'clock last Wednesday afternoon and instantly killed. The entire train passed over her body and when found she was hardly recognizable. The woman and her sister came to St. Joe, Tuesday, and Mrs. Topper intended to catch a train for Fort Wayne. Her husband was awaiting her at the Wabash crossing. Her sister let her out of the buggy at the B. & O. crossing, and she started to walk up the B. & O. track to the Wabash depot. When she reached Culbertson's crossing she attempted to go off the track and caught her foot between the cattle guards and was unable to release herself.

In an instant B. & O. train No. 7 west bound, rounded a curve at this point going at a rate of sixty miles an hour. The woman screamed frantically for help and motioned the engineer with a handkerchief to stop. Her efforts were of no avail and the train was upon her before the engineer could stop it. Every car passed over her body and when she was picked up she was crushed severely. Nearly every bone in her body was broken.

The engineer says; "We were going sixty miles an hour," he said, "and, owing to the sharp curve, I was unable to see her signal in time to stop. I applied the emergency brakes and shut the throttle as quickly as I could, but we were too close to her to do any good. It was a horrible sight to hear her cries for help and knowing that I could not help her." She made one loud scream just before the engine struck her".

The train was stopped and backed down to where the body lay. The remains were taken to the depot and held there until the coroner came. Undertaker Kinsey attended. The funeral was held last Saturday.

Did you make a good or bad resolution. It is much better for a person not to resolve than to make and break, but it is still better to make a good resolution and follow it out.

Rheumatism

Do you want to get rid of it? If so, take Dr. Miles Nervine modified as directed in pamphlet around bottle. In addition to the direct curative properties it has a soothing effect upon the nervous system by which the rheumatic pains are controlled, and rest and sleep assured. It has made many cures of this painful disease, some of them after years of suffering. If it will cure others why not you. If your case is complicated, write us for advice, it costs you nothing and may save you prolonged suffering.

"I was so crippled that I could scarcely walk. After having my shoes on for an hour or two I could manage to walk by suffering the pain. Then I began to have pains all through my system. My doctor told me I had an acute attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I read about Dr. Miles' Nervine, bought a bottle and I commenced to get better from the start and for the past six months have scarcely any pain, and am able to walk as well as ever."

the correction was accepted in a good business like manner, understanding that at times things will go wrong. The list of readers is fast increasing which makes it all the better for our advertisers and by glancing over our paper you will see that they appreciate the value of our columns. For the success of any business depends upon the good will of the people as well as upon the contents of their pocketbooks.

May the year which is just starting have many good things in store for you.

The Orchard

If it is wrong for a man to have a diseased cow in his herd, why should it not be considered just as much to let a tree covered with insect pests, or affected with some bad disease, stay in the orchard?

Beware of field mice and rabbits,—especially if you have young trees. The best safeguard against damage from the sharp teeth of these pests, is to wrap the tree trunks with strips of wood veneer or with laths or building paper. Wood veneer may be purchased of basket or package factories.

Now that the leaves are off and we have time, we should not fail to hunt out and destroy all insect eggs and cocoons on bark or limbs. Also, all "mummied" fruits found on trees should be taken off and burned,—they'll spread fungous troubles next season if allowed to remain.

Various paints and washes have been recommended to prevent attacks of mice and rabbits in orchards, says a recent government bulletin. The majority of these are without merit, and some of them are liable to kill young trees. Some of the washes require renewal after every rain. In experiments with a wash of whale-oil soap, crude carbolic acid and water, for apple trees, it was found that in about forty-eight hours the carbolic acid had so far evaporated that mice renewed their work upon the bark. Blood and greese, said to give immunity from rabbit attacks, would invite the attacks of field mice.

Leap Year Party.

On New Year's Eve, Dec. 31 '08 the Misses Jennie and Arminta Steward delightfully entertained at a Leap Year Party, thirty of their young friends. The invitations were sent to the girls who were to bring their gentlemen friends. The guests arrived at 8 o'clock and immediately there began a round of fun and amusement. In the contest of "things to be found on the human body" Mr. Lloyd Wade and Bert Fisher carried off the honors. In the "art" contest Mrs. Princess Rectenwal and Mr. C. A. Davis received the prizes. During this contest the house was filled with continual laughter. The guests were given a tiny leaf made of card-board with a small pencil attached On the fly leaf they were to draw an animal, the name of which was written on the back of their leaf, this finished, they tore them off and pinned them on their backs, then they guessed the name of the animal pinned on their companions back and wrote them opposite corresponding numbers on their cards. The art thus exhibited caused many jokes and much fun, some exhibits were beyond all possible recognition. Finally the boys and girls were seperated in two different rooms, and from covered baskets each drew out a souvenir and pinned it on them, then each girl looked for the boy with the corresponding souvenir and took him to a three course supper. Those present were: Audry Wade, Princess Rectenwal, Ethel Metcalf, Josephine Carnes, Inez Rhoads, Ethel and Hazel Berry, Frances Butler, Ethel Baker, Pluma Kimes, Bessie Hart, May Dailey, Golden Murray, Zella Fales: Lloyd Wade, Clyde Rectenwal, Harry Hursh, John Coburn, Ort Wearley, C. A. Davis, Charlie Chapman, Bert Fisher, Robert Beams, Ed Carnes, Frank Baltz, David Furnish and Perle Herbert. At 12:30 the guests took their departure after thanking their hostesses for the enjoyable evening and wishing each other a Happy New Year.

Missie had plenty of good sense, and she no longer stifled it; her conscience told her that she would never have sinned so grievously against her father if Eva had not undermined her principles by her flattery and playful words of advice to be independent and assert herself.

A veil had fallen from her eyes; she no longer saw Eva's conduct in the same light, and as she grew better, and Eva sought opportunities to be with her, the disillusion became more complete. Missie found herself wondering over her own infatuation. Had Eva always been so loud in her manners, so unfilial in her behavior to her mother, so unkind to Anna? Missie at first grew critical and then reproachful. Strange to say, Eva accepted her rebukes very meekly—evidently her affection for Missie was sincere in its way, for she took some pains to please her, and even tried to break herself of her faults. But for her unlucky engagement with Captain Harper there was every probability that Missie might have influenced her for good; but her approaching marriage soon drove all salutary reflection away.

As Missie's violent infatuation for her friend cooled, she turned more and more to Alison for sympathy; and here at least she did not find herself disappointed—Alison returned her affection warmly.

Missie was a little exacting as an invalid, for she was still separated from her father, and, alas! there was still cause to be anxious for him.

Dr. Greenwood never told Alison what he had feared: but after a few days, when he and another doctor had consulted together over the case, he told her and Roger that there was certainly some degree of mischief in connection with the spine; it would be many months—perhaps a year or two—before he could rise from his couch.

"We certainly hope for his complete recovery in the future," he continued, reassuringly, as Alison turned pale and Roger looked unhappy. "Another inch and he would never have moved his limbs again; but now things are not so bad. Mr. Merle will have his books, and they will go far to console him in his enforced inaction."

Dr. Greenwood was right in his conjecture; Mr. Merle took the tidings very quietly.

"I told you your broad shoulders were made for something," he said, looking at his son with a smile. He and Alison had come to bid him good-night.

The nurse had not been dismissed, though it was already arranged that Roger should take her place in his father's dressing room.

"I shall have to leave the mill in your hands. Greenwood gives me no hope of being fit for business for the next year or two."

"I will do everything I can, father," returned Roger, sorrowfully; "but I feel awfully cut up about it all."

"There is no need for that, my boy," returned Mr. Merle. "I should not wonder if you do better at business than I, Roger. Perhaps this will be less a trial to me than you suppose. I do not deny, of course, that it is a trial; but still, with my books and children I shall try to be content."

"We shall do everything in our power to ease your mind," returned Roger, bravely. But he said no more, and shortly afterward left the room, leaving his father and Alison together.

"Roger feels this dreadfully," she said, anxious that her father should not misunderstand his son's lack of words.

"Yes, my dear, I know he does," returned Mr. Merle, with a sigh. "I am fortunate to have such a son. To think," he added, with emotion, "that I could ever have been so blind as to believe that villain's innuendos against him—and now the whole business is in his hands."

"You can trust him fully, papa."

"Yes, better than I can trust myself, Alison; that boy is true as steel, and will not fail me. I wish I had found it out before. I remember your aunt Diana once saying to me that if I studied my children as well as I did my books I should be rewarded for my pains. By the bye, Alison, what does your aunt say to all this unlucky accident?"

"We have not heard from her," returned Alison, in a low voice. "Roger wrote the very next day after the accident, and I wrote the next day; but we have had no reply."

"That is very unlike Diana," observed Mr. Merle, in a surprised tone.

"Roger says that she can not have received our letters, papa; you see she is in Switzerland, and perhaps she has deviated from the proposed route—that is just her way; if she takes a fancy to a place she will stay there for a day or two, and then she does not get her letters for days. If we do not hear from her soon, Roger thinks I had better write to Mr. Moore. It does seem so strange"—her eyes filling with tears—"that Aunt Di should not know how unhappy we have been."

"I believe you are fretting after her, Alison—you are quite thin and fragile looking."

But Alison denied this with a great deal of unnecessary energy. She was only a little tired; but now Mabel was getting better she would be able to have a walk sometimes.

"But you must not talk any more, papa," she finished; "you are looking rather exhausted. Nurse Meyrick will be here directly; may I read to you a little until she comes?"

Mr. Merle shook his head sadly.

"My dear, I should like it of all things, but you know Dr. Greenwood has forbidden any kind of study for the next few weeks, and I never cared much for works of fiction, except Sir Walter Scott."

"I meant a chapter or two out of the Bible before you went to sleep," returned Alison, blushing with timidity.

A sudden shadow passed over Mr. Merle's face.

"I did not understand you, my dear," he said, with a little effort. "Well, child, do as you like—that sort of reading can not hurt one."

Alison felt the permission was accorded rather ungraciously, but still she dared not refuse to avail herself of it. She brought the Bible—Aunt Diana's gift—and sat down quietly by her father's side.

The voice trembled a little as she read, but she did not know how sweet it sounded in her father's ear! Once when she looked up she found his eyes fixed on her face, and stopped involuntarily.

"Shall I leave off, papa?"

"Yes, that will do for to-night; you may read to me to-morrow. You are so like your mother, Alison; she was fond of her Bible, too. You are a good girl, and take after her."

"Poor dear mamma. How hard it must be for you, papa, to lie there missing her."

"Ah!" he said, averting his face, "it is a lifelong loss. I think I never knew any one so good—not even Diana could compare with her. Do you know you reminded me so much of her that day when you wanted me to go to church. Child, your reproachful eyes quite haunted me. Ah, well! if ever I get well—" He paused with a sigh.

"You will come with us then, papa," she said, softly.

"I hope so, Alison, but I fear it will be a long time before I have the chance. When a man has looked death in the face, as I have, who might have been hurried into eternity without a moment's preparation, he thinks a little more seriously about things. I hope I am grateful for being spared—I think I am. You shall come and read to me every night if you like, my dear; it is a grand book, the Bible."

Alison's heart was too full to answer him, but as Nurse Meyrick came into the room at that moment she leaned over and kissed his forehead.

"Good-night, dear papa; I hope you will sleep well."

"Good-night," he answered, cheerfully, "and give my love to Missie."

Alison felt strangely happy as she left her father's room; it seemed to her as though they were coming closer to each other. There had been a look in her father's eyes and a caressing tone in his voice that told her that she was becoming very dear to him. She said to herself in her young gladness that Providence had accepted her sacrifice—her father's heart was no longer closed to her, and Mabel was beginning to love her. "Ask and it shall be given to you," was abundantly realized in her case—so true it is that love begets love, that the Divine seed of charity sown broadcast, even over barren hearts, will still yield some thirty-fold, some sixty-fold, some hundred-fold.

Alison's tranquil rest that night was only a preparation for a most trying day. Missie had left her bed for the couch that afternoon. When Alison had placed her comfortably, she had gone downstairs for a few minutes to speak to Anna, leaving Miss Leigh in charge. Anna detained her longer than usual—she had so much to say on the subject of Eva's approaching marriage, and while Alison was still talking and listening, Miss Leigh hurried down stairs with a very pale face.

"I wish you would come," she said, in much agitation; "Mabel is so very hysterical I can do nothing with her. Perhaps I have been incautious, but she questioned me so closely as to what the physicians said about her father that I could not avoid telling her."

"Oh, dear, what a pity. I meant to have told her myself when she was better," observed Alison, somewhat reproachfully.

Miss Leigh's tact was often at fault, and she had chosen an unlucky moment for breaking the news to Missie—just when she was weary with the fatigue of dressing.

Alison found her in a sad state—sobbing bitterly, with her head hidden in the pillows—and for a long time she refused to allow Alison to raise her into a more comfortable position. To her relief, Roger entered the room and asked immediately, in his downright manner, what was the matter, and why Missie was making herself ill.

This brought on a fresh burst.

"Oh, Roger! what shall I do? Poor papa!"

"It is poor Mabel, I think," observed Roger, kindly, and he raised the sobbing little figure in his arms and brought the wet face into view. "I declare, child, you are a perfect Niobe. Allie, what are we to do with her?"

"He will not get up for months—perhaps for years—and it is all my fault!" cried Missie, passionately.

"Perhaps so, my dear, but do you suppose all these showers of tears will do father any good?"

"I must cry—I ought to cry when I am so unhappy," returned Missie, impatiently, and trying to free herself.

"No, my dear, no," was Roger's quiet answer; "you have given us all so much trouble that you ought to spare us any noisy repentance; the best thing you can do for us all is to get as well and happy as you can, and help to nurse father."

CHAPTER XIX.

Missie left off crying and stared at Roger. He told Alison afterward that those half-drowned blue eyes made him feel quite bad—but then Roger was such a soft-hearted fellow.

"You do not understand," she said at last, very slowly.

"My dear little sister," he said, taking her hand, "I do understand, and so does Alison, and we are both agreed on this point. Repentance is apt to be troublesome if it be carried beyond due bounds—and, in fact, it can degenerate into selfishness—and you are really very selfish about this."

"Oh, Roger!" exclaimed Alison, a little shocked at this plain speaking. But Roger knew what he was about; he was determined, as he said quaintly, "to seal up the fountain of Missie's tears."

"Is he not unkind?" returned poor Missie, piteously. "He calls me selfish, just because I am so sorry about papa."

"We are all sorry, Mabel," returned her brother, seriously, "though we do not go about the house wetting the floors with our tears, like mediæval sinners. I declare it makes one quite damp to come near you—it is really bad for your health, my dear."

"Now you are laughing at me," she replied, pettishly.

"True, and that is the unkindest cut of all, is it not? But I am not laughing when I talk about your selfishness: you see you are just going against the wise old proverb, 'Never cry over spilled milk.' The mischief is done, my dear, but every one in the house has forgiven you for being the cause of it, and now you must forgive yourself."

"Oh, I can not," she said. "I shall be miserable until papa is well."

"There speaks selfishness," he returned, quickly. "My dear Mabel, why think about yourself at all? why not think how tired Alison looks, and how you may spare her? I am sure a cheerful word from you would do her no end of good."

Missie seemed struck by his words. She looked at her sister rather scrutinizingly. Certainly Alison did look pale, and there were dark rings round her eyes. Roger saw his advantage, and went on.

"You have no idea how people in a house act and react on each other—a depressing person is like a perpetual fog. I think I shall coin that speech as a proverb. You know I am a bit of a philosopher—Roger the sage—that sounds well."

Missie's lips curved into a smile; a little dimple came into view.

"Come, that's about the real article—a little more, and we shall have a rainbow effect," observed Roger in a delighted tone. "Now, we have the whole thing in working order. You have done wrong and been sorry for it—good!"—with an impressive pause; "now you are going to do better, and not think about yourself at all, but how you are to make us all happier. Good again. Thirdly and lastly, you are to turn over a new leaf and cultivate cheerfulness and that sort of thing."

"I will try," sighed Missie, raising her face to be kissed, "but it will be dreadfully hard."

"Most things are hard," was the philosophical reply; "but we shall never do much good in the world by sitting in the dust and casting ashes on ourselves—that sort of thing doesn't seem to belong to the present dispensation."

"No, it is 'Let the dead bury their dead,' now," observed Alison, in a moved voice. "Now, Roger, you may leave Missie to me; she is tired out, and I am going to read her to sleep."

"But I am not sleepy," replied Missie, reluctant to let Roger go, but it showed her new submission to Alison that she made no further protest—only as Alison read, Missie lay quiet, with a softened look in her eyes. Yes, she would try and bear it; they should not be any longer troubled.

"Thank you, dear," she said presently, as she noticed how Alison's voice flagged; "the book is very pretty, but I want you to leave off now and take a turn in the garden. Do please, Alison, it is such a lovely evening, and it will do you so much good. Poppie can come to me, she is a good girl and does not tire me."

"Are you sure, Mabel dear, that you can spare me?" asked Alison, anxiously.

"Quite sure," was Missie's answer, and then Alison consented to leave her. She was conscious that her strength was failing her a little; the close confinement and anxiety for the last fortnight were trying to her constitution; broken rest at night often followed the long day's work. She was pining, too, for a word from her dearest friend. She had written two days ago to Mr. Moore, questioning him about Miss Carrington's movements, but had received no answer from the confidential servant who acted as the blind man's amanuensis, and, in spite of her efforts to be cheerful, she was feeling dull and deserted.

Wedding Superstitions.

In spite of all her sound good sense, a German girl cherishes certain superstitions which she likes to observe on her wedding day. For instance, the moon must be increasing, neither at the full nor on the wane, for a waning moon foretells that marriage, love and luck will dwindle, while a full moon denotes but stationary luck at the best; but a waxing marriage moon will bring an increase of nuptial happiness, health and prosperity, says Woman's Life.

Neither will any German bride, of whatever rank, wear pearls, for she firmly believes in the forbidding old adage, "The more pearls a woman wears upon her wedding day, the more tears she sheds in after life." In the Fatherland, too, if it rains upon the bridal day, the bride will wisely look upon the best side of the matter, and regards the glistening raindrops not—as her English sister does—as prophetic of tears, but "showers of blessings," while if she weeps at her marriage, she laughs after, saying she has spent her tears beforehand, so that she will have none to shed in her new home.

Sympathy.

It was in the art museum.

"Yes, Mandy," said Mr. Hardapple, as he referred to his catalogue, "this be a statue of Venus." "You see, she hasn't any arms."

"Poor thing!" sighed Mrs. Hardapple. "I was just wondering."

"Wondering what, my dear?"

"Why, how in the world she ever carried her shopping bag."

A Sympathetic Strain.

"Do you think you are benefited by your sojourn at the seashore?"

"No," answered Mr. Sirius Barker. "Our hotel was at one of those sandy stretches where people tired themselves out in week-end holidays. When you looked at the place you felt sorry for the people and when you looked at the people you felt sorry for the place."—Washington Star.

"Some grocers," remarked the customer, "have an off-hand way of weighing sugar, but I notice you're not one of them."

"Off-hand way? How do you mean?" asked the grocer.

Smiles of The Day

How They Don't Speak.

They stood at the hot chocolate counter.

"You should have seen that handsome policeman help me over the crowded street this morning," boasted the one with the blue plumes.

"I did," responded her jealous rival.

"Well, it is not every one that can receive so much attention from a handsome policeman while crossing the street."

"No, indeed. And you should have heard what he said after you were safely over."

"Ah, a pretty compliment, I'll wager?"

"No, he said he gave you just as much attention as if you had been young and good looking."

The Retort Courteous.

She is a teacher in one of our high schools and she had been invited by the mother of one of her pupils to attend a large reception given by a fraternal society. The mother is one of those dear old women who just can't help being patronizing. In introducing her friend to a young man, she said:

"Mr. ——, allow me to introduce Miss——, who teaches my Willie."

'And what is the gentleman's business, please?" interjected the school teacher.

Wife—I saw Mr. Chacer this afternoon, and he looks pretty bad. What's the matter with him, do you know?

Hubby—Compound fracture.

Wife—What sort of a compound fracture?

Hubby—He's broke, and Miss Doughbag, discovering that fact, broke her engagement.

Different Now.

"I tell you what," said the old maid, "they make love much faster than they used to in my day."

"Yes," replied the sweet young thing, "in your day it was a rented horse and buggy; now it's a mortgaged, forty-horsepower, mile-a-minute touring car."—Detroit Free Press.

Eyes All Around.

Pearl—It was awful, dear, awful!

Ruby—What?

Pearl—Why, so many young men pass up our street in the evening, I told Jack to whistle "I've Got My Eye on You" when he was a block away.

Ruby—Gracious, and did he?

Pearl—Yes, and then I found the whole neighborhood had their eyes on him.

New Variety.

"You have deceived me," growled the man who had bought a bungalow in the suburbs.

"How so, sir?" asked the oily tongued real estate agent.

"Why, when we were negotiating you said there were no common gossips in this neighborhood."

"And I spoke the truth, sir. They are all uncommon. You couldn't find their equal in seven states."

Not What He Wanted.

Penn—And he is. She dedicated her latest book to him.

Stubb—Gracious! I should consider that a compliment.

Penn—Not if you knew the title of the book. It is "Wild Animals I Have Met."

An Exception.

"How good it is to hear the call 'All's well!'" said the stranger in the small town.

"Not for me," responded the tall man in the big black coat.

"And why not for you?"

"Because I am the town's physician, stranger."

He Struck Out.

Itched and Burned Terribly—Could Not Move Thumbs Without Flesh Cracking—Sleep Impossible—Cuticura Soon Cured Eczema.

"An itching humor covered both my hands and got up over my wrists and even up to the elbows. The itching and burning were terrible. My hands got all scaly and when I scratched, the surface would be covered with blisters and then get raw. The eczema got so bad that I could not move my thumbs without deep cracks appearing. I went to my doctor, but his medicine could only stop the itching. At night I suffered so fearfully that I could not sleep. I could not bear to touch my hands with water. This went on for three months and I was fairly worn out. At last I got the Cuticura Remedies and in a month I was cured. Walter H. Cox, 16 Somerset st., Boston, Mass., Sept. 25, 1908."

No Butter in Great Britain.

The British Isles are in the throes of a butter famine. The state of affairs which now exists in London has never been experienced before in the memory of the oldest living merchant. That city, Liverpool, Manchester, Glasgow, Bristol and other great centers of trade may be said to be in a state of panic. There is no reserve of cold stored butter at all. Many of the prominent margarine manufacturers in England report that not for many years have they been working at such high pressure to fill their pressing orders. It is anticipated that during the present high price of butter it will meet with an enormous sale.

Senator La Follette was discussing with great approbation the President's suggestions toward the abolition of stock gambling.

"Such marginal transactions are not business," said Senator La Follette. "Look at them. After all, what is a successful stock gamble?"

He paused and smiled. Then he answered his own question neatly.

"In a successful stock gamble," he said, "you pay for something that you don't get, with money that you haven't got, then you sell what you never had for more than it ever cost."

PULPIT

WHO IS YOUR MASTER?

By Rev. P. A. Halpin.

Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.—Matt vi., 24.

Christian ethics is logical, comprehensive and immutable. Like its founder, it is simple and unequivocal as well. Theoretically, it appeals to reason and experience. Practically, it is uplifting and calls out what is best in highest manhood. It is for heroes and not for weaklings.

That no man can serve God and Mammon is an irrefutable inference from the larger principle that no man can serve two masters. It implies that man must have a master, that there are but two masters—God and Mammon—and that he cannot serve both. It divides the race into three classes.

There are those who serve God, those who serve Mammon and those who endeavor to serve both God and Mammon. It is to these last that this particular utterance is made. The first Christ embraces as His brethren. For the second He has infinite pity. For the last His scorn is almost as boundless as His mercy. They are numerous, these wastrels of humanity. What their number God alone knows. In the blindness which seems their curse they act as if they could hoodwink God. Christ confronts them with a dilemma which they cannot escape. Both masters they cannot serve, so they must come from under cover and declare themselves. All that is left for them to do is to give up one or the other master. Let them advance to the open and fling concealment to the winds. Away with compromise! Away with cowardice! Away with hypocrisy! This is their best, their only chance of regeneration.

Nothing will ever come from duplicity save dishonor and ruin. The soldier who rudely smote Christ on the cheek did not inflict a tithe of the agony which followed the kiss of Judas. Compromisers are Judases, every one of them, and the malediction of their prototype is on them all Living, they are traitors to both masters. Dying, they confound and betray themselves. Living honestly is better than truckling, and even the honor that is found among thieves is honor of a kind, whereas knavery is always degradation. While angry with your brother the sacrifice you place upon the altar is insult, and the widow's mite counts more with God than the mammoth bequests to church and to charity extended by hands tainted by the oppression of the laborer and the orphan.

Let, then, every man unmask. Who is to be the master? God or Mammon? Let each one be mercenary and adhere to the employer who gives the bigger, the better wages.

What stipend does Mammon offer and what is the security?

The collateral is uncertain and the end slavery, not freedom, and servitude the vilest. Is there a human being so prone as the slave of wealth, and of all that it inspires and procures in the way of pleasure and crime? What does it not do against sense and brain and heart, bringing disease and madness and cruelty?

What remuneration does it even promise to render after death? God's hire is exceeding great—here freedom and not chains; hereafter a compensation which eye hath not seen nor ear heard, nor mind conceived. With this Master no panic, no failure, no bankruptcy. He will not leave His servant naked to his enemies. Surely God is a better master than M[illegible]n.

CHRISTMAS AND HOME.

By Henry F. Cope.

"And they came with haste and found Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger."—Luke 2:16.

A new day dawned for our world when the center of religion passed from a temple to a home, from the awesome priest, as a leader, to the little child. Then religion came nearer to us, became of our hearts and our own bosoms, a real part of our daily lives, bound with our purest pleasures, as common as household thoughts and as sweet.

Since the birth of a child marked a new era in the spiritual history of the race, every birth has had a new significance. We have come to realize that each child is born not so much into a world of sin and sorrow as into the family of the Father of us all and into the right to love and peace and joy, into a world of growing good will.

Christmas tide serves to remind us how the best in all the religious aspirations of men everywhere cluster about the things most simple. The stories we retell at this season are not about heroes and kings, not of magnificent and impressive ceremonies in vast temples; they are of a village mother and her new born babe, of a lowly dwelling, and of humble shepherds.

The heart of Christmas lies there in the founding of a home. An obscure cattle shed, a father whose heart is torn with pride and anguish, and a mother suffused with joy that a man is born into the world, while her face is filled with a peace and light that give a heavenly radiance to the strange scene. How happens it that the eyes of faith have been centered here for centuries, that so commonplace an incident is of so great significance?

Pain and love, sacrifice, service and joy—these make the home and these make religion. Never is faith so simple, so apprehensible to us all as when it is expressed in these terms, when to be loving to our own, to plan and sacrifice for them, to share our joys and to gather closer in the home circle becomes an act of religion.

These simple common elements make Christmas so nearly a universal religious festival. We may differ greatly in our views of the teachings of Christianity, but we all stand together before such a picture of a home, and it belongs to us all. We worship at a miracle of love, the same through which we had our being and about which all our homes are knit.

The sense of this home significance brings us hurrying from afar to spend this day at our own hearthsides; this moves us to pity for the homeless and desolate on this day and gives the deeper pain to thoughts of vacant places about the table and by the fireside. This is the festival of the home; here stands our altar and here glow our sacrifical fires.

The thought of the family group and the interpretation of faith in terms of human affections dedicates the day to the child and sets a little one in the midst. This is the children's festival, and vain is the worship of any child without growing reverence for all childhood through all time.

Faith finds expression through the home. We give ourselves again to our own; we who have been so engrossed with our daily cares once more smile with the children or take our places again as children in the old home, and so fill the parent's cup of happiness to overflowing. A broad feeling of good will for the whole world is not worth much just here if it is leaving some heart at home aching and desolate.

And then in terms of the home our faith and joy express themselves to all mankind. We hear no angels singing, but in our hearts is beating the promise of the day of peace, and all about us are signs of its coming if we will but broaden the bounds of our affections until the Bethlehem scene shall be the picture of a united humanity.

The love and pain, the service and joy, the sacrifice and affection that make religion and the home are also the forces that make and bind our civilization. The altar fires that burn by the heart must burn everywhere, and the spirit that makes the home sacred makes sacred all our days and all our ways. And so shall come the promised peace and good will to all on earth.

SPIRITUAL AWAKENING.

By Rev. W. H. McMaster.

Christ is not only the ideal of the spiritual awakening, but He is the great cause of it. He is the inspiration of the modern scientific research for truth. His challenge was "Come and see." He exalted the child mind of inquiry, of openness to the truth, as the type and by taking that attitude toward nature man has come into possession of her truth. By obeying nature man has come to control her. By getting down humbly to learn from her, she has exalted man by her treasures and her secrets. The mind of Christ, which obeys, which is open to the truth, which challenges investigation, which submits the nail-prints to the most doubtful scrutiny, is the instrument of progress in knowledge. So also in the moral realm, Christ is the great power to quicken the conscience, produce repentance and win the moral nature to the highest standards. He has developed the moral nature to the place where no man can hope to be religious beyond the extent that he is moral, and no corporation represents Christian things beyond the extent that it incorporates the ethics of Christian love in all its business. Christ is leader in the great intellectual and moral awakenings of our times.

As men follow Christ, He has rehabilitated their faith in the spiritual, and broken the illusive spell cast over them by the material; the false and superstitious views of God lose their hold on the minds and fade away before the sun-like doctrine of the Divine Fatherhood. The selfishness of men's hearts is softened into brotherly good will and the old religions cast aside their crudities and sink themselves in the more effulgent light of Christianity, the basis of the final and ultimate faith of mankind. Who shall say what greater glories await to surprise the more fully awakened powers of man's soul! When we are fully awake we shall behold His glory.

Lord Lyveden is an ardent peerage reformer and tells this anecdote: A famous statesman of the nineteenth century was called upon to visit his son in prison. He bitterly reproached him, remarking: "Here am I, having worked my way up from a middle class home to a great position, and when I die you will be the greatest blackguard in the peerage." The son listened quietly, and then replied, with terrible irony: "Yes—when you die."

It is customary in Spain when an infant first begins to notice things to place before it a silver coin, a sword, a silver cross, a book and some fruit. The object to which the child stretches his hand indicates, according to accepted belief, his future vocation. The coin is for commerce, the sword for the army, the cross and the book respectively point to the church and the law or learning, while the fruit denotes a farmer or landowner.—The Englishman.

The Woman Suffrage Association of New Jersey recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of Lucy Stone letting her household goods, including her baby's cradle, be sold for taxes in Orange as a protest against taxation without representation. The suffragists say that this was the first instance in the world of a woman refusing to pay taxes for this reason. Since then there have been many similar instances. The last and most notable perhaps was the case of Lady Steel, who let her goods be sold at auction in Edinburg, Scotland.

Lowry is a man with a moderate income and one child, whom he is already sending to a French master, who is accustomed to be paid every Monday. Recently Lowry sent Henry to his lesson without the usual bank note. That evening the father looked over the boy's exercise, and this is what he found Henry doing his best to put into Parisian French: "I have no money. The week is up. Have you no money? Has your father no money? I need money What is the day of the week? The day of the week is Monday. Does your father know the day of the week?"

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe is getting more eloquent as her years increase, her friends declare. She is now nearly ninety, and the other day at a reception given her in Boston made what her friends say was the finest speech of her life. She said that when she began to talk about woman suffrage she never know when to stop. "It was my good fortune to get interested in the suffrage question about the time the negro men obtained their freedom," Mrs. Howe said. "Then for the first time I saw the whole of one sex governed by the whole of the other. This seemed to me an intolerable tyranny. I couldn't help but think that after we had held the door open for the negro we might at least have been allowed to go in with him."

MAY FIND GOLD IN BIG TUNNEL.

Engineers for Western Pacific Find Rock Conditions Promising.

Western Pacific engineers are on the quivive for developments in the great Spring Garden tunnel, ninety-three miles up the Sierra slopes, above Oroville. The formations encountered are right for mineral deposits and the striking of gold is not unexpected, says the San Francisco Chronicle.

Two gangs of men are at work from opposite sides of the 7,200-foot hole. From the eastward they have bored in 2,893 feet. From the westward they have dug in 3,495 feet. There is a wall between the two gangs 918 feet thick, and somewhere in that is expected the combination that may develop a vein of gold quartz. The east side of the tunnel is a mixture of slate and quartzite. The west side is a black basalt rock and small crystals. Where these formations join there may be a gold-bearing stratum. If there is, it will be the first time in the history of American railroad tunneling that any valuable metal has been found. Of all the railroad tunnels that have been bored, strangely enough, never yet has one encountered pay ore.

While the engineers are speculating on the prospect of opening up a gold mine in the heart of a mountain, they are also a little apprehensive about what else may be encountered in the secret depths

They recall that in the boring of the Simplon tunnel, one of the numerous holes through the Alps, which is eleven and a quarter miles long and took seven years to build, the workmen set off one blast that suddenly tore away a rocky wall and liberated torrents of water from an unexpected subterranean lake, which swept men and mules to destruction and delayed the work for nine months. Then another lake of scalding hot water was encountered. In the construction of the Union Pacific tunnel between Ogden and Green river also the workmen encountered hot water, then oil and later gas, which caused the death of several workmen.

So the Spring Garden tunnel, its 7,000-foot bore making it the longest on the western Pacific has its interesting secrets, possibly a gold mine, perhaps a deluge.

Complete Recovery from Coffee Ills.

"About nine years ago my daughter, from coffee drinking, was on the verge of nervous prostration," writes a Louisville lady. "She was confined for the most part to her home.

"When she attempted a trip down town she was often brought home in a cab and would be prostrated for days afterwards.

"On the advice of her physician she gave up coffee and tea, drank Postum, and ate Grape-Nuts for breakfast.

"She liked Postum from the very beginning and we soon saw improvement. To-day she is in perfect health, the mother of five children, all of whom are fond of Postum.

"She has recovered, is a member of three charity organizations and a club, holding an office in each. We give Postum and Grape-Nuts the credit for her recovery."

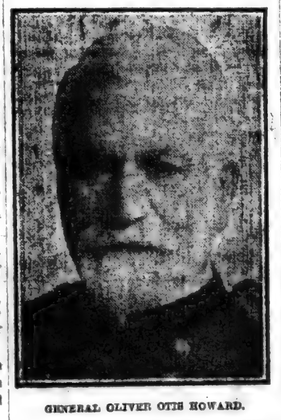
General Howard

Famous Soldier and Philanthropist For Whom a Higher Rank is Proposed—Once an Indian Fighter.

It was the late Senator Redfield Proctor of Vermont who introduced in the senate the bill afterward passed by that body placing General Oliver Otis Howard on the retired list of the regular army as a lieutenant general. The movement to honor the distinguished general in this way did not originate with him, for he is as modest as he is courageous. The suggestion was at once indorsed all over the country, for it was felt that such a recognition of the services of the last surviving corps commander of the Federal forces in the civil war would be most fitting. It is considered doubly deserved because of the great value of General Howard's work as a citizen in the field of philanthropy and education as well as his heroism upon many battlefields. He is a veteran of two wars and of numerous Indian campaigns, and as a soldier of the cross and an ambassador of peace he has earned the undying gratitude of his countrymen. He has received the degree of LL. D. from several institutions of learning, has been made a chevalier of the French Legion of Honor, has received a medal of honor from congress and has been president of the Medal of Honor Legion.

General Howard will be seventy-eight in November. Leeds, Me., was his birthplace, and he graduated at twenty from Bowdoin college. Four years later he graduated from West Point academy and saw his first field service in the Seminole campaign in Florida. He was a professor of mathematics at West Point when the civil war broke out and at once asked for a leave of absence, but it was refused him. "Well, then, here is my resignation," said young Howard. "My country needs me." And he left West Point and returned to his native state, where he was given command of the Third Maine volunteers, the first three year regiment from the state. To mention the battles in which he participated would be almost an enumeration of the big battles of the war. He was a leader in twenty-two noted engagements, marched with Sherman to the sea, lost an arm at Fair Oaks, several times had his horse shot under him and in 1864 was appointed commander of the Army of the Tennessee. His great work immediately following the civil war was performed as commissioner of the Freedmen's bureau. During the nine years from 1865 to 1874 he served in this capacity, distributing $13,000,000 and solving for the government the problem of putting the liberated slaves on their feet. Then came his service in Indian campaigns. He commanded in the Nez Perce campaign and in the Bannock war and has written several books about his experiences with Indians, many of whom he has won over from hostility to the United States government to loyalty to it. He reached the rank of major general in 1886 and in 1894 went on the retired list.



GENERAL OLIVER OTIS HOWARD.

General Howard has always been noted for his moral as well as physical courage and stood out against intemperance and profanity in the army when it was not very popular to do so. At Bowdoin he was known as "pious," but he could whip any man in his class. Going through New York on his way to the front in 1861, he was tendered a banquet at the Astor House. Much wine was drunk. When it came his turn to respond to a toast he raised a glass of water and said:

"Gentlemen, our country is in danger. I go at its call to do my duty. The true beverage of the soldier is cold water. In this I pledge you."

It is said that while a student at Bowdoin a classmate went on a disgraceful spree, and report had it that young Howard was the offender. He was engaged at the time to a Miss Watt of Portland, and her parents forbade him to visit their house. It was six months before the real facts became known, and during that time Howard suffered so much that he never afterward touched liquor.

In talking of the battle of Fair Oaks the general once said: "I was shot in the wrist. Twenty minutes after my first wound I was hit by a ball in the left elbow, which passed to my right arm and shattered the bone. I was so intent on victory that I did not know I was hurt. Later I was placed on a table and put to sleep, and when I awoke my strong right arm was gone."

Is Anxious to Win Out in Contest.

Reports show that Merritt Milliman is still in the lead for Post prize up to Jan. 2nd. Lenard Wahl, Wisconson comes in as close second and Marvin Barnet, third. This is the standing out of 40 boys. Merritt is still determined to win and if he is supported for 4 weeks more the story will be told. He is deserving of your support for this time.

SHILLING'S CORNERS.

Uncle Wm. Henderson is now better.

Jack Moody is about the same at this writing.

Nearly everybody around here are sick with colds.

Mrs. John Timmerman went to Concord Monday.

Mrs. Adam Shilling called on Lovina Shilling one day last week.

Mrs. Joe Shilling was the guest of Mrs. John Shilling one day last week.

Mrs. Read of Auburn Junction visited at Ben Wasson's a few days last week.

Attempts Burglary

One evening last week some one attempted to enter the Sechler restaurant at an early hour in the night but were unsuccessful in their attempt. Some time during the day the party had entered the store and had gone to the west window in the kitchen, pulled the stop and tied a rag around it so that it would not go back to its place, then he thought the window would be ready for him, but, in his haste he over looked the nail in the case above the window, and when ready to perform his act, the nails hindered him. No clue has been found.

Culture Club

The Culture Club held its first meeting in the new year, Wednesday night at the home of Mrs. Frank White, after a weeks vacation. First on programme was a relect reading by Miss Ethel Leighty "The Obstruction in the Way" which was very good. Mrs. White then conducted a contest of "The States and Nicknames" which was interesting. The president had appointed Mrs. Belle Ridgway and Mrs. Dr. Sheffer to arrange something interesting for the evening. They asked nine of the ladies to prepare a drama as a surprise to the rest of the club. It was entitled "Young Dr. Devine" and was full of fun from start to finish. It lasted about 30 minutes. Then the committee had arranged for the balance of the ladies to "perform" also, which they did remarkable well in the way of pantomines representing "The farmer boy", "The sleepy child", "Troubles of a milliner" "A surgical operation" and others, which were fine. A very interesting letter from Mrs. Kate A. Leighty was then read. It was written to the Club ladies from Vicksburg, where Mrs. Leighty attended the unveiling of the Soldiers Monument. She gave a description of the soldiers burial ground and the reception tendered the visitors, also the auto trip to various places of interest. The quotations were miscellaneous. After session closed, the hostess treated to pop corn and fudge.

Closed the Deal

A deal was made last Saturday through which H. M. Widney became the possessor of the Mahlon Baker property on Main street, consideration $1700. Mr. Baker, the same day, purchased the Henry Milliman property across the street. In a short time he will commence some repairing which will add to the appearance of the place. On account of Mrs. Widney's poor health they found it necessary to move from the farm, where the house work would be lighter. Possession will be given as soon as possible.

Announce Engagement

Mr. Frank L. Jones, 2510 Hoagland avenue, announces the engagement of his daughter Bess, to Mr. Charles F. Thayer, of Charlotte, N. C. The exact date of the wedding has not been set, but it is probable that Miss Jones will be one of the June brides. She has spent her entire life in Fort Wayne, and is a graduate of the high school. As beautiful in character as she is in face, Miss Jones is withal extremely retiring in disposition. In spite of her diffidence, the bride-elect has a wide circle of devoted friends who love her dearly for her manly beautiful qualities of heart and character. Mr. Thayer is a graduate of Worcester Technical school, and is a prominent young business man of Charlotte. He is connected with the Factory Insurance association, of Hartford, Conn., with headquarters in the south.—Sunday's Journal.

Literary Club

After one weeks vacation the L. L. C. met at the home of Mrs. S. W. Tustison, last Wednesday night. The subject, with Mrs. Benninghoff as leader, was "The Memories of Henry Drummond" and "The Dawn of an Era of Friendship between Science and Religion.

Professor Drummond taught the world that it was possible to be a rigid scientist and also a sweet hearted christian. After an interesting discussion, club adjourned to meet in one week at the home of Mrs. M. Benninghoff.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Springfield, Mo., Scorched.

Fire destroyed the Baldwin theater and office building and a number of other buildings in the business district of Springfield, Mo., and damaged the Colonial Hotel to the extent of $100,000. Fire Chief Kanada was slightly injured. The fire was caused by an explosion of gas in the basement of the theater, which was a five-story structure, occupied by offices, as well as the theater. The D. R. Nixon office building, a $35,000 structure, was completely gutted. The total loss is $250,000. From the hotel two hundred guests fled to the street. All escaped in safety. Among those staying at the hotel was Opie Reid, the novelist of Chicago, who had delivered a lecture in the city.

Great Art Treasures Burned.

The Illinois Club, constituting with its splendid art gallery one of the most historic landmarks of Chicago, Ill., was totally destroyed by fire with a loss estimated at $325,000. The building was located on Ashland boulevard, on the West Side, and was an old-fashioned two-story structure. Among the famous paintings destroyed was the "Frugal Breakfast," by a Holland artist. This painting, which won a prize at the Chicago world's fair, was valued at $12,500.

Powder Explosion Kills Three.

Three lives were lost in an explosion at the home of Allen Cassel, a wealthy planter and deputy sheriff of Martin County, Kentucky. Cassel's wife and son were burned to a crisp, while his step-daughter died shortly afterward. The boy set a can of powder near the grate fire. He noticed a small white lump in the can and not thinking it to be powder threw it into the flames. The lump exploded, setting the can on fire and it exploded with great force.

$500,000 Fire at Chicago Stockyards.

A fire at the stockyards in Chicago, Ill., destroyed a large part of the fertilizing plant of Darling & Co., and after burning large stores of chemicals, causing explosions and injuring a number of firemen by falling walls, caused a total loss of $500,000. The tenants of thirty houses in the neighborhood were driven into the streets and many of the 250 employes of the company in the building at the time narrowly escaped.

New Boom for Gary Town.

Officials of the American Locomotive Company in New York City have announced that the company had purchased a plot of 130 acres of land at Gary, Ind., and that plans were being drawn for a new plant which, when completed, will give employment to from 12,000 to 15,000 workmen. Gary is the location of the new plant of the United States Steel corporation, twenty-four miles from Chicago.

Beach Hargis Arrested Again.

With Walker Cole, a companion, Beach Hargis, who a few days ago was released on a $25,000 bond to await the trial of the murder of his father, James Hargis, was arrested, disarmed and jailed in Jackson, Ky. It was charged by witnesses before the police judge that young Hargis had been drunk and disorderly and that he had fired many shots before the store of County Judge Taulbee.

Negro Fiend Lynched.

Reports have reached Lexington, S. C., of the lynching of an unknown negro in Lexington County, about four miles north of the city. The lynching followed an attempted criminal assault upon Mrs. Thomas Wingard, aged 53, the wife of a prominent farmer. Mrs. Wingard suffered a severe nervous shock and is under the physician's care.

Trocadero Theater Damaged by Fire.

Fire at the Trocadero theater in Chicago, just after the audience filed out caused a loss of $15,000. Only a few chorus girls were in the building at the time and they escaped.

Detroit Banker Ends His Life.

Henry C. Potter, Jr., vice president of the People's State Savings Bank, Detroit, Mich., committed suicide at his home by shooting himself through the head. Mr. Potter had been suffering from nervous prostration for some time.

William J. Bryan Joins the Eagles.

William J. Bryan was recently initiated as a member of the Lincoln aerie 147, Fraternal Order of Eagles.

"SHOOT OR SAVE US," BEG QUAKE VICTIMS

Sufferers Ask to Be Shot Rather than Further Endure Horrors of Ruined Cities.

LEMON RINDS ARE DELICACIES.

Famishing Populace in Devastated Region Fights Desperately for Pieces of Food of Any Kind.

A press correspondent on the scene of the Sicilian earthquake says that when Deputy Lamagna appeared among the famished, wounded, desperate survivors at Reggio, they crowded around him and shrieked: "You who are in authority, tell the government to take us away from here or have us all shot to end our suffering!"

The correspondent who heard the heartrending appeal says: "I have witnessed shocking episodes enacted by famished survivors and have myself felt the pangs of hunger. For long hours I had nothing to eat except a few lemon rinds picked up from the mud and have sought desperately for a morsel of bread. On approaching the military authorities I was sent to a place among the ruins where the municipal assessor, surrounded by a howling mob, was distributing tickets for bread and raw meat. A desperate struggle was going on.

"The soldiers had requisitioned a few oxen, horses, and asses—lean, wounded and dying animals, which they hurried off to the seashore, slaughtered, and cut them up with bayonets. Pieces were distributed among the people, who with difficulty were kept back by the soldiers with their rifles. No sooner was one piece, still warm, received than it was torn to shreds by ten eager mouths, and the people struggled on the ground for any morsels that fell. Stories of almost miraculous escapes and episodes of the most appalling character are told by survivors."

TWO CITIES OF DEAD.

Fear of Disease Causes Forcing of People from Reggio and Messina.

The authorities decided to evacuate completely Reggio and Messina, conveying everybody outside, and leaving the cities perfectly empty. They will be surrounded by military lines to prevent any one re-entering. This measure has been adopted in order to prevent a pestilence occurring. A royal decree was issued placing the Messina and Reggio districts in a state of siege, which is stricter than martial law.

What was the bustling and picturesque port of Messina and the prosperous city of Reggio are cities of the dead. Where happy thousands once lived vultures and their grim sustenance are the sole inhabitants. Every ship that could be put in service transported the terror-stricken people of the two places to more favored spots in Italy. Reports of the inevitability of further shocks and the slight tremors of the day before decided those who had remained where their homes once stood that in the future the land must become a desert and that Messina and Reggio will exist only in memory.

The idea of recovering the dead bodies has been abandoned. At first when a form was rescued from the ruins it was placed with others in a long row to await identification. Few were recognized. The rescuers ceased to care for the dead. When bodies were found they were left to decompose. The search for the living will continue to the last minute, and it was astonishing how many people were dug out alive as late as Friday. Quicklime was at first used on the bodies, but this soon gave out. The stench became horrible, greatly impeding the work of rescue. Vultures have swarmed to the places where the cities were and add to the ghoulish horror of the charnel houses.

The scenes for a distance along the water front make the stoutest heart quail. Little groups of men, women and children, half clothed, half crazed, sleep huddled together, numbed with grief and terror. They simply awaited the coming of the boats to take them away, where, they cared not. Their only desire was to leave the accursed spot where their loved ones had died and where their all was lost. No family is complete. Men have lost their wives, and many of the women were widows and the children orphans. When interrogated these unfortunate creatures simply lift lack-luster eyes, gone dry through constant weeping, and call on the saints to preserve them from further terrors.

Prosecutor's Slayer Must Hang.

In Portland, Ore., Judge Bronaugh sentenced James A. Finch, convicted of the murder of Ralph B. Fisher, late prosecutor for the Oregon Bar Association, to be hanged Feb. 5.

Convicted as Chinese Smugglers.

Captain Harvey C. Daly of the schooner Freddie W. Alton, and Philip M. Springer, a Boston florist, were found guilty in the United States District Court in that city of conspiracy to smuggle Chinese into the country. Sentence will be pronounced later.

$500,000 FOR QUAKE SUFFERERS

Congress Hears Message Urging Extension of Relief Measures.

Resolutions were introduced Monday in the Senate and House in Washington providing for an appropriation of $500,0000 for Italian relief. The resolutions provided that the money shall be used for provisions, clothing, medicines and other necessary articles, and the President is authorized to employ any vessels of the United States navy or to charter and employ other suitable steamships or vessels to carry out the purposes of this government. President Roosevelt in a message to Congress asked for a direct appropriation of $500,000 for the relief of the stricken people in the earthquake zone. This, the most generous fund ever contributed by the American people for succor of sufferers in other lands, is to supplement the dispatch of the supply ships Celtic from New York and the Culgoa from Port Said for Messina with their cargoes of necessaries, originally intended for the American fleet, diverted to the immediate use of the Italian victims.

MAP OF DEVASTATED REGION.

CALLS EDDY FAITH A FRAUD.

Dr. Johnston Myers Fiercely Assails Christian Science.

In an address which bristled with the strongest denunciatory terms at his command, the Rev. Johnston Myers of Immanuel Baptist church, Chicago, arraigned Christian Science as one of the greatest menaces of modern times. He denounced the entire Christian Science movement as a fabric of lies and fraud "built upon a foundation of error." He declared that the teachings of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy were those of a physician with whom she formerly was associated and whose teachings were also "a pack of lies." And, last but not least, he declared that to his own personal knowledge "this delusion" was responsible for scores of deaths. He himself had charge of at least one funeral a month, said he, which was directly chargeable to Christian Science. These accusations were laid at the door of Mrs. Eddy's cult in the course of an address on Christian psychology in which Dr. Myers advocated the program of mental treatment, which also includes drugs and physicians, as outlined by Bishop Fallows.

BLIND; HAS $800,000 SAVED.

Shoestring Peddler Tells of Prosperity in 6 Years' Work.

George Davis, aged 70, was found unconscious from the effects of alcohol and taken to the city hospital in St. Louis. When he became conscious he said he became blind six years ago and sold shoestrings on the street while displaying a sign, "I am blind." He added: "My usual income, above all expenses, was $200 a month. I was frequently given $1 or more for a pair of shoestrings. I suppose the value of my property in different cities and the money I have amounts to $150,000. My wife is worth $50,000 in her own name." He had received as much as $5 for a single pair of shoestrings, he said.

BLAST CAUSES QUAKE SCARE.

Oil Tank Explosion Breaks Windows Five Miles Away.

An explosion which shook houses and shattered windows five miles distant occurred at Wood River, Ill., Tuesday when an oil tank of 100,000 gallons capacity caught fire. Henry Johnson, watchman, was burned to death. Almost every window in Benbow City was broken and the residents fled from their beds, fearing an earthquake had occurred.

Yuan Shi-Kai, Foremost of Statesmen, Is Disgraced and Dismissed.

Yuan Shi-Kai, grand councillor and commander in chief of the forces, was dismissed from office in Peking Saturday by imperial edict. Na-Tung, comptroller of customs and ex-governor of Peking, was appointed by a second edict to the office of grand councillor in place of the deposed man. Thus does China take a reactionary step, and the foes of progress and modern methods show in the ascendency. Complications are certain, for the great powers already are arranging for a formal protest, and revolutionary outbreaks are expected as soon as the government's act becomes known throughout the country.

The action is believed the outcome of a Manchu plot and indicates the ascendency of that section. Yuan Shi-Kai's office corresponds to that of premier of England, and the action of the Chinese government is considered in diplomatic circles as little short of revolutionary.

The general collapse of the reform organization is predicted. It is believed that Prince Tang Shao Yi, who is now in the United States, will be recalled. The position of Hae Shih Chang, viceroy of Manchuria, has been for some time precarious. Other high officials are threatened, including Yang Shi Siang, the viceroy of the province of Chi-Li, and Chang-Jen Chun, viceroy of Liang Kwang. The next move by the government is awaited anxiously by the legations, for it is feared this ousting of one of China's foremost reformers presages other reactionary steps that may imperil foreign interests.

TYPHOID FEVER IN MESSINA.

Sanitary Means Inadequate to Prevent Spread of Disease.

Typhoid fever has broken out among earthquake sufferers in Messina. This fact will cause drastic action to be taken immediately for the disposal of the dead. Hope of rescuing any more of the living beneath the ruins has been abandoned. Until the present all attention has been concentrated on the removal of human bodies from the streets, while the carcases of animals killed by the earthquake and those of dogs and cats shot by the patrols have been left lying where they fell. The decay of these carcasses has greatly augmented the danger of the spread of disease. Means are far inadequate for the care of the injured. In a single hospital on board ship there were 400 wounded persons without a single nurse.

VISITS GRAVE OF WIFE HE SLEW

Convicted Murderer Taken to Cemetery at His Request.

In Dayton, Ohio, Harry Crooks, convicted of murdering his wife and sentenced to the electric chair, begged the privilege of visiting his wife's grave. The sheriff granted the prayer, sending the man to the cemetery with a strong guard. Crooks forbade his attorneys to apply for a new trial, declaring he was not insane and that the verdict was just. His wife had been divorced from him on the ground of cruelty.

North Dakota Bank Closes.

The First National Bank of Rugby, N. D., closed by order of its own directors and the comptroller of the currency, has appointed George W. Swords as receiver. The bank has a capital of $25,000 and deposits of $249,468.

SCENE DURING A FORMER QUAKE.

Terror stricken inhabitants of Monteleone, Calabria, rushing from their ruined houses in search of safety during the disaster of 1905.

AMERICAN FLEET IS AT SUEZ.

Battleships Prepare for Hurried Trip to Messina to Give Aid.

The United States Atlantic battleship fleet, completing two days ahead of its schedule the next to the longest run of its world-girdling cruise, arrived at Suez Sunday morning from Colombo, a distance of 3,440 knots, from which place the fleet sailed Dec. 20. The loss of a seaman from the battleship Illinois, who fell overboard and was drowned, as previously reported, was the only accident to mar the voyage from Colombo. The Illinois remained on the scene to search for the sailor and is a little behind the fleet.

The converted cruiser Yankton entered the canal Sunday afternoon and the supply ship Culgoa passed in that night. The former has a number of doctors aboard and the latter a large supply of provisions and stores. Both will go to Messina at full speed. All arrangements were made by wireless for the ships of the fleet to pass through the canal as quickly as possible and to coal at Port Said, where 25,000 tons are stored.

OHIO LEGISLATURE IN SESSION.

Meets at Columbus To-Day to Elect a Successor to Senator Foraker.

The Seventy-eighth General Assembly of Ohio, on call of Gov. Harris, convened Monday in extraordinary session at the statehouse in Columbus at 10 o'clock for the purpose of considering three important subjects: The election of a United States Senator to succeed Joseph B. Foraker, appropriations to run State government and the proposition of a new or remodeled penitentiary and the furnishing of employment for the convicts under the Wertz law abolishing contract labor. An inheritance tax law may be passed because the revenue has fallen off $600,000 through the operation of the county local option law. The question of convict labor will cause considerable debate.

GET POISONED CANDY BY MAIL.

Plot to Murder Suspected—Three Narrowly Escape Death.

A box of home-made candy sent through the mail has nearly resulted in the death of three persons in Denver, and the police are now trying to trace the sender of the package in the belief that a deliberate attempt was made to poison the people to whom it was sent. Mrs. Marie A. Smith, the divorced wife of A. C. Smith, a merchant of Miles City, Mont., and Violet and Osie Smith, her two youngest children, are seriously ill as a result of eating the candy.

ADVISES IDLE TO QUIT CITIES.

Secretary Wilson Declares Laborers Are Needed on Farms.

Promoters of the national convention of the unemployed received a letter from Secretary of Agriculture Wilson the other day suggesting that the unemployed leave the large cities and seek work on the farms, where there is an urgent demand for laborers. The letter, which was a reply to an invitation to attend the convention in St. Louis beginning Jan. 22, was received with little favor. A communication signed by William Loeb, Jr., secretary to President Roosevelt, stated the President regretted his inability to attend the convention.

Castro Submits to Operation.

Former President Castro of Venezuela was operated upon in Berlin Monday by Dr. Israel, the German specialist, for the kidney complaint with which he is suffering.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO

Commerce settled into the usual quiet attending the close of the year, but not without further evidence of substantial recovery and encouragement for the future. While pressure upon weak concerns added materially to the trading defaults reported, the elimination makes a healthier credit situation, and it is significant that no especially serious crash occurred to disturb confidence. Payments through the banks make a gratifying exhibit, those for the month being the greatest since October, 1907, and nearly 40 per cent greater than for December, 1907. The weekly gains recently noted are well sustained, and the loss for the entire year is seen to be barely 2 per cent, a result which is remarkably good in view of the adverse factors. Unusually extended holidays in part account for reduced movements of commodities and crop marketings at this time, but retail trade was well maintained in seasonable merchandise and stocks have become low. Failures reported in the Chicago district number 43, against 22 last week, 28 a year ago, and 29 in 1906. Those with liabilities of more than $5,000 number 11, against 6 last week, 1 a year ago, and 9 in 1906.—Dun's Review.

NEW YORK.

Seasonable quiet is reported in wholesale and jobbing trade, traveling salesmen preparing to start out next week. Confidence in good spring business is general, results of inventories thus far available indicating that reports of depleted stocks were not exaggerated. Conservative buying during the past year made the statistical position very strong among dealers. Open weather retards sales of heavy-weight wearing apparel. The same influence operates, on the other hand, to facilitate outdoor work, and estimating-rooms are busy on plans for future construction. After some overhauling and repairs the leading industrial plants will resume next week with larger forces than at any time during 1908.

A quiet closing of the year was expected in the markets for iron and steel, but an improved demand is anticipated early in January.

Few buyers are in the primary markets for textile fabrics, stock-taking and the holidays combining to make the past week the dullest of the year.

Hides are quiet, but prices are maintained, packers and dealers anticipating that tanners will soon enter the market and operate on a liberal scale. Leather has continued dull.

THE MARKETS

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

Otter Tail (Minn.) county farmers are claiming a revenue of $100 per acre from potatoes this year.

St. Paul is to have a sealer of weights and measures to see that dealers give customers full measure.

The annual rabbit hunt in Pleasant Mound township, Blue Earth county, Minnesota, resulted in the slaughter of 204 rabbits. The game was shipped to St. Paul, and brought $25, which will be used to pay for a big oyster supper in the near future.

Aunt Diana

CHAPTER XIX.—(Continued.)

It was a lovely evening, as Missie said—one of those rare September evenings that come when summer and autumn seem blending into each other. Alison stood for a moment in the hall, debating whether she was too tired to seek Roger in the timber yard, or whether she should indulge in solitary musing under the lime trees. A free half hour was a delicious boon, and she must employ it to the best advantage. She decided after a moment that she was too dull for even Roger's company to cheer her—for she was in one of those moods that the masculine mind finds so difficult to understand—and she was just taking down her garden hat from the peg when a figure came between her and the evening light, a familiar voice spoke her name, and the next moment Alison was in Aunt Diana's arms.

Miss Carrington's kisses were very grave and tender. They spoke volumes, but she seemed to have no words at the moment. But Alison's "Oh, Aunt Di!" was more than eloquent—the quiver of her voice meant ecstasy. But the next moment Miss Carrington put her at arm's length, and, still holding her, scrutinized her face almost pitifully.

"Allie, my poor, dear child, what have they done to you? Oh, dear, what thin cheeks, what heavy eyes!" And suddenly closing her face between her hands, she kissed her again and again, and Miss Carrington was not a demonstrative woman—her caresses meant something out of the common. They brought Alison's soft color back, and the happy tears came into her eyes.

"I am glad I did not tell you," returned, unsteadily; "I shall be quite well and rested now I have seen your dear face again. Oh, Aunt Di, how I have wanted you," her voice sinking still lower.

"Yes, I know," replied Miss Carrington, almost abruptly—all the more because her feelings were not so well under control as usual. "Allie, what must you have thought of my silence? Come, let us sit down somewhere where I can talk to you without interruption. I don't want to see any other face but yours for the present—not even Roger's."

"I think my room will be best," returned Alison, hesitating a little. "Miss Leigh is in the drawing room and Rudel in the dining room, and Roger generally sits in the study when he comes in of an evening. Wait a moment, Aunt Di, please; I must ask Sarah to make some tea for you—supper will not be ready for an hour. Oh," smiling archly, "I know your taste—Aunt Di can not go without her tea."

Miss Carrington offered no remonstrance; perhaps she was in need of refreshment. She waited to see the cabman deposit her luggage in the hall, and then she followed Alison upstairs.

"My dear," she observed, looking round her as she entered, "this is not your old room; I thought this was Missie's?"

"Yes, but Missie had mine, and I did not like to turn her out—it would only have caused unpleasantness. Please do not look so grieved, Aunt Di; I have got used to it, and do not mind the crane so much as I did at first—at least, it does not make my head ache."

"And you never told me. I could not have borne to have thought of you in this room, Allie. Well, you have spared me many a heartache. I should have wanted my child back in her little nest, and have been unhappy because I could not get her." And Miss Carrington positively shuddered as she looked at the grim lines of the crane, and round the dark, heavily furnished room.

"I am glad I did not tell you," returned Alison, gently, as she unfastened Miss Carrington's mantle and waited on her. Perhaps Aunt Diana loved to feel the soft little hands busy about her, for she offered no resistance as Alison smoothed her hair, and brought her a footstool, of which she took possession herself.

"That is right," observed Miss Carrington, stroking the brown head that laid itself in child fashion on her lap. Alison was so very tired there was utter abandon in her attitude, and yet she was so happy, too.

"Now we will have one of our cosy talks—don't look at the door, Allie—I am in no hurry for my tea. My dear, I am longing to tell you how it is your letters have miscarried; I read them all for the first time last night."

"Aunt Di, do you mean that you have flown to us—only telegraph wires could have done it," laughing incredulously.

"You may be sure that I should have flown to you if I had the power," returned Miss Carrington, seriously. "Allie, I was not in Switzerland, as you thought. I was recalled suddenly, a fortnight ago by Mr. Moore's sudden illness. Greville telegraphed for me, and I came home at once."

"Mr. Moore ill!" exclaimed Alison, with a fast paling face.

"Yes, very ill, but, thank God, my dear old friend is better now. It has been an anxious time for us, darling. Greville is cast down and unhappy—you need not look at me so reproachfully. I would not write to you—it would have given you useless pain, and I was so engrossed with nursing that letters were impossible luxuries. Little did I think in my night watching that Allie was anxious and unhappy, too."

"Aunt Di, that is why you look tired."

"Tired! Nonsense, child. It is a blessed thing to wear out one's self for one's friends. I love that sort of fatigue. I could not have left my patient until he was out of danger, but now I can safely trust him in Greville's charge. He is a capital nurse, in spite of his boyishness, and he has Burton to help him. By the bye, Mr. Moore sent his love to Sunny. Stay, I must try and remember his message; he bade his little sunbeam remember her mission, and not to be afraid of cloudy days."

"Did Mr. Greville send me a message, too?" asked Alison, a little timidly. Miss Carrington hesitated.

"Well, I think he sent his love, too—in fact, he sent a great many messages, but I told him I could not be a carrier of nonsense, and should only deliver one—'That he had kept his promise, and had been working famously.'"

"Oh, I am so glad," returned Alison, brightening at this. "Aunt Di—it was not good of you to keep Mr. Moore's illness from me; I should have liked to have shared your anxiety. Dear old man, I am so thankful he is spared."

"His character seemed loveller than ever in his hours of suffering," observed Miss Carrington, thoughtfully; "he was so patient, so grateful to us all for our care of him. I understood then what being like a little child meant—it seemed as though it were we who were blind, not he—he seemed so steeped in the light of heaven."

"Do you think he wanted to die?" asked Alison, in an awestruck voice. "How strange it seems that he should be so willing to go."

"Why not?" replied her aunt. "Death has no terrors for him. Why should he fear the summons from the Master whom he loved and tried to serve here, and who died on the cross for his redemption? And yet he was resigned to stay, for Greville's sake. 'The lad wants me a little longer,' he said once. 'Well, I suppose I can spare my boy a year or two out of eternity; I mean to have no will of my own about it. When the Master calls I shall be ready, but perhaps—for who knows His graciousness?—He may be thinking of my boy, too.'"

"How I should love to see him again!" exclaimed Alison with a sigh.

"So you will by and by, I hope. He missed you dreadfully, Alison."

"And you, Aunt Di?"

"I am not going to tell you about that." Then, as Alison's eyes looked pleading, she continued earnestly: "Child, I believe we are a sort of necessity to each other—at least, I find my life will not shape itself properly without you. I am always thinking how Allie will like this or that. Your absence quite took away the pleasure of my trip. You naughty child, you look delighted; but there comes my tea—please pour me a cup, and then tell me all about your poor father."

Alison was soon narrating the story of the last fortnight. Miss Carrington had received hers and Roger's letters late the previous night, and Mr. Moore's had put her in possession of the latest news; still there was much that she wished to hear. She listened attentively, and without interruption, as the girl poured out the history of her hopes and fears. Her grave, interested face, and now and then a tightened grasp of Alison's hand, spoke in mute sympathy, but otherwise she said little.

"It has been a dreadful time," finished Alison. "Roger and I were so afraid of papa, and then Missie was so unhappy and ill. That is Roger's whistle, Aunt Di—he is wondering what has become of me. Shall I call him in?" And Miss Carrington nodded.

Roger's look of intense surprise amused them excessively, but he welcomed his aunt with evident satisfaction.

"Now Allie will be all right again," he observed, with a smile at her; "she has been sick for months, Aunt Diana. You are not going to take her away from us just at present, are you?"

"No, not just now," returned Miss Carrington, quietly. "I am going to stop until you are tired of me, and then Allie and I must say good-by to each other for a little longer. What should you say to bringing her for a few weeks in the spring, if your father gets better? You look in want of a change, Roger; they are working you too hard, my boy."

"You must not tempt me, Aunt Diana," he returned, rather gravely. "There will be no holiday for me next year. The whole concern rests on my shoulders at present, and our manager is a defaulter. Alison shall go with you, and welcome."

"Well, well, we must see about it; winter comes before spring. There is plenty of time, and I don't mean to give up my plan of having you and Allie together. Now I must see your father; will you take me to him?" And Roger consented with alacrity.

In the passage she stopped and laid her hand upon his arm.

"Thank you for taking care of Allie; I know how good you have been to her."

"It is she who has been good to us," he returned, with a sudden flush. "Aunt Diana, you do not know the blessing she has been to us; we have to thank you for that. Alison would never have been the girl she is if you had not taken so much pains with her."

"Don't make me vain, Roger."

"Missie and I have proposed buying her a little red morocco book and presenting it to her," continued Roger, with dry humor; "the title will be 'Aunt Diana's Sayings,' for Allie brings out a fresh one every day. Missie says she is inventive, and coins them herself; but I have an idea that they are genuine."

Miss Carrington shook her head at him, and only bade him lead the way to his father's room. Alison had already prepared him for his sister-in-law's visit, and he held out his hand with a pleased smile.

"This is kind, Diana. I said the silence was not like you; my poor girl here has been fretting herself about it; but of course you never got the letters."

"No, indeed; Alison will tell you about it presently. It is too late for me to prolong my visit now. Invalids should be quiet at this hour. You see I understand all about it, Ainslie; but I am grieved to the heart to see you like this."

"You must not make yourself unhappy about it; it is only a case of patience, and I have good, attentive children. I wish their mother could see them; she was always so proud of them."

"Yes, indeed! Poor Florence, you must miss her, Ainslie." And Miss Carrington's lip quivered slightly, for her sister had been the object of her dearest affection; she had never felt so drawn to Florence's husband as she did now; her gray eyes rested upon him pityingly.

"Children, you must take care of your aunt; she must be tired with her journey. To-morrow you must come and sit with me, Diana." Miss Carrington felt herself gently dismissed, but she did not misunderstand him, and, pressing his hard kindly, she followed the others from the room.

CHAPTER XX.

Missie received the news of Aunt Diana's arrival with an exclamation of dismay, and a hot flush came to her face.

"Oh, Alison, it will be dreadful to see her! I always was afraid of her, you know; she is one of those painfully good people who make one feel small and horrid. Please don't let her come in to-night." And Missie sat bolt upright in a panic.

Now, Miss Carrington had quick ears, and she caught the most of this speech and laughed to herself softly; for it is those who try hard to be good who are the most conscious of evil within, and Miss Carrington was one who had often cried with St. Paul, "The good that I would I do not." Her heart felt very soft toward the willful little girl who had brought such misery on herself and others, even before she entered the room, but her first sight of Missie gave her a feeling of surprise. She said afterward she ceased to wonder at Ainslie's infatuation for the child, for she was certainly a bewitching little creature.

The pink ribbons in Missie's dainty dressing gown were not pinker than her cheeks, her blue eyes shone with uneasy light, and the soft, fair hair lay in delicate rings above the pretty, childish face; her frightened, appealing look would have touched a colder heart than Miss Carrington's, and it was with real affection that she bent over her. But Missie's tender conscience made her shrink from her aunt's kisses.

"Please don't be so kind to me, Aunt Diana—every one is, and it is not right."

"My dear little girl, we none of us want to see our poor little butterfly broken on the wheel; we are far too sorry for you. Of course, you have been a naughty child; you have been setting your small world on fire, and have got your pretty wings singed. Well, now you have learned wisdom through painful experience, and we must all help you to get the lesson perfect."

"I don't think any one was ever so wicked as I, Aunt Diana," sighed Missie.

"Well, my dear," returned her aunt, briskly, "it is not my concern to go about weighing my neighbor's trespasses in a balance; I don't fancy human scales would be nicely adjusted; but I am quite sure of one thing—that I was a very naughty child myself—the red-cheeked apples I stole gave me moral indigestion still."

It was impossible to look grave over this; Alison's merry laugh was infectious. Miss Carrington stayed a few more minutes, questioning Missie about her arm, and talking kindly to her, until the poor child was quite happy and at her ease.

"I don't know what it is," she said that night, when Alison gave her the good-night kiss; "you all seem trying to make me believe that I have not been naughty at all, and that there is nothing to forgive."

"I thought forgiveness meant that," returned Alison, simply; "you know how the Bible speaks of sins blotted out—that means the page is white again—one can write freshly across the blank."

There never was a merrier supper table than the one at The Holms that night; late as it was, Poppie sat up for it, and no one rebuked her for her chatter. Rudel kept up the character of a bashful school boy; but even he relaxed his wide-eyed gravity when Otter was admired and kind inquiries made after Sulky. Aunt Diana knew the way to a boy's heart; though she never had a boy of her own; but there are some unmarried women whose large natures can embrace a whole world of little ones, and such a one was Aunt Diana.

But as she talked and laughed with the others, her keen gray eyes followed Alison's every movement. It seemed to Miss Carrington that her darling was changed somehow—some of the brightness that had always lighted her young face had faded a little; she was graver and more in earnest.

"Allie has laid aside her leading strings, and has learned to walk alone," she said to herself; "though she loves me as much as ever, she needs me less. I ought to be glad to know this, for I can not expect to live forever."

(To be continued.)

As Things Are.

It was evening in the great west. The golden sun had gone down over the cornfields and all was silent.

"Maria, what did you do with that Rubens that came today?"

"I hung it up in the art gallery next to the Rembrandt."

"That's right, how about that new balloon we ordered?"

"We got a wireless from the factory today, saying that it wouldn't be ready until next week."

"Um! That will give one of them chauffeurs of ours an excuse to be idle. Couldn't get any of them chaps to help with the hay. How is the new French car acting?"

"Fine, but I had to telephone for a new set of tires."

"Did that consignment of government bonds come?"

"Yes."

"And how about that first folio edition of Shakespeare?"

"That's here."

And then the Kansas farmer, removing his evening clothes and putting on his overalls, went out on the estate and looked up for the night.—Thomas L. Masson in Success Magazine.

A Question of Honor.

Mother—Willie, you wicked boy, you haven't kept your word. You promised you would never steal jam, and here I find you at it again.

Willie—Well, it's no worse than you. You said you were going out this evening, and if you had kept your word you wouldn't have found me stealing jam.

Quite Out of Place.

Timid—That boss of yours is so pompous he always makes me feel ill at ease.

Clark—Strange; I felt out of place when he was talking to me to-day.

Timid—That so?

Clark—Yes; he was telling me I needn't come back after Saturday.

Wise Move.

"Who's your ideal of bravery?" queried the old bachelor. "Is it General Kuroki?

"No," answered the optimistic dispenser, "it's a Mormon."—Chicago Tribune.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

A horse owned by Wallace Storey, west of Bluffton, was killed by falling into an old well.

The Rev. J. Clair Leech, of Winona, has been called to the pulpit of Westminster Presbyterian church in Fort Wayne, vacated last fall by the Rev. W. H. Wilson.

Prof. Luther Dennis, who made several balloon ascensions in this State, recently took a picture of the town of Hope, in Bartholomew County, while he was at an altitude of 3,000 feet.

In a shipment of logs being loaded at Clay City are two cut from a wild cherry tree which are from three to four feet in diameter, the largest of the kind ever seen on the yards in the history of timber traffic at Clay City. Recently a land owner on Eel river sold ten poplar trees for $1,200.

Mayor Ed. Voris, Crawfordville's famous "shooting" mayor, recently won the championship of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky at Dayton, Ky., defeating twenty-three entries in a twenty-five live-bird contest. Voris killed twenty-four out of twenty-five birds. He won a $270 purse and a gold medal.

A 4-year-old son of Marion Morelack, near Tipton, swallowed a small coil spring from an alarm clock, or at least his parents believe he did, and they hurried him to a physician for relief. The child was not suffering any pain, and doctors decided to wait until unfavorable symptoms are manifested by the clock attachment before they act.

After having been married forty-seven years, George Slapf, of Mishawaka, has entered suit for absolute divorce from Emily Slapf. The complaint charges abandonment, it being asserted that the defendant left the home of the plaintiff eight years ago. The two were married in 1861, and have children with families of their own.

Valparaiso University, which furnishes board to over 1,200 students, has installed potato peelers, which it is estimated will save from 700 to 800 bushels of potatoes a year. The potatoes have the "hide taken off" in a contrivance with an emery covered bottom and sides and as it revolves the process of paring is accomplished with the exception of removing the eyes. Machinery also washes the dishes and cuts the bread.

While Mrs. Alfred Adams and her little daughter were walking on the interurban track near Carmel, the daughter's foot caught in a crossing. The mother's efforts to loosen the foot were of no avail. A car came in sight and was bearing down on them at a rapid rate. The mother tugged frantically at the foot while the child screamed and waved her arms for the car to stop. When the car was almost on them and death for mother and child seemed certain, the foot came loose and the mother jerked her daughter to the side of the track. The car whizzed by, touching the mother's dress.

Bernard Norris, 15 years old, living in the country west of Shoals, was burning brush heaps when his clothing ignited. He was alone and succeeded in tearing off a portion of his clothing. His dog, attracted to the scene, lent its aid, and with its teeth helped strip the flaming clothing from the boy. Although suffering excruciating pain he managed to walk home, accompanied by his faithful dog. He found his parents gone and summoned help by telephone. The flesh on his legs and body from the knees to the breast is literally cooked. Had it not been for the assistance of the dog he would probably have died near the scene of the accident.

After seeing moving pictures in a vaudeville show in Evansville, where Indians were represented killing white people, Laudry Brandley, aged 9, and George Huskey, aged 9, tried to kill Roy Berry, aged 6, with an ax. They tied the Berry boy to a log in his father's stable and had a heavy ax raised and were going to cut off his head when another companion rushed into the house and informed the lad's mother. The mother reached the stable in time to throw herself on the boy's neck, in Pocahontas fashion, and save his life. The Berry boy was a willing victim, and said he would have left his companions kill him had not his mother arrived on the scene.

Dan Gift, an eccentric character at Huntington, has been living in a double house in the eastern part of the city belonging to Bob Johnson. But Dan has been having a hard winter and finally when his rent was hopelessly in arrears, the proprietor ordered Dan to get out. Dan was greatly perplexed. He had no way to move. He had no place to move to. How he was going to obey his landlord he did not know. But the fairies came to his aid. The opposite side of the double house was empty and when Mr. Johnson called at the house several days later to see if his orders had been obeyed there was Dan, smilingly ensconced on the other side. Now the matter has been dropped.

W. G. Munson, who has been in Illinois for the last two years visiting, has returned to Shelby County and he brought with him the longest whiskers ever seen in the county. They measure just twenty-seven inches.

Since the accidental shooting of Cecil McCleary, of near Spurgeon, all efforts to find his father have been of no avail. George McCleary, father of the boy, who was shot, is a peddler, and at present is on the road. The condition of young McCleary is critical.

The 3-year-old son of Richard Grable, of Petersburg, was fatally burned by its clothes catching fire from the grate.

Burglars entered the postoffice at Eagletown, cracked the safe and got away with $200 in stamps and some valuable papers. They stole a horse and buggy and escaped.

Mrs. Ida Anson, of Warsaw, formerly of Logansport, became a widow recently, the second time in two years, and each time her husband was killed by the cars. A telegram was received by a relative stating that her husband had been killed on the Pan Handle near Louisville. Just two years ago her first husband was killed on the Pan Handle railroad in the yards of Logansport.

The large barn on the farm of Stephen Sparks, south of Connersville, was destroyed by fire. The origin of the blaze is unknown. The loss amounts to $3,000 with $500 insurance. A span of mules, for which Mr. Sparks recently received an offer of $500, was burned, together with 1,600 bushels of corn, fifteen hogs ready for the market, farm implements and a large amount of hay.

Voght Vandergolven, of Pittsburg, exhibited in Delphi recently a specimen of the "monkey-faced" owl. It was killed by his son George, near Carrollton bridge, north of Delphi. It measured from tip to tip of wings forty inches and weighed only one pound. He turned the bird over to the High School faculty to be added to the school zoological department. The bird differs from the ordinary owl mostly in that its eyes are encircled with hair of a steel gray color.

Trappers living along the rivers and streams of Clay County say the present winter will be the mildest in the history of the county. They base their belief on the fact that the pelts of the animals they have caught are in poorer condition than ever before. The fur of the minks and other animals is shorter and thinner, which is an infallible sign of an open winter, they say. The fur is so poor this season that it is almost valueless, and they are finding hard work in disposing of the furs.

Such tempting morsels as peppermint lozenges and marshmallows are being fed to the two dozen or more captive opossums that are being prepared for the annual "possum feast" at Bethel, in northern Wayne County, January 23. More possums are yet to be captured, for several hundred persons will grace the feast. The proceeds as usual will be given to the Grand Army post of the village and will be used to defray the expenses of the Memorial day observance next May.

While a dredge boat was excavating to Marsh creek, five miles southwest of Princeton, a number of bones of what had evidently been a mastodon were unearthed. The bones are in good state of preservation, and include a front leg bone, a portion of the jaw and an almost perfect tooth of large size. The jaw bone was about two and one-half feet in length. The bones were taken out by Charles Dougan, about six feet below the surface, and were turned over to Mayor Cushman, of Princeton.

Mrs. Clarissa Newcomb, who died recently in Columbus, left ten children and was the mother of thirteen. Her husband, Francis M. Newcomb, who died two years ago, was the father of thirteen children, eleven of whom are still living. He was three times married, and was the father and stepfather of thirty-six children. Twelve children were born the first time he was married and to his second union one was born. His second wife had ten children and his third wife thirteen children when they married him.

It is probable close and untiring duty in caring for Mrs. Daniel White, who died recently at Colfax of blood poisoning, may cause two more deaths, that of the attending physician, Dr. W. H. Wisehart, whose condition from the attack is very serious, and Miss Mary Hert, trained nurse, of Indianapolis, who has been attacked by the disease. It is said also that the husband shows symptoms of the trouble. Although very sick, Miss Hert will not cease her efforts to care for Dr. Wisehart and the husband. The blood poisoning is said to be of a very acute form.

Zach T. Dungan, claim agent for the Peru division of the Wabash railroad, each year keeps an exact record of the number of miles he travels during a year and he finds that his business in 1908 took him more than 41,290 miles, 40,125 on railroad trains, 1,290 on electric lines, 400 in livery conveyances and 35 on handcar. In the seven years Mr. Dungan has served in his present position with the Wabash he has kept an accurate record of the distance traveled and the places he has been. In the seven years he has traveled 262,860 miles or ten and one-half times the distance around the earth with a few miles to spare.

It is said that Rev. E. L. Semans, of Winchester, pastor of the M. E. church there, will irestire from the ministry in the spring after thirty-nine years in the work. He is the father of Rev. R. L. Semans, formerly of Fort Wayne.

S. M. Thompson, of Shelbyville, has circulated a petition to ask the Government not to remove the picture of Abraham Lincoln from the postage stamps, upon which it appears at the present time. The petition has many signatures of business men.

SAYS ONLY CRIMINALS NEED FEAR SLEUTHS

President Roosevelt Hits Congress in a Special Message on Secret-Service Row.

DIDN'T CHARGE CORRUPTION.

Quotes Record Against Men Who Had Law Changed—Frauds Unearthed by Detectives.

"There is no more foolish outcry than this against spies; only criminals need fear our detectives." This sentence from a former utterance of himself on the subject is hurled at the House of Representatives by President Roosevelt Monday in a special message on the secret service and the action of Congress in cutting down the appropriation for this part of the government's work.

The message, which was eagerly awaited, was the President's answer to a request of Congress for evidence to suppport his statement in his last annual message that "the chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated."

No Charge of Corruption.

President Roosevelt declares he made no charge of corruption against members of the present Congress. If he had proof of such corruption, he says it would be the duty of the government to start prosecutions, as it prosecuted the late Senator Mitchell and others, and in regard to the "alleged delinquencies of members," he says, it is not the duty of the President to report on that subject.

On the question of the secret service being used to "shadow" Congressmen, the President asserts that this was the main argument used by the men who were instrumental in cutting down the appropriation. Chairman Tawney of the committee and Walter I. Smith of Iowa, and Swager Shirley of Kentucky, two of its members, are quoted as using such arguments, while the bill was being discussed. Mr. Shirley's argument, put in the form of a question, is quoted from the Congressional Record, when Mr. Sherley opposed investigation by the secret service of "a member of Congress accused of conduct unbecoming a gentleman and a member of Congress."

The President says, while he makes no sweeping charge against the members of the House, the Committee on Appropriations, headed by Mr. Tawney, is to be blamed for the amendment to the law as passed.

Real Issue as He Sees It.

Getting down to a discussion of the issues involved, the President says:

"This issue is simply, Does Congress desire that the government shall have at its disposal the most efficient instrument for the detection of criminals and the prevention and punishment of crime, or does it not? This action of the House last May was emphatically an action against the interest of justice and in effect of benefit only to lawbreakers. Is the House now willing to remedy the wrong?"

The President then gives a list of cases where frauds against the government were unearthed and punished by the aid of the secret service. These included the Nebraska and Oregon land frauds, the Gaynor & Greene contract swindle, the Honduras lottery, the ink scandal in the bureau of printing, and other similar deliquencies. A letter by Secretary Cortelyou to Chairman Tawney last May which accompanies the document gives further data on these cases.

Welcomes Probe of Departments.

As indicating the President's attitude to Congress on the subject, the message says:

"Any instance of abuse by the secret service or other investigating force in the departments should be unsparingly punished; and Congress should hold itself ready at any and all times to investigate the executive departments whenever there is reason to believe that any such instance of abuse has occurred. I wish to emphasize my more than cordial acquiescence in the view that this is not only the right of Congress, but emphatically its duty. To use the secret service in the investigation of purely private or political matters would be a gross abuse. There has been so single instance of such abuse during my term of President."

41 Are Sentenced to Death.

The military court in Yekaterineslav, Russia, pronounced forty-one death sentences, of which nine were for recent crimes. Thirty-two of the condemned men were strikers in the railroad troubles of October, 1905. In addition to the death sentences twelve strikers were condemned to penal servitude for life, forty-eight to lesser terms of exile and thirty-nine were acquitted.

Appendix Has a Use.

According to a London hospital physician, the vermiform appendix, which has always been considered a useless and dangerous organ, has at last justified its existence. It is now being used as a short cut whereby medicines can be administered to the lower intestines, a part of the digestive system hitherto difficult of access. The new operation consists in cutting through the appendix and inserting a glass tube through which medicine are applied directly to the mucous lining of the lower intestines.

Did Andrew Carnegie mean that "the jig is up" with the trusts or the people?

The steelmakers look as angrily at Andrew Carnegie as if he had turned State's evidence.

Now that Castro is down and out, he is afforded ample opportunity to see himself as others see him.

Fourteen years for the grafter and briber, Abe Ruef. Good for Frisco. Now let Pittsburg have an inning.

This country consumes 7,000,000,000 pounds of sugar a year, but it consumes also a vast quantity of lemons.

After a personal trip to Panama the Congressmen will be able to tell at sight the difference between an isthmus and a canal.

The Taft Club is to take the place of the "Big Stick" in the South, and is expected to accomplish more through milder methods.

If memory is not at fault, the Beef Trust was dissolved a few years ago, and yet here is the Government after it again. Why don't the infernal Trusts stay dead when they are officially killed?

Probably John D. may have expressed some surprise that his friend Compers was not condemned to pay a fine of $29,240,000 instead of being sentenced to undergo a twelve month imprisonment.

Congress was made angry by that part of the Presidents late message in which he criticised the legislative body for limiting the scope of the work of the national detective bureau. Congress called upon the President for a bill of particulars. The bill of Particulars has been presented and Congressman Tawney and some others now regret that the President has been further stirred up. Mr. Tawney holds his seat in Congress by the tenure of a very slender majority and it is thought probable that the President's criticism will be the end of his political career.

Mr. Garfield, Secretary of the Interior, shows in his annual report that the names of 50,676 pensioners were taken off the pension rolls during the past year by death. Nevertheless Congress is so liberal and pension agents are so active that the army of pensioners is kept up. There are still on the pension rolls more than one million of persons, a much greater number than during the years immediately following the Civil war. It is this pension list that makes the military establishment of the United States more expensive than that of any other country.

The appropriations by the Government and the contributions by societies and private individuals in behalf of the unfortunate people of Southern Italy are more generous than those inspired by any previous catastrophe. Less than three years ago at the time of the San Francisco earthquake, the people of this country contributed so generously that the President discouraged foreign gifts and the relief committee of San Francisco had a considerable surplus left on its hands and this has been applied to the relief of the unhappy people in the earthquake area of Italy. The loss of life in San Francisco was small but in Southern Italy it has been enormous as counted by the hundred thousand. The whole world is responding liberally to the call of need.

Federal expenditures, 1878, $135,000,000; Federal expenditures, 1908, $638,000,000; Federal expenditures, 1938—what?

If anyone should call you a "wassermucker" don't get red in the face and want to fight. He will simply mean that you are high and dry on the water wagon.

Pittsburg may be, as Mr. Carnegie intimates, the cheapest place in the world for making steel. But with preparations to arrest the whole town for graft, the "steal" industry seems to be the more flourishing.

It is twenty five years since the Civil Service law went into effect and its last report was of special interest containing as it does a brief history of the work of the Civil Service Commission during the first twenty five years of its life. Since its establishment in 1883 the growth of the merit system has been uninterrupted and its advantages over the spoils system have been accepted and acknowledged by all. Both political parties endorse the principles of Civil service although doubtless many individual politicians would be glad to stab it under the fifth rib. It is a fact however that six states and ninety cities of the country have adopted civil service competitive examinations for filling clerical and other offices. During the year of 1908 there were one hundred and sixty seven thousand applicants for civil service examination as against one hundred and twenty nine thousand in 1907 and 41,000 persons were appointed because of excellence in competitive examinations. The competitive positions are number 206,000. During President Roosevelt's term of office the number of positions under the government subject to competitive examination has nearly doubled for in 1901 the number was only 110,000.

Primaries in Ohio.

Hereafter there will be no more city and county conventions in the state of Ohio. The new primary law which went into effect January 1, 1909, does away with them and in the future both parties will nominate their tickets at direct primaries. Primaries to nominate candidates for the county offices or to select delegates to state and district conventions will be held at the usual polling places on the third Tuesday of May in even numbered years. Primaries to nominate candidates for municipal and township offices and members of the school board will be held on the first Monday in September of odd numbered years. The parties must hold their primaries on the same day and the voting will be in the same place as in general elections. The primaries will be held under the direction of the board of elections and will be conducted the same as regular elections, with the exception that there will be separate ballots and ballot boxes for each party. A voter affiliated with one party cannot vote with another and if he does, makes himself liable to the payment of a fine of from $5 to $50.

Taxable Property.

Auditor Emery Shook has completed his abstract of the taxable property of DeKalb county showing among other things that if all the tax assessed against the property in the county, both personal and real estate, for 1908 were paid in the two installments during 1909 May and November, the enormous sum of $826,492.32 would roll into the twenty-one different funds of the state, county and civil corporations. Mr. Shook's figures show the amount of taxable property in the various towns, cities and townships to be as follows: Butler, $692,495; Jackson, $1,045,250; Concord, $1,298,755; Newville, $405,200; Stafford, $552,745; Wilmington, $1,399,090; Union, $633,985; Richland, $1,005,890; Fairfield, $836,660; Smithfield, $841,025; Franklin, $803,500; Troy, $419,770; Keyser, $878,670; Grant, $875,730; Auburn, $1,652,400; Waterloo, $459,719; Butler, $750,430; Garrett, $1,087,465; Ashley, $128,925; St. Joe, $183,090; Corunna, $173,500; Altona, $72,245.

Pension Advocated.

Teachers of the public school of Indiana at their state meeting held at Indianapolis, voted unanimously for the appointment of a committee to work for a law providing a diability benefit and a pension for superannuated teachers.

The vote, looking to the passage of an act by the Indiana legislature in 1911, creating a school pension fund and for paying teachers a sick disablement benefit, was on motion that the president of the Indiana State Teachers' association be empowered to appoint a committee of three to act with representative of the County and Cities and Towns Superintendents' associations of this state.

No attempt will be made to get the teachers' pension measure before the coming legislature, as the instructors wish to take plenty of time and have no hitches when their bill goes before the state general assembly.

The teachers' pension plan is not a new one, but has never before assumed definite shape before the state instructors.

A Letter from Panama.

Dec. 1 1908

Dear Sister and all:—

Will try and answer your most welcome letter of two days ago, was very glad to hear that you are all well and I am feeling fine. We left Magdalena Bay December 1st. and stopped for two days at LaVon which is a seven day run from Magdalena Bay, then it took us two days to come on down here to Panama. This is a fine place. What do you think about a person getting up in the morning eating breakfast on the Pacific Coast dinner on the Atlantic and back on the Pacific for supper. Leslie and I and about 1,000 more did that. They arranged a liberty party Monday evening to leave the boat Tuesday morning to go and see the Panama Canal. They had a special train for us (the railroad runs along the Canal.) They took us free of charge and we enjoyed it very much. It was a fine trip, we could see hundreds of men working. We left the ship at 8:30 in the morning, arrived at a place called Calone on the Atlantic Coast, were there an hour for dinner, then started back the train running slow so we could see everything, it is sixty miles from one coast to the other. We arrived back to the ship about 7:00 o'clock in the evening. When we reached the ship I went up and looked at the liberty list for next day and I saw my name marked up for liberty the next day so I had another good time. I am going to send you folks some post cards of the places here. Well I suppose it is beginning to get cold around there now, it is as warm here as it is there in July and August. We are to leave December 2nd. for Calalo. South America, it is a 13 day run from here. We will spend Xmas and New Year's Day at sea. They gave us chicken and turkey for Thanksgiving and I think we will have turkey for the above days mentioned. I expect to see Walter James in a few days for we are going to get up a liberty party and go over to visit the boys on the South Dakota boat. Tell mother I am getting along fine. Well as I can't think of anything more to write just now will close for this time hoping to hear from you soon.

I remain as ever,
Your loving brother,
George.

Is it a Hold-up?

John Beams relates an experience which he had Saturday evening, which was not so pleasant, although it was not what he anticipated. As he was on his way home from town he heard someone running toward him but he was unable to see them it being so dark. He spoke but no one answered and the first thoughts were "It's a hold-up" but a little later it proved that it was only a boy passing on the run and when they found out who each other were they had a good laugh. But both were pretty badly scared and John is glad that it was not any more serious than it was.

Lecture Course

The M. E. church has a course of three numbers stated as follows:

Rev. C. C. Cissell, D. D.....Jan. 26
Miss Philley.....Feb. 11
C. A. Rowand.....Mar. 11

Each number of really high order. We guarantee a strictly first class course. Mr. Cissell is a profound thinker and a very pleasing speaker. Miss Philley is equal to the best in her line. Mr. Rowand ranks among the foremost preachers and Chatauqua lecturers of the state. All for 50 cts., single number 20 cts. Come everybody.

A Horrible Hold-up

"About ten years ago my brother was "held up" in his work, health and happiness by what was believed to be hopeless Consumption," writes W. R. Lipscomb, of Washington, N. C. "He took all kinds of remedies and treatment from several doctors, but found no help till he used Dr. King's New Discovery and was wholly cured by six bottles. He is a well man today." It's quick to relieve and the surest cure for weak or sore lungs, Hemorrhages, Coughs and Colds, Bronchitis, LaGrippe, Asthma and all Bronchial affections. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by Harry Milliman.

Best 4th. Class Office Outfit

Spencerville now has one of the best equipped, 4th. class postoffices in the country. Saturday evening a case arrived which is a "buts." It contains 32 lock boxes, 130 call boxes and 70 general delivery. The case is quarter sawed oak and it is made in the latest design. It contains a money order window, letter and paper drop and stamp window. Call boxes rent for 15 cents per quarter and lock boxes 25 cents per quarter. Mr. Beams is giving Spencerville an up-to-date office and should be appreciated. The interior of the office is furnished with new furniture and in all it makes a striking appearance.

Pastor Leaves This Week

Rev. Dressel who has been the pastor of both the E. L. churches of this place and St. Joe for the past two years has accepted a call from the church at Elkhart, Ind. His ability as a minister and church worker has been recognized by both of the churches and he will be greatly missed. Other ministers are in view of consideration and an effort will be made to fill the vacancy as soon as possible. Their goods were sent Tuesday and they will leave this week.

Local News Items.

Mr. John Sturgis left Butler, Friday for Paducah, Ky., where he will be engaged in evangelistic singing for five weeks. His services are constantly in demand. We are pleased to note his success as a vocalist.

Miss Charlott Miller was stricken with heart trouble while at school last Friday morning. She was taken to the home of Mrs. Steward near by and was worked with all forenoon before she was in a speakable condition. Her parents were notified and came and took her home.

K of P's May Erect Hall

It is rumored that the K. of P's. at this place will this summer erect a new hall, the plans of which is quite extensive and when the building is completed will cost about $5,000 The lodge already has a good sum of money laid aside for this purpose which amounts to $2,000. As we hear it the building will be two stories high and a basement below for suppers, gatherings and any public doings. The first floor to be occupied by some store and the second floor to be the hall room. This is just what we want and may it not be all rumor.

Elected Officers

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the Lutheran church elected the following officers for the ensuing six months:

Young Ladies Organize

Our young ladies have organized a club consisting of ten members, on some evening of each week they will meet at the home of one of its members for entertainment. It would be well for the young ladies to make a permanent organization out of it and have a limit of from fifteen to twenty members, make a program for the year with some special topic for discussion each night. This would be an educational advantage as well as an entertaining feature. At the first meeting, which was held at the home of Audry Wade, five members were present and an enjoyable evening was spent together.

Napoleon Before the Convention.

When Barras introduced Napoleon to the convention as a fit man to be intrusted with the command the president asked:

"Are you willing to undertake the defense of the convention?"

"Yes," was the reply. After a time the president continued:

"Are you aware of the magnitude of the undertaking?"

"Perfectly," replied Napoleon, fixing his eyes upon his questioner, "and I am in the habit of accomplishing that which I undertake."

A Coin.

The smallest coin in actual circulation is a sort of wafer made from a resinous juice and used by the natives in the Malay peninsula. It has a value of one ten-thousandth of a cent.

The smallest metal coin is the Portuguese three reis piece, worth six twenty-fifths of a cent, while the smallest English coin is a Gibraltar piece, the five millesima, worth one-quarter of a cent. There has been put into use in the canal zone a small silver coin worth about a penny, and this is probably the smallest silver piece ever coined.

Are Doing Some Hard Work

W. W. Fisher, the grammer department teacher, is doing his level best to have a full class to graduate this year. Some extra work is being done by the class in the evenings. The class met with Fred Steward, last week, and studied together. If this work is kept up there is no reason why they can't pull through. There are about 15 in the class. It would be an honor for the teacher to have them all pass out together into the high school.

FACING THE YEARS.

By Henry F. Cope.

"The power of an endless life."—Hebrews vii., 16.

No man knows what the coming year has for him Before us all it stretches dark and mysteriously. Yet only the craven hearted regard it with fear. Something within us bids us take up its days even with rejoicing, though it be no other than the joy of him who tackles some new task, who grapples with some worthy foe.

Why should men thus face their days? Why do we feel that he who thinks of life as a thing to be endured is an unworthy being, a coward among his kind, and a traitor to life's opportunities? Is it not because we set the present in the light of the eternal and think of life in terms of the infinite reaches of our immortality?

They who live only from day to day, like driven cattle, who set the years in separation as weary miles to be taken one at a time, to be forgotten when trodden, and feared when lying before, to such life is indeed a tale of bitterness which cannot too soon find its finish. Only the fear of the darker mystery of death binds such beings to the darkness of life.

No life can be measured in any allotted span. Seventy years or a hundred cannot tell its tale. It reaches its roots far back through many centuries; it sends forth its fruits no man knows through how many ages. Even life drinks deep of immortality. And it is this sense of the reach of our selves to the past, and to the future, that makes possible our living in the present.

This sense of belonging to an endless life is found in man everywhere. While the man of science writes of it and the intelligent civilized man talks it over with his neighbor, the bushmen of Australia is sitting by his fire under the stars and, far into the night, as the embers glow down, he talks with his fellows on the whence and the whither of being; he dreams of life before and pictures life beyond.

This day and this new year, these are but part of eternity. The life that I must live through them belongs as much to the long past and the infinite future as it belongs to this passing day. No day is complete in itself; it bears the fruitage of eternity; it sows the seeds of the unknown future. The wondrous living in eternity does not wait until after death for its beginnings; it is our now.

So I take up these new days with joyous anticipation, for are they not to bring to me the accumulated wealth of days gone by? This new year must of necessity be a richer year than last, because it possesses all the eternal, undying elements of the last And more than this, in increasing measure it brings down to me all the treasures of the centuries before.

Each year in a true life goes a little higher on living's long ascent, and so brings before it a farther vista, a grander view. If I truly live this year, shall I not know more of the wonder of life, see more of the mysteries of great souls, and read a little farther into the secrets of the universe?

He who does not hunger for more life does not know the life he has. The coming days always promise this, the chance to live a little more, not simply to live longer, but to live larger, to touch life on yet more sides, and to taste of more of its delights and wonders. In youth we long for manhood simply because it promises more life, in manhood for maturity.

So, too, this sense of the infinite stretches of our lives, of their unity with all eternity, gives us a brave forelooking in the new days. We would live these days well and nobly because they are without end, they go on down through all the days. The new year is a chance to play our part and to give something of ourselves to all the years.

Surely we can take these new days with the uplifted hearts, the hope filled faces of the children of heaven. We are not dull slaves being driven to daily drudgery; we are free men rejoicing to live to the full the life that now is for the sake of the life that is to be ours and by the garnered strength of all the lives that have been.

OUTSIDE AND INSIDE.

By Rev. George Clarke Peck, D. D.

Ask . . . that your joy may be full.—John xiv., 24.

Men reproach us for asking too much; the divine complaint is that we do not ask enough. "He wants the earth and heaven, too," said a man by way of criticism upon the inordinate acquisitiveness of another—"He wants the earth and heaven, too." But God is chiefly sorry because men want only the earth and fail to put in any claim for heaven, with all the bounties for which it stands. The Bible fairly yearns over our poverty of asking.

Some one says that there are two sides to every question, and then adds humorously, "The outside and the inside." The eternal emphasis of religion is upon the inwardness of things.

Our fault commonly is that we are satisfied with externals. Real friendship is always an inward possession. It is won in terms of soul. "Purchase not thy friends by gifts, lest when thou ceasest to give they cease to love." As if friends could really be won by champagne at $5 a bottle or at the price of elaborate hospitality. I knew a man who spent half a fortune in buying friends. Yet I doubt if he could count upon their coming to his funeral, unless they were assured of a wine supper. Friendship can neither be cajoled nor bribed. What we win by such frank commercial methods is merely a husk. Real friendship never crosses the doorsill of any life, save his who has paid for it an inward price.

Pleasure also has its outside and its inside. A child gets the outside of pleasure when he possesses a multitude of toys, and is not amused by any of them. He has gotten the inwardness of pleasure when, by virtue of a happy heart, he finds happiness in the simplest flower or toy. The fault of our pleasure-loving age is not that it seeks pleasure, but that it concerns itself with the lesser gifts of joy. Real joy is of the heart. It is never born of a multitude of scenes, or a multiplicity of sensations. He who cannot find material for happiness in his own garden, in some choice book or in a little group of friends will never find it by going abroad for it.

Goodness also has its outside and its inside. Respectability is the shell of goodness; manhood is its soul. But, by an inveterate practice, most people are still chiefly concerned with the externals of goodness. Pharisaism is by no means an ancient spirit. It is as modern as this morning. Men still broaden their phylacteries instead of their souls. A man can only weigh what he is, whether on a Fairbanks scale, or in the scales of eternity. Not the form, but the force of goodness; not the shell, but the strength of truth; not the pretense, but the power of a good life, is the real thing.

I was amused at the evident disgust of one of our Central Park squirrels. He had seized eagerly the empty shell which had been flung him. But after satisfying himself that the shell was empty he turned angrily away. To such chagrin multitudes come at length. The cry of Ecclesiastes is a specimen cry of disappointed manhood. No man can really feed his life on externals. We need to be sure that the shell includes the kernel of joy, else "all is vanity and vexation of spirit."

FOES TO THE FLAG.

By Rev. Ira W. Henderson.

Text—"In the name of our God we will set up our banners."—Psalm xx:5.

The flag of America is the symbol of her conception and of her progress. Its stars and stripes and field of blue bear eloquent though silent testimony to the method of her making, the character of her sons and the influences that have militated for all that is best in her national life. The flutter of the nation's ensign finds responsive pulse within our hearts. For the flag typefies the soul of the people, the hope of the nation, the sacrifice of the host who, living and dead, have poured out upon the altar of a true devotion to this land of promise a meed of service, for the welfare of the country and the glory of Almighty God.

No true patriot is he who can gaze upon the beauty of "Old Glory" without pride and a warming heart. For every star has a history and tells a mighty story; every ruddy stripe is dyed in the running fountain of a loyalty and willing sacrifice the like of which history cannot surpass; every bar of white reveals the purity of the limpid, true ideals that run, though often hidden, at the core and center of our nation's life. We are entering the sublime age of human history. And America stands in the vanguard of progression. Of our coming eminence we may but dream. No prophecy is to be ignored, for no prophecy can tell the half of the glory God will reveal in and through America in the coming days if we guard our hearts from evil, our minds from willful error, and our flag from shame.

There is a prevalent inclination to forget and to dismiss religion. No theory of government, no system of economics, no discipline of philosophy, can endure wholesomely and vigorously except there be foundations laid in the religious consciousness of man. No nation can realize its greatness, as can no individual, without God. In Him we live and move and have our being. He is the source of all light and progress. Ecclesiasticism may misrepresent Him as it has aforetime done. But let us never forget Him. He is our shield, our defence, our guide and our friend. In the day that America forgets Jesus let America place her flag at half mast. For in His truth lies her greatness and in the appropriation of Him by the nation lies the hope of the ages that are yet to come.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't ignore all sentiment lest you lose all sense.

Don't polish the head alone lest you paralyze the heart.

Don't mistake the thunder from the pulpit for the shower of blessing.

Don't forget that the hearts of men cannot be fired by frozen sermons.

Don't climb fool's hill in an auto and expect to reach the top any earlier.

Don't be satisfied with your creed if it has to defend its God-lest it offend men.

Don't overlook the fact that the ear ready for slander makes the lips ready to slay.

Don't try to impart much light by throwing knowledge at man in such a way that he sees stars.

Smiles of the Day

Just Like a Man.

For some time they had been holding down a couple of chairs in the parlor.

"Won't you play something for me?" he asked, glancing toward the piano.

"I fear," she said deprecatingly, "my music is too poor to give you enjoyment."

"Oh, but I do enjoy it," he replied assuringly. "It doesn't take much to satisfy me in the line of music, you know."

The Proper Thing.

Fred—I've only just heard of your marriage, old chap.

Joe—Yes, I was married nearly six months ago.

Fred—Well, it isn't too late to offer congratulations, of course?

Joe—A little late for congratulations, my boy, but not for sympathy.

She Was Mistaken.

Hubby was evidently worried and wifey was trying to cheer him up.

"Cheer up, John, and don't worry," she said. "It doesn't do any good to borrow trouble."

"Borrow trouble," echoed her husband, "Great Cæsar's ghost! I ain't borrowing trouble; I've got it to lend."

Skinner's Business.

Harlow—What's Skinner doing now?

Barlow—He's in the pail business.

Harlow—Pail business?

Barlow—Yes; running a bucket shop.

Pa's Little Joke.

Little Willie—Say, pa, what is a stratagem?

Pa—The diamond, my son, is one kind of a strata-gem.

Original.

History Instructor—What did you do about all the weeks' reading that you failed to do?

Freshman—I made it up.

Instructor—So I should judge from your papers.—Harvard Lampoon.

A Word for the Kaiser.

"There's wan t'ing," remarked Mr. Rafferty thoughtfully, "to be said in favor of the Kaiser."

"An' what's that?" asked Mr. Dolan suspiciously.

"He took the trouble to put his remarks into German, so that no one would understand 'em unless they wint to the pains of havin' 'em thranslated, in which case it's largely their own fault."—Washington Star.

The Eternal Feminine.

The Sightseer—After all, nothing is so beautiful as a woman's figure.—London Tattler.

Embarrassing.

"That's a nice looking chap at the next table," said the young man who was treating his best girl to a lobster supper. "Is he a friend of yours?"

"Yes, indeed," laughed the pretty girl.

"Well, er—I think I'll ask him to join us."

"Oh, this is so sudden!"

"What's so sudden?"

"Why—why, that's our young minister."

Gentle Dig.

"Can I use eloquence?" said the explosive orator. "Ah, my friends, I have faced many open-mouthed audiences."

"Open-mouthed?" echoed the little man in the last seat. "What were they doing—snoring?"

Her Idea.

"What is your idea of a flirt?" asked the young man.

"Oh, every other one," answered the

"Oh, every other girl," answered the fair maid.

Physical Culture.

"Miss Pansy, yo' suhtingly has got well developed arms, ef yo'll pahdon ma sayin' so."

"Ah developed dem arms workin' ovah de washtub, Mistah Rufus."

"Um—um—er, Miss Pansy, will yo' be ma wife?"—Denver Post.

Hereditary.

"And when you grow up," said the visitor to 6-year-old Elsie, "I suppose you will get married?"

"Oh, there's hardly any doubt about it," answered the small miss. "Everybody says I am much like mamma, and she has been married three times, you know."

Accepting No Favors.

Gentleman (arising in street car)—Won't you take my seat, madam?

The Suffragette—No, sir, I will not! You are entitled to it until such time as we women have something to say about the framing of laws governing public conveyances.—Puck.

Apartment Houses.

"Where can I find Jenkins' flats around here?" asked the stranger who was returning to the neighborhood after a long absence.

"There's no such place," responded the policeman on the corner. "About two years ago old man Jenkins received a legacy, raised the rent and changed the name to 'Jenkyn's Court'."

"Oh, no! Last spring the old man received another legacy, raised the rents again and now his flats go under the name of 'La Jenque Apartmenta.' You'll find them two blocks south."

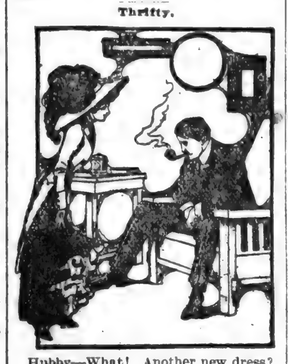
Too Public.

"What were dem goils laughing about?" asked the belle of Shantytown as she looked at herself in a remnant of a mirror.

"Why, dey are on to our engagement," responded Tommy Tuff.

"Well, dat makes me hopping mad, Tommy. Next t'ing it will be spread all around and de whole wur-ful will have deir eyes on us like dey has on dem royal couples when dey are engaged."

Thrifty.



Hubby—What! Another new dress?

Wifey—Well, don't be so cross. I bought it with my own money.

Hubby—Your own? Where did you get it from?

Wifey—I sold your fur coat.

Probably Not.

Breathes there a girl on earth today, with hair that's slowly turning gray, who in the mirror scans her head and ne'er unto herself hath said, as she lets out a soulful sigh: "I really think I ought to dye?"

It Would Seem So.

Browne—The game of football seems to be a mechanical business.

Green—How's that?

Brown—Principally fall and tackle, you know.

Novel Industry.

Gyer—Scribbles is engaged in a novel industry.

Myer—So? What's he doing?

Gyer—Writing a novel.

Some Hope.

He—Upon my word you grow prettier every day.

She—Just now I am living on brown bread and water, to improve my complexion.

He—How long can you keep that up?

She—Oh, indefinitely.

He—Then let's get married.—Northwestern Academician

Equine Repartee.

"Those love-making couples always hire you to draw their cutter sleighs?" remarked the truck horse.

"Yes," laughed the old white nag, "but it seems to me instead of being attached to a sleigh I belong to an automobile."

"Automobile? Why so?"

"Well, when I draw those love-making couples ain't I a 'sparking plug'?"

And the horse laughs that echoed through the stable awakened the drowsy hostler.

Among the Wise Ones.

Gunner—I am thinking about making a trip to New York. They say you can do Wall street in an hour.

Guyer—Yes, and Wall street can do you in two or three minutes.

On a Whaling Trip with Father.—Life.

A Feminine View.

Mrs. Smythe—I wonder why the judge deferred the sentence until tomorrow?

Mrs. Whyte—Oh, I supose he wanted to talk the case over with his wife.—Brooklyn Life.

A Salary Preferred.

"Why did you take this job? The other man offered you $10 to start with, too."

"The other man offered me $10 wages to start with; this man offered me $10 salary!"—Catholic Standard and Times.

An Example.

"What is braggadocio, pa?"

"Well, for instance, pretending not to be afraid of the waiter."—Washington Herald.

A Truthful Answer.

"How came you here, my man?" said the lady who was distributing tracts in the prison to convict No. 41144.

"I was brought here by my convictions, ma'am," replied the man behind the bars.

ABOUT BUMPS

"Do you believe in phrenology?" asked the suburbanite with the thick-soled shoes.

"Naw," replied his seatmate, with the plaid flannel waistcoat, scornfully. "Nothing in it."

"What makes you think so?" asked the suburbanite with the thick-soled shoes.

"What is there to believe in?" said the man with the plaid flannel waistcoat. "Do you suppose that because I've got bumps on my head in some particular spot it means I'm on the make or on the fight or that I can write a five-act drama and get somebody to put it on the stage? Rot!"

"I don't think it's rot," said the suburbanite with the thick-soled shoes. "It's a science. It's been demonstrated just the same as any other science. I'll bet, for one thing, that you haven't any bump of veneration and I'll put another bet that your 'observation' isn't any larger than the head of an eight-penny nail. I haven't given it a great deal of study myself, but a man that has can put his hands on your head and feel it over for a minute or two and get a pretty good line on your character. If I hired a lot of men I'd have everybody who applied to me for a position show a chart of his skull guaranteed by a good phrenologist."

"I'll look a man over and ask him a few questions, and if I can't tell more about him than any phrenologist I'll be willing to eat a plaster cast," said the man with the plaid flannel waistcoat. "I'll tell you. It's like sizing up a man for a chump because he hasn't got a chin that sticks out like the main deck of an excursion steamer. I've known men that hadn't any chin at all—just a straight line from the nose down to the collar button—that had more hang-on and chaw than a bull pup. Another thing. Having a big pair of ears isn't any sign that a man is a spendthrift. I know a man who had ears like wings and he wouldn't let go of a cent unless he saw a nickel coming back. He was an uncle of mine by marriage. I guess I know."

"You're talking about physiognomy," said the suburbanite with the thick-soled shoes.

"It's all about the same thing," contended his seatmate with the plaid flannel waistcoat.

"It isn't the same thing at all," declared the suburbanite with the thick-soled shoes. "The brain is what you do your thinking with, and it's quite natural that as one part of it becomes more developed than another is should push up that part. If I went to a prize fight and one of the men had a deep hole where he ought to have 'combativeness' he'd be the fellow I wouldn't bet on, no matter what was the size of his biceps."

"You say you haven't given it any study, but you seem to be posted," remarked the man with the plaid flannel waistcoat

"Well, there was a fellow came and delivered a lecture on the subject at the village hall the other night," explained the suburbanite with the thick-soled shoes. "I don't know that I ever took a great deal of stock in it before, but that was because I didn't know anything about it. He had half a dozen of us up on the stage, and I tell you, the way he hit us off was great. I guess 'most everybody was convinced."

"How did he frame you up?" asked the man with the plaid flannel waistcoat.

"Well," said the substantially shod suburbanite, with a modest cough, "I stood pretty well in 'ideality,' 'benevolence,' 'constructiveness,' 'perception,' 'causality.'——"

"How was your bump of 'self-esteem?'" asked his seatmate with the plaid flannel waistcoat.—Chicago Daily News.

Hiring a Place to Laugh.

Americans have to pay big prices for their smiles because it costs a great deal to furnish them. Theaters and other places where entertainment is to be found must be located in accessible places in the very centers of population. Such sites are invariably the most valuable and the most expensive. There are eighty-six playhouses in New York City, the majority on street corners where it would be natural to expect to find towering office buildings. Father Knickerbocker requires these theaters to have numerous exits on streets, and stipulates that they be nothing more than theaters—a stipulation which prevents them reaching skyward farther than the roofs over the fly-galleries. Hence a theater in New York must be absolutely self-supporting.

The eighty-six playhouses of the biggest American city bring yearly rentals ranging from fifteen thousand to one hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars, and the average—thirty thousand dollars a year—holds good in Chicago, where there are twenty-two theaters; in Philadelphia, where there are the same number; in Boston, where there are fourteen; in Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburg and Cincinnati, each of which have eight; in Buffalo and Washington, which have seven each; in St. Louis, where there are ten—in fact, in every one of the American centers of population.—Success Magazine.

In his whole life he wrote comparatively little, and when asked why he had written so little he replied, "Because of the exertion it costs in the labor of composition."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Deluded the Farmers.

Farmers who have been reading recently a story concerning the possibilities of enormous riches from a new brand of Alaskan wheat yielding 200 bushels per acre need not get excited. The yarn has been branded as "largely a fake" by the Agricultural Department in Washington, whose experts have been investigating the story. Nothing has caused so much amusement among the agricultural scientists since the fake which cropped up several years ago about the discovery of seedless apples in Colorado.

According to the "hot weather" tale, one Abraham Adams, of Idaho, found a single head of wheat in Alaska, brought it back to his ranch in this country, planted it in the fall of 1904 and obtained seven pounds of wheat from the one head. In 1906, it is recorded, Mr. Adams obtained from this wheat a yield of 222 bushels to the acre. The first part of this statement is accepted as perhaps true by Acting Secretary of Agriculture Hayes. Planting the grains one foot apart, he said to-day, it would be possible to grow from one head of wheat approximately seven pounds; there would be nothing remarkable in that. But he declared that no wheat existed which could produce 200 bushels per acre; that the maximum of yield in Minnesota is about 40 bushels, and in winter wheat regions 60 or 75 bushels per acre.

ROSY AND PLUMP.

Good Health from Right Food.

"It's not a new food to me," remarked a Va. man, in speaking of Grape-Nuts.

"About twelve months ago my wife was in very bad health, could not keep anything on her stomach. The Doctor recommended milk half water but it was not sufficiently nourishing.

"A friend of mine told me one day to try Grape-Nuts and cream. The result was really marvelous. My wife soon regained her usual strength and to-day is as rosy and plump as when a girl of sixteen.

"These are plain facts and nothing I could say in praise of Grape-Nuts would exaggerate in the least, the value of this great food."

Girl's Head Encrusted—Feared Loss of All Her Hair—Baby Had Milk Crust—Missionary's Wife Made Perfect Cures by Cuticura.

"For several years my husband was a missionary in the Southwest. Every one in that high and dry atmosphere has more or less trouble with dandruff and my daughter's scalp became so encrusted with it that I was alarmed for fear she would lose all her hair. After trying various remedies, in desperation I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. They left the scalp beautifully clean and free from dandruff and I am happy to say that the Cuticura Remedies were a complete success. I have also used successfully the Cuticura Remedies for so-called 'milk-crust' on baby's head. Cuticura is a blessing. Mrs. J. A. Darling, 310 Fifth St., Carthage, Ohio, Jan. 20, 1908."

An Unburied Picture.

Rossetti secured permission in 1869 to reopen the coffin of his wife in order to secure the manuscripts of some poems which he had buried with her seven years before.

Some such incident might have occurred in connection with J. M. W. Turner if his desire to be buried wrapped up in his own painting of "Carthage" had been carried out. There was some difficulty in selling the painting, and the artist kept the canvas by him. He always said he would be wrapped in it when he was buried and even went so far as to ask Chantrey if as his executor he would fulfill his wishes on that point.

"No doubt," answered the sculptor. "I shall bury you rolled up in your picture if it is one of the conditions of your will, but I would take you up next day and unroll you!"

A dragging pain and lameness in my back almost disabled me. Dizzy spells came and went and the kidney secretions were irregular. Doan's Kidney Pills rid me of these troubles and I feel better than for years past."

How's That, Fellows?

Ten or twelve years ago, when a girl got married, she left such a debt for wedding clothes and expenses that it ordinarily took the family six years to recover from it. Fathers should take off their hats to the modern girl. She earns the money to buy her own wedding outfit and in many cases has a little left to help buy things for her new house. SOUTH "DRY"; WAR ON.

Alabama, North Carolina and Mississippi Are Now Prohibition.

The wave of temperance which has driven the saloons out of the States of the South became effective Friday. The law banishing the saloons from Alabama, Mississippi and North Carolina went into effect at midnight. The morning of the new year found State-wide prohibition in these three States. Other Southern States are already dry or nearly so. The liquor men have retained an imposing array of counsel and will test the laws in the courts.

The Tennessee Legislature will certainly will certainly be asked to create prohibition in that commonwealth. Virginia is hewing nearer and nearer to the line of prohibition, and is at least 90 per cent prohibition now. In Louisiana the Gay-Shattuck saloon regulation law has closed many barrooms and many parishes of the State have driven out the saloons by voting for prohibition under the local option law.

In Georgia many of the purveyors of "near-beer," the only intoxicant which can be sold in the State, are closing up, saying they cannot pay a $200 license just imposed. The rural sections of Kentucky have been for some time largely "dry."

The longest single step toward general prohibition in the South was taken Friday. Georgia is the only other State wherein statutory prohibition exists, the law having been in operation one year.

Having won their State-wide fights in four States, the anti-saloon forces have greatly enlarged the South's "dry" area, and they are now lining up for early campaigns in several other States where prohibition has assumed the magnitude of a political issue. In Texas and Arkansas the voters probably will be called upon this summer to decide a constitutional amendment for prohibition.

The Montgomery (Ala.) liquor men will test the law. This much has been decided upon. Leon Weil of one of the largest law firms of the South will demand a license, and on being refused will join with Mobile in testing the legality of the act.

BIG OIL FINE FAILS.

Supreme Court Denies Petition in $29,000,000 Case.

Judge Landis' world's record fine of $29,240,000, imposed more than a year ago against the Standard Oil Company of Indiana for rebating, on Monday was forever set aside by the United States Supreme Court. Chief Justice Fuller announced the decision, denying, without comment or explanation, the government's petition for a writ of certiorari.

The action of the nation's highest tribunal caused wide interest all over the country, as the issues have been followed closely. United States District Attorney Sims of Chicago, who was in active charge of the prosecution, declined to comment, however, stating that whatever further action may be taken would be ordered from the office of Attorney General Bonaparte in Washington.

Briefly, this is what the Supreme Court's decision means:

Limits maximum penalty in case which was overturned to $720,000.

Makes limit of fines in all pending cases against Standard Oil Company less than $4,000,000 in the event it is convicted on all the indictments against it.

Requires a new trial of the action in which the record fine was imposed and forces the admission of much testimony in behalf of defendant which was excluded by Judge Landis.

Compels number of settlements with railroads to be used as basis, instead of number of carloads shipped, thus greatly reducing the number of offenses.

The case went to the Supreme Court soon after the final ruling was made by the Court of Appeals, Nov. 10, 1908. A petition was filed by the Department of Justice on behalf of the government, asking that the record in the case be certified for a review by the Supreme Court. This is the petition which has been denied.

In the Supreme Court the case turned largely upon the right of the court to interfere in view of the fact that the case had been passed upon by the Court of Appeals, the government contending for such privilege as a right, while it was urged in behalf of the oil company that the precedents were all against such a proceeding.

The action of the Supreme Court consisted in the announcement that the government's petition would not be granted. The effect of this announcement will be to leave standing the decision of the Court of Appeals, which was adverse to the government and favorable to the company.

INDIAN COMMISSIONER RESIGNS.

Francis E. Leupp Will Retire from Service March 4 Next.

Francis E. Leupp, commissioner of Indian affairs, has announced his retirement from the service at the close of the present administration on March 4. Mr. Leupp is a veteran newspaper correspondent and has long been a student of Indian affairs, being the local representative of the Indian Rights Association at the time of his appointment. Mr. Leupp's bureau, contrary to the law which is operating in other bureaus, causing their constant growth, will in the near future be legislated out of existence, Mr. Leupp predicting that the day is not far distant when there will be no work for the government to do for the Indians.

Thinks Kine Disease Checked.

"I believe we've about got the foot and mouth disease corralled," said Secretary Wilson of the Agricultural Department in Washington. "No new outbreaks of the disease have been found since that which occurred in Snyder county, Pennsylvania, Dec. 18."

WHY NOT OWN LAND?

One of the Best Ways to Make Money Is to Invest in Western Canada.

"Deep down in the nature of every properly constituted man is the desire to own some land." A writer in the Iowa State Register thus tersely expresses a well-known truth. The question is, Where is the best land to be had at the lowest prices? and this the same writer points out in the same article. The fact is not disguised that the writer has a personal interest in the statement of his case, and there is no hidden meaning when he refers to Western Canada as presenting greater possibilities than any other part of the American Continent to the man who is inclined to till the soil for a livelihood and possible competence. What interests one are the arguments advanced by this writer, and when fairly analyzed the conclusion is reached that no matter what personal interest the writer may have had his reasons appear to have the quality of great soundness. The climatic conditions of Western Canada are fully as good as those of Minnesota, the Dakotas or Iowa, the productiveness of the soil is as great, the social conditions are on a parity, the laws are as well established and as carefully observed. In addition to these the price of land is much less, easier to secure. So, with these advantages, why shouldn't this—the offer of Western Canada—be embraced? The hundreds of thousands of settlers now there, whose homes were originally in the United States, appear to be—are satisfied. Once in a while complaints are heard, but the Canadians have never spoken of the country as an Eldorado, no matter what they may have thought. The writer happened to have at hand a few letters, written by former residents of the United States, from which one or two extracts are submitted. These go to prove that the writer in the Register has a good basis of fact in support of his statements regarding the excellency of the grain growing area of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. On the 29th of April of this year W. R. Conley, of Lougheed, Alberta, wrote to a friend in Detroit. He says: "The weather has been just fine ever since I came here in March, and I believe one could find, if he wanted to, some small bunches of snow around the edge of the lake. There is a frost nearly every morning; at sunrise it begins to fade away, then those blue flowers open and look as fresh as if there had been no frost for a week. • • • There is no reason why this country should not become a garden of Eden: the wealth is in the ground and only needs a little encouragement from the government to induce capital in here. There is everything here to build with—good clay for brick, coal underneath, plenty of water in the spring lakes, and good springs coming out of the banks."

Unaccountable Mistake.

All was quiet in the sleeping car.

Suddenly the passenger in lower No. 7 parted the curtains, thrust out a weather beaten face, and hailed the sable functionary who was tiptoeing past.

"Say," he grumbled, "where's the pillers for this bunk?"

"There are your pillows, suh," said the porter.

"Them things!" exclaimed the passenger. "Smash my toplights! I thought them was the life preservers!"—Chicago Tribune.

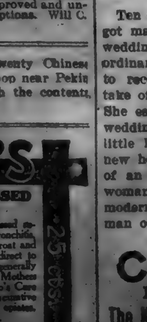
They Did Not Need to Work.

A stout, splendidly "robed" woman sat talking to a friend. Her husband had just come into a considerable fortune, and, like many other Americans, had begun farming in an amateur way. In their case, however, it mattered little whether crops were good or bad. A writer in Harper's Monthly tells the story.

"Yes," the lady remarked, "since John's uncle died we have a nice country house, horses, cows, pigs, hens, and—"

"That must be charming," broke in the other. "You can have all the fresh eggs you want every day."

"Oh, well," hastily interrupted the first speaker, "of course the hens can lay if they like to, but in our position it isn't at all necessary."



Answer This Question

When shown positive and reliable proof that a certain remedy had cured numerous cases of female ills, wouldn't any sensible woman conclude that the same remedy would also benefit her if suffering with the same trouble?

Here are two letters which prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Red Banks, Miss.—"Words are inadequate to express what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I suffered from a female disease and weakness which the doctors said was caused by a fibroid tumor, and I commenced to think there was no help for me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman after all other means had failed. My friends are all asking what has helped me so much, and I gladly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Willie Edwards.

Hampstead, Maryland.—"Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was weak and nervous, and could not be on my feet half a day without suffering. The doctors told me I never would be well without an operation, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done more for me than all the doctors, and I hope this valuable medicine may come into the hands of many more suffering women."—Mrs. Joseph H. Dandy.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful—or that either of these women were paid in any way for their testimonials, or that the letters are published without their permission, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

What more proof can any one ask?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

Marshall is Governor.

Monday at noon Hon. Thomas R. Marshall was inaugdrated governor of the great state of Indiana, the oath being administered by Judge Frank S. Roby of the appelate court. The inaugural ceremonies, which were as free from pomp and splendor as possible, were held in the south corridor of the state house. Governor Hanly, the retiring executive, called at Mr. Marshall's home, in a carriage, and took him to the capitol building. After the oath had been administered the new Governor delivered his inaugural address and his message to the legislature. Among the measures advocated by Gov. Marshall are: Investigation of public offices, revision of the election law, more definite power to the railroad commission, reforms in department of inspection, repeal of metropolitan police law, abandoment of useless offices, reform in matters of state boards, investigation of public works, conservation of timber, a uniform system of book-keeping in public offices and that all county offices be put on a straight salary basis, abolishing the fee system.

THE MODERN BABY.

Methods That Make Us Wonder How Old Time Infants Ever Lived.

When an American baby arrives in the world he finds enough paraphernalia and impediments awaiting him to furnish forth all the papooses of a numerous native tribe.

The garments that were authorised for the baby's immediate predecessor are already discarded by science. The slips and jackets that were used at an analogous time by big brother will not do for him. All baby clothes must now be in one piece—or is it three pieces? No one can tell till the fatal moment. And as for soaps and powders, the brands that were used five minutes ago are now esteemed extremely deleterious. Soaps, in fact, are nothing. What we want is skin food.

Meanwhile if the thermometer is overlooked the consequences will be dire. If the baby didn't have a thermometer he probably would refuse to have a temperature. And if he didn't have a pair of scales he might refuse to have any weight. Some kind of weighing machine is essential. And an individual bathtub! So that he can be weighed before and after his swim to see what effect it has on him.

The cradle must be thrown away. It goes to the junk heap. The thing to spend your money on now is a bassinet. Next year for the next baby it may be a hermetically sealed tett tube. Where, oh, where is the drift toward the simple life?

Certainly not in the baby's food. Alligator oil rubbed in through the chest is the real nourishment. And cheese made from the milk of the goats of the Caucasus is an indispensable element of diet.—Chicago Tribune.

Little Child Dies

Frances Dorliska, daughter of Elmer E. and Hallie E. Smith, was born April 15, 1906 departed this life Jan. 4, 1909. Aged 2 yrs. 8 mo. 20 days. Death resulted from gangrenous stomatitis following diphtheria after an illness of eight weeks. The 29th. day of December, she with her parents and attending physician was taken to the St. Joseph hospital at Ft. Wayne for treatment, she grew worse rapidly and New Year's night they brought the little darling home to await the end. All her suffering was borne with the greatest of patience.

No time nor expense was spared to save her life, yet we must all say, "God's will not ours be done". The memory of her sweet, smiling face, the luster of her bright, sparkling eyes and her sunny disposition will ever remain in the hearts of those who loved her. For to know her was to love her. But she only budded on earth to blossom in heaven, and while God who always doeth that which is best, has removed little Frances to a land where sickness, sorrow and death are unknown, may we who mourn her departure, be enabled to live such lives that when our time comes to depart this world, we shall meet her and enjoy the bliss of Heaven with her and all our loved ones through eternity. Services by Rev. F. A. Dressel. The text was, "Jesus Wept" John 11-35. Interment at Scipio cemetery.

Frank Ulm, who has been working on a farm near Perrysville, Ohio, came home last Thursday evening to make an extended visit with his mother.

Returns from S. Houston

Mrs. Dr. Bowman returned Saturday evening from South Houston, Texas, where she has been for some time for her health. But she failed to improve so returned home and at present she feels good with the exception of a bad cold which she took on New Year's day. In an interview with Mrs. Bowman we find that the place where the St. Joe parties are located is about ten miles south of Houston, at a new town called South Houston, which is being opened by land agents. This place is small and not very thickly settled. There are about twenty-five homes, a gasoline engine and stove factory, a hotel, school house and a few small buildings.

Upon their arrival they were put off at a box car depot and no one to show them where to go, a land agent was near and pointed out the way for them to go to the hotel. After eating their meal they started for the Saylor home a short distance away. Mr. Saylor gave them a room to stay in and the little colony lived here for a week, when Mrs. Bowman left for the hotel. Mr. Randall traded their lot on a property and they are now living by themselves.

Four artesian wells are within the city limits and the water is hauled about and sold for 25 cents a barrel. The town has been promised ten miles of cement walks to be built by the first of the year, and the entire town to be fenced in to keep out the cattle. This is to be done by the land company. She says the large Texas steers go any where they wish and in order to keep them out it must be fenced. The Cayotes are numerous and large droves of them ravage the country at night hunting for calves.

Had Mrs. Bowman been in good health, so as to be about, she would have enjoyed herself much more. Mr. Randall and Mr. Saylor are working at the carpenter trade and get $2 50 a day, while Mr. Betz is working in the stove factory. New houses are going up rapidly. One peculiar thing is that every one of the party are getting poor, not being used to the climate, but all are feeling fine. The city also contains a meat market, grocery, a saloon and a small line of dry goods. The climate is good but at this particular time it is quite muddy, the mornings were foggy and the nights cold.

The houses are all cheaply constructed. The ceilings and walls are covered with paper then ceiled and papered over. On each side would be a gallery as they call it. The streets are made of crushed oyster shells and when settled it makes a fine road.

May Wed.

Henry L. Dehm, 34, Allen county farmer, and Maude Scholes, 24, school teacher of St. Joe.

Gerry Wasson, Spencerville, and Gertrude Shoemaker, Ft. Wayne.

Sherwood and Corunna are busy trying to have an electric light plant put in. There is nothing nicer to have than electric lights but will it pay? It is the experience of all small towns that electric lights are too expensive. The burden on towns like this would be heavy. It would cost for street lighting more than the people would stand. Plants owned by small towns do not pay and when a town is tied up with a ten years franchise granted a private parties it mean something.

Koch Sells Livery Stock

On Monday of this week papers were made out which made Milton Krise, owner of the Koch livery business. Mr. Koch has been in this business at intervals for a number of years and has given St. Joe an up-to-date livery. He is at present undecided as to what he will do but he has a couple of propositions under consideration. Mr. Krise receives our hearty welcome to come to St. Joe and we see no reason why he will not be a good man for this business. He is accomodateing and always ready to do and that's what it takes, one that is full of hustle for the traveling public. On January 4th., Milt will have his public sale, and on the following Monday he expects to take charge of the business. We are glad to note that he and his wife will become citizens of St. Joe.

Receives Injury

Last Saturday forenoon Miss Hazel Nelson, who lives near the Wabash crossing, accidentally fell and cut her knee, making her unable to be about. The wound was a severe one, being on the knee and about two inches long. They were unable to find what she fell on but it must have been something with a sharp edge as it cut through her clothing. No physician was called to dress the wound but as yet, she is unable to walk any distance.

DeKalb Gets Her Share.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction F. A. Cotton announced the semi-annual appointment of common school revenues, Wednesday, those that go to the schools of the ninety-two different counties in the state.

The apportionment is based on the number of children of school age in each county in the state. The statement of the superintendent shows there are 764,600 children in the state of a school age. The total amount of school funds to be distributed is $1,424,190.02. This is the January apportionment. There is another one in June.

Marion county, which has 61,719 school children, will receive $104,263, the most of any, Ohio county which has the fewest children of a school age, will receive $2,034.76.

DeKalb county which has 7001 children between 6 and 21 years of age gets $11,689.07.

Culture Club

The Culture Club met with Mrs. Edd Leighty, Wednesday night. First on programme was a well rendered solo by Miss Marie Leighty, entitled "The Boy from Lonesome Street". Mrs. Sheffer then read an interesting paper on "General Grant and his Aids" which brought forth commendation. Seventeen members responded to roll call with quotations from Grant. The lesson being short it was decided to play charades". Mrs. Etta Hull and Mrs. W. C. DeLong were the leaders, and a very strong fight was made on each side to win, but they came out about even after an hour of fun. The hostess served peaches with whipped cream and Nabisco.

Delinquent Tax List

The delinquent tax list for the sale of real estate for 1907 taxes has been prepared and the posting of same is now being made. There are in all about 50 descriptions of property affected in the names of less than 400 people. Because the property is advertised in a certain is not conclusive evidence than that party is delinquent but merely that the property appears upon the tax duplicate in their name. They may have sold the property but the purchaser has failed to have the deed transferred and until such transfer is made, the taxes appear in the name of the original owner. Troy only has one description; Richland has one in the country and two in the village of Sedan, Newville has but two, Keyser and Concord have the most descriptions of the townships. In the cities and towns there is a bunch of them, Garrett, Butler and Ashley taking the lead. Over one-half the descriptions in Auburn are in the Nusbaum & Boland edition.

Sent to Plainfield

George Shields, tried Friday for chicken stealing, was sentenced Saturday afternoon by Judge Bratton to the reformatory at Plainfield. It is believed that the story of young Shields, told at the trial, will start an investigation regarding the actions of those he implicated in Garrett.

There will be no grand jury this term of court.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

B. F. Shively for U. S. Senate.

The Democratic caucus of the Indiana Legislature, after twenty ballots, chose former Congressman Benjamin F. Shively, of South Bend, for the United States Senate. The last ballot stood as follows: Shively, 42; Kern, 35; Lamb, 4; Menzies, 1; Chas. Maas, 1. From the first ballot Shively developed more strength than was generally credited to him, and on the twentieth ballot received the sufficient number of votes to win. John W. Kern, who had a good lead on the first ballot, was unable to muster enough strength to win the prize. Mr. Shively is a native of the county where he resides and is 52 years old. He has been prominent in Indiana politics for many years. He was a member of the Forty-eighth, Fiftieth, Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses, each time being chosen from a Republican district. He was the Democratic candidate for Governor in 1896 and received the Democratic vote in the Legislature for United States Senator in 1903.

Tom Johnson to Live in a Flat.

Mayor Tom Johnson, of Cleveland, Ohio, has rented a suite in the Knickerbocker apartment on Euclid avenue which contains nine rooms. The suite rents for $135 a month, and the mayor has taken a one-year lease with privilege of a renewal. He has made arrangements to keep one automobile. The Knickerbocker apartments are among the most exclusive in the city. The mayor says reverses require his giving up the big home on Euclid avenue.

Has Rabies; Bites Parents.

Omer Fodge, 4 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Levi Fodge, of Peru, Ind., has hydrophobia, and there is little hope for his recovery. On a number of occasions he has made vicious attacks on his parents. The boy was bitten on the leg by a supposed mad dog a week ago, and he has since bitten both his father and mother, and it is feared the parents will become similarly afflicted. The child suffers much agony.

Vessel Wrecked; Two Drowned.

The steamer Sybil Marston, from Grays Harbor, Wash., for San Pedro, Cal., is wrecked off the California coast, sixty miles north of Santa Barbara. Two men are known to have drowned, and one body has been recovered. The others are believed to have escaped. The vessel carried twenty-one men. She was laden with a million feet of lumber, and was one of the finest vessels on the coast.

Three Indianapolis Heirs.

Ralph Wells, of Grundy County, Iowa, who recently died in the insane hospital at Richester, Minn., after twenty years' confinement, left 8,000 acres of Iowa land and an estate of $200,000. Only ten distant relatives survive. Among the heirs are William A. Atkins, Lillian Taggart and Florence Garvin, all of Indianapolis, Ind.

He Received First "Sound" Message.

Otis Eddy Wood, who took the first telegraph message by sound, is dead at his home at Etna, near Ithaca, N. Y., aged 77 years. Mr. Wood was at one time associated with his brother, Orin S. Wood, a millionaire of New York; the late Ezra Cornell, his brother-in-law, and Prof. Samuel F. B. Morse in the promotion of the telegraph.

Negro Lynched and Shot.

A mob stormed the jail at Popularville, Miss., and lynched Pink Willis, a negro, who attempted an assault on the 14-year-old daughter of former Sheriff J. A. Moody. The body was afterward shot full of holes by the infuriated mob of one hundred men.

Field Estate $83,000,000.

The exact value of the estate of the late Marshall Field was placed at $83,459,032 when the appraisers' report was filed in the Cook County court at Chicago, Ill. A score of appraisers have been working on the report since Mr. Field's death.

Fatally Wounded His Wife.

Rudolph Wirts, a well-known transfer man, of Hamilton, Ohio, fatally wounded his wife. Seizing her by the hair, Wirts stabbed her thirty-nine times in the head. One eye was cut out and a hand nearly severed.

Carrie Nation Arrested in England.

MINE BLAST KILLS 100; TWO WEEKS' TOLL 150

Disaster Is in Same Shaft Where Fifty Met Death on December 28 Last.

CALLED SAFE BY EXPERTS.

Explosion Near Bluefield, W. Va., Hurls Cars from Workings and Traps Victims.

More than 100 men were killed Tuesday in an explosion in the Lick Branch mine near Bluefield, W. Va., the scene of a disaster only fifteen days ago, in which fifty lives were lost. How this accident was caused is not known, as experts had just finished an inspection of the workings and declared them safe. Nearly all the victims this time were Americans. The explosion happened at 8:30 o'clock in the morning, while the entire day shift was at work.

The force of the explosion was terrific and the shock was felt far from the scene. Above the tons of earth and stone between the workings and the mountain's crown great trees shook from the force of the concussion, and from the mine mouth belched forth a cloud of flame, soot, dust and debris, heavy timbers, broken mine cars and even a massive motor used to haul the heavy-laden cars.

It is certain that the number of men entombed is more than 100. That all of them are dead there can be no doubt. The fire in the mine and the deadly gases, to say nothing of the awful force of the explosion, precludes any chance of rescuing any of the men alive. It is reasonably certain that some of the bodies never will be recovered. Some of them were blown to pieces and others incinerated beyond doubt. The fans which furnish the fresh air of the workings, as in the former explosion, were not disabled, but are forcing fresh air into the mines.

Mine Foreman Bowers, who was near the entrance, was blown from his feet, but managed to crawl out safely, as did also Robert Smith, a miner. With the foreman was a miner named Holliday, and he, too, was blown over. A rescue party, organized on the moment, rushed into the smoking mine and tried to rescue him. They were driven back by the deadly fumes of the after gases, and were compelled to leave him to his fate.

The explosion was one of the worst ever known in that region. In 1884, at the South West Virginia Improvement Company's mine, 300 were killed in an explosion. Tuesday's horror is the most disastrous since. The mine is owned by the Pocahontas Consolidated Collieries Company.

The explosion was in a different part of the mine from that of two weeks before. Since that catastrophe the mine has been inspected by government officials and by the most experienced mine men in the region, and all, it is said, expressed the opinion that it was safe.

It was on Dec. 28 last that the former explosion occurred in this mine, which up to that time had been regarded as a model mine. On that occasion the cause was not ascertained and the death list reached fifty. The last body in connection with that explosion was brought to the surface only last Friday, after which the State mine inspector declared that the mine again was safe and that work could be resumed.

VOLUNTEERS JOIN CRUSADERS.

Ten Thousand Follow Clevelanders in Trying to Live Like Christ.

The movement begun on a recent Sunday by 1,800 young people of Cleveland to live for two weeks as Jesus would, has assumed a scope far beyond the expectations of its promoters. It is citywide and is spreading to nearby towns. Fully 10,000 volunteers have unofficially joined the movement by attempting the test and pledging themselves to walk in His steps. Even the city officials are taking an interest in the question of what Jesus would do if He were a city official. Many interesting experiences have been related by those who have completed the first week's test. Some claim they cannot carry the practice into business. Others say they can. The test also has brought out a host of critics, some praising, others condemning the idea. Church people are encouraging the trial and pleading for its continuance. The scoffers say the effort, which is being made mostly by church members, should be unnecessary, as it implies a past hypocrisy.

WOMAN HELD AS EMBEZZLER.

Ex-Cashier of Packing Firm Charged with Stealing $4,000.

Miss Nellie O'Donnell, aged 30, a former cashier and bookkeeper for the Schwarzschild and Sulsberger Beef and Provision Company, was arrested in Kansas City on a charge of embezzling $4,000 in July, 1908, while in the employ of the company. According to the police, Miss O'Donnell has made a complete confession. Miss O'Donnell asserts that she does not know why she took the money. Frank O'Dowd, also a former bookkeeper for the company, was arrested soon after Miss O'Donnell. The police assert that O'Dowd signed a statement admitting having received $500 from Miss O'Donnell. O'Dowd resigned his position shortly after the fire and went into the cigar business. Miss O'Donnell also left the company and became his clerk. In her confession Miss O'Donnell says O'Dowd did not know that she had embezzled the money.

PITCHFORK VS. BIG STICK.

Tillman in Defense Says He Did Nothing Wrong in Land Deal.

The unprecedented spectacle of a Senator of the United States defending his honor before his colleagues against an attack by the President was presented in Washington Monday.

B. R. TILLMAN.

Senator Benjamin R. Tillman of South Carolina denied President Roosevelt's charge that he had used his official position for his private benefit, or that he had made a false statement to his fellow-members regarding western land transactions. The tines of the "pitchfork" had been sharpened anew and the recent onslaught of the "big stick" was returned with the South Carolina Senator's old-time skill.

Mr. Tillman accused the President of personal malice, misrepresentation, falsification, contempt of the Senate, and violation of the law in the use of the secret service.

Incidentally, he gave official utterance to the charge he made informally Saturday that important papers bearing on the case had been stolen from his desk in his room at the capitol, "probably by some of the secret-service sleuths."

ORDERS SIX TO GALLOWS.

Night Riders Sentenced to Pay Extreme Penalty for Murder.

Without a tremor six men of Reelfoot Lake heard judgment passed in Union City, Tenn., condemning them to pay with their lives the penalty for the part they had in the putting to death of Captain Quentin Ranken at Walnut Log, the deed of a band of so-called night riders, of which the six men were declared to be the leaders. Whatever may have been their emotion, they faced the court to receive sentence with the same stoical expression that has been their marked characteristic during the sensational trial of which this action was the climax.

When court convened the room was crowded with people from Reelfoot Lake. The motion of the defense for a new trial was promptly overruled by Judge Jones. Then amid a death-like quiet, the six men, Garret Johnson, Sam Applewhite, Tid Burton, Roy Ransom, Arthur Cloar and Fred Pinion, convicted of murder in the first degree, each in his turn, faced Judge Jones to hear the sentence of the court setting Friday, Feb. 19, as the day of their execution.

WOMEN ACQUITTED OF MURDER.

Mrs. Erb and Mrs. Beisel, Sisters, Are Set Free at Media, Pa.

Mrs. M. Florence Erb and Mrs. Catharine Beisel, charged with the murder of Capt. J. Clayton Erb, husband of the former, were acquitted in Media, Pa., after the jury had been out nearly eighteen hours. At 9:45 o'clock the jury came in and asked for further instructions on the question of self-defense. One of the jurors asked what Mrs. Beisel was justified in doing when Capt. Erb threatened her. Judge Johnson said: "It is for the jury to say what was the condition of her mind. If it was necessary for her to shoot to save her life or herself from great bodily harm, or if she thought so, she had a right to shoot. The law is that a person must escape if he can before shooting. It is for you to decide whether Mrs. Beisel had that opportunity."

Quake Jars Pacific Coast.

Bellingham, Wash., was shaken by an earthquake at 3:45 o'clock Monday afternoon. Buildings in all parts of town were jarred, but no damage was done. Hundreds of persons rushed into the streets in a panic.

Orders Inquiry Into Woman's Death.

In Mount Vernon, N. Y., Miss Lydia Westland, a nurse, died from the effects of some subtle poison self-administered. Her death was surrounded by mystery and the coroner has ordered an autopsy.

KILLS HIS FOUR CHILDREN.

Eldest Daughter Discovers Tragedy in Home Near Mankato, Minn.

One by one, as his four children descended the stairs from their bedrooms to the kitchen early Tuesday James York, a quarry worker living near Bradley's Crossing, near Mankato, Minn., killed them with a knife, cutting their throats. Then he went to a woodshed and hanged himself. An elder daughter, Ida, did not go with the children. When she went downstairs a few minutes later her brothers and sisters lay dead on the floor, their bodies side by side. She fled in terror to the woodshed to alarm her father, who, she thought, had gone there to work. In the dim light she stumbled over his body. He had hanged himself with a wire, the strand had broken and his lifeless body had fallen to the floor. The children murdered were: Earl, aged 14; Nina, 12; Vera, 6, and Zula, a baby. York's wife died last summer and Ida kept house for him since. The father always acted queerly, neighbors declare, keeping by himself and having little intercourse with others. He was regarded as insane.

GOTHAM HAS TEN MILLIONAIRES

They Are Four Men and Six Women, According to the Tax List.

Only four man millionaires are left in New York City, according to the tentative personal assessments on the tax books for 1909, but the list contains the names of six woman millionaires, he largest number recorded in several years. The ten millionaires in the city, according to the returns, are: Andrew Carnegie, $5,000,000; William K. Vanderbilt, $1,000,000; John D. Rockefeller, $2,500,000; Clifford V. Brokaw, $1,500,000. The women are Ida Flagler, $2,000,000; Lilla Gilbert, $1,500,000; Margaret O. Sage, $5,000,000; Florence G. Latterwhite, $1,500,000; Alice G. Vanderbilt, $1,000,000; Gladys Vanderbilt, $1,000,000. Others assessed for large sums are: Mary Adelaide Yorkes, $500,000; J. Pierpont Morgan, $400,000; John Jacob Astor, $300,000; Arabella Huntington, $200,000; Archer M. Huntington, $100,000, and Charles F. Murphy, $50,000.

"CHEIRO" IS ACCUSED OF FRAUD.

Charged with Misappropriating $500,000 in Bonds in Paris.

"Cheiro," palmist and crystal reader, who has had a sensational career in New York, Newport, Chicago, London and Paris, is a fugitive from justice. He vanished from Paris after charges were made against him by two American women, Mrs. George Baldwin Newell and her sister, Miss Josephine Pomeroy, whose father was a leading merchant of St. Louis. He has been in Paris under the name of "Count Hamon," though his real name is said to be John Warner. It is alleged that he misappropriated stocks and bonds valued at $500,000, according to present market quotations. It is believed he is in London, out of the jurisdiction of French courts.

WOMAN DEAD; FAMILY IS HELD

Police Say Skull Was Crushed Before Fire Was Started.

Mrs. Sarah Costerlin was found dead from burns and other injuries in her home on the Shark river shore near Asbury Park, N. J., and the county authorities are investigating the case on the theory that she was murdered. Mrs. Costerlin's two daughters, Rose Vaughn Layton and Mrs. Mamie Gunson, together with James Layton and Ervin Hoffman, are held without bail. According to statements made by the prisoners, Mrs. Costerlin's charred body was found lying in the kitchen. Her face and breast were burned, but little of her clothing was burned, and nothing in the room took fire. According to the police, the woman's nose was broken and her skull crushed in before her clothing was set on fire.

FORTY SLAIN AT WORSHIP.

Ancient Church in Switzerland Collapses, Injuring Scores.

During divine service Sunday an ancient church near Sion, Switzerland, suddenly collapsed, burying the worshipers in the ruins. Practically all the members of the congregation were killed or injured. Those who escaped were thrown into a wild panic, rushing through the fields shouting that an earthquake had overtaken the village. Other villagers joined in the outcry and were with difficulty calmed. After an hour's exertions the fire company extricated forty corpses, but it is believed that there are still more under the timbers. Sixty persons were badly injured. The collapse of the church was caused by the time-worn pillars in the underground crypt giving way.

CONGRESS HITS BACK.

Committee Presents Report Refusing to Accept Roosevelt's Attack.

Congress has hurled the "big stick" back at President Roosevelt. In the House of Representatives Thursday afternoon a bitter attack was made on the chief executive. A special committee appointed to deal with the President's message on the secret service, submitted Monday, brought in its report, which is vitriolic in the extreme. The report and the resolution accompanying it were thought likely to make the President furious, for they say in effect:

"Portions of the message are beneath the dignity of Congress and should not be received.

"These portions constitute a breach of the privileges of the house.

"It is dangerous to the republic that the confidence of the people should be impaired in those who enact the laws, and it is for this reason that the duty evolves on the lawmakers not to allow the integrity of their motives to be lightly questioned.

"Be it resolved, That the House in the exercise of its constitutional prerogatives declines to consider any communication from any source which is not in its own judgment respectful."

The committee caused a sensation by its recommendation that the "objectionable portion of the President's annual message be laid on the table" and that similar action be taken with respect to the message of last Monday because of its being "unresponsive to the inquiry of the house" as to what the President meant when he said, referring to the limitation placed on the field of operations of the secret service, that the "chief argument in favor of the provision was that the Congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated."

When Chairman Perkins of the special committee arose to make his report, he faced an almost full membership, while the galleries were packed with interested spectators. Messrs. Tawney, Smith of Iowa, Sherley and Fitzgerald were on the floor, prepared to resent what they deemed to be the insinuations of the President on them as members of the committee on appropriations. They were not alone in their indignation. The feelings of other members had been growing more intense.

THIS MAY BE A DOUBLE MURDER

Mystery in Case of Man and Wife Found Dead at Kansas City.

Mystery surrounds the deaths of W. G. Brault, a salesman of 1403 Tower Grove avenue, St. Louis, and his wife, who were found dead in bed in their room in Kansas City. There was a distinct odor of chloroform in the room when the police entered to investigate the deaths, but no other evidence that the drug had been used was found. The coroner asserts that Mrs. Brault killed her husband and then committed suicide. Friends of the couple, on the other hand, believe that the pair were murdered. Brault was 45 years of age. He came several weeks ago from St. Louis and engaged in the baking powder business.

"Kid" McCoy says he will fight no more, but will drive racing automobiles for a living hereafter.

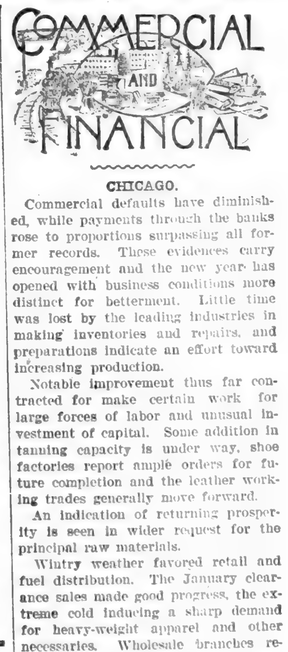
At Sydney, N. S. W., Jack Johnson, the Texas negro pugilist, defeated Tommy Burns, the Canadian, and took away the latter's title of heavyweight champion. Police stopped the fight in the fourteenth round.

After struggling thirty-eight minutes for the third fall, "Wild Joe" Collins of Canada, at Cairo, Ill., agreed to give the wrestling match for the middleweight championship to George Baptiste of St. Louis, on condition that all bets be called off. Baptiste took the first fall in 31 minutes, and Collins the second in 38 minutes.



CHICAGO.

Commercial defaults have diminished, while payments through the banks rose to proportions surpassing all former records. These evidences carry encouragement and the new year has opened with business conditions more distinct for betterment. Little time was lost by the leading industries in making inventories and repairs, and preparations indicate an effort toward increasing production.

Notable improvement thus far contracted for make certain work for large forces of labor and unusual investment of capital. Some addition in tanning capacity is under way, shoe factories report ample orders for future completion and the leather working trades generally move forward.

An indication of returning prosperity is seen in wider request for the principal raw materials.

Wintry weather favored retail and fuel distribution. The January clearance sales made good progress, the extreme cold inducing a sharp demand for heavy-weight apparel and other necessaries. Wholesale branches receive ample mail orders for dry goods, footwear, clothing, household needs and food products. Traveling salesmen in large numbers have departed for the interior with prospects well defined for an extended trade in spring and summer merchandise.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number twenty-one, against forty-three last week, thirty-six in 1908 and twenty-six in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number five, against eleven last week, seven in 1908 and eight in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review.

NEW YORK.

Post-holiday quiet rules as yet in general trade, but active preparations are making for the spring season's trade by jobbers, while retailers are announcing reduction sales to clear accumulated stocks of winter goods. Temporarily, trade has been retarded by storms, followed by zero temperature, extending from the Canadian line south to Texas and east to the Alleghanies, but good effects from the arrival of the long-expected cold weather are already noted at the West.

In wholesale and jobbing line inventories have been finished and preparations for spring are actively under way. In fact, trevalers from many cities are already on the road with, in many cases, fair results reported for the short time they have been out.

Collections show little change from previous reports, being still slow at the South, but better at some Western points. Generally speaking, the outlook is one of cheerfulness tempered by conservatism.

Business failures in the United States for week ending Jan. 7 number 329, against 290 last week, 435 in the like week of 1908, 283 in 1907, 286 in 1906 and 295 in 1905. Business failures in Canada during the week number 41, which compares with 28 last week and 63 in this week last year.—Bradstreet's.

THOMAS R. MARSHALL INAUGURATED GOVERNOR

Indianapolis correspondence:

Governor Thomas R. Marshall took the oath of office and was duly inaugurated at Indianapolis Monday. The political differences between Governor Hanly and his successor were forgotten for the day. Governor Hanly called in a carriage for Mr. Marshall, and together they rode to the State House for the ceremony, which took place at noon. The inauguration of Lieutenant-Governor Hall took place in the Senate chamber, the chief scene of that official's activities. The Lieutenant-Governor was inaugurated first, and the ceremony was witnessed by Governor Hanly and Mr. Marshall. Then they proceeded to the south corridor of the main floor. There the Governor's inauguration took place. Meanwhile, in order to make the inauguration legal, the Legislature met in joint session to canvass the vote for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, and their findings were certified by the Secretary of State, whereupon Mr. Marshall was officially declared elected Governor and Frank J. Hall likewise declared elected Lieutenant-Governor. In his inaugural address Governor Marshall, among other things, said:

You call me Governor, but what I shall govern depends upon yourselves; and how I shall succeed depends upon your attitude. The most important thing in a free government is to have the people always conscious of the fact that they are themselves largely responsible for not only the system of government under which they live, but for its due administration.

In a way you want freedom of thought in Indiana. Are you charitable enough to let other people exercise the same privilege? You want freedom to worship God according to the dictates of your consciences—Are you brave enough to worship Him and generous enough to let every other man find his way into the presence of his Maker as best he may? You want free and untrammeled opinion on all public questions—Are you liberal enough to promote your views without ceasing to be an American and becoming a tyrant? You believe that upon all questions you are yourself orthodox—Can you grant your brother the right to entertain a different view without charging him with heterodoxy? You want honesty in public affairs—Can you be honest in your private affairs and not think it would be wrong to steal a dollar while right to bribe a legislator? You want economy in expenditure of public money—Are you willing that your special interests should be as economically administered by the State as you require the interests of other citizens to be administered? You want thoroughly competent men to serve you—Can you be generous enough to see that this does not necessarily imply your selection or the selection of your personal friend? If a member of the minority you believe the bipartisan management of State institutions will promote the best interests of the State—Are you patriotic enough to see that an election which changes you from a minority to a majority does not change the principle upon which these institutions should be administered?

The Governor of this State is not authorized by your written constitution to make any laws for you. This is the function of your General Assembly. The Governor's duty consists in seeing that when laws are once made, they are enforced. You say you want them enforced. Do not think that you can shirk responsibility for law enforcement by berating the officers of the law, among whom is the Governor. Whenever any complaint comes to me of the lack of law enforcement in Indiana, it should not be sent to me as confidential, because it will not be so treated. A citizen is as much bound to bear his part of the burden of law enforcement as is the law officer. I shall very promptly send any communication informing me of law violation to the proper prosecuting attorney with instructions to call upon the citizen to back up in public the charges which he has privately made to me.

The peace and well-being of this State are not conserved by the multitude of criminal statutes nor the severity of punishment. If the number of crimes and misdemeanors were reduced, the degree of punishment lessened, and greater effort made to convict for every violation of the law, the peace, quietude and good order of the State would be greatly increased.

The free people of this State, under no compulsion to act whatever, adopted a written constitution, as they declared, "to the end that justice be established, public order maintained, and liberty perpetuated." These seem to me to be the functions of government in Indiana. A complex civilization throws many a sidelight upon these propositions, and we have, in my judgment, been paying more attention to the side-lights than to the principles involved in good government. What we need is not reform, but regeneration.

For many years that body of our citizenship which represents the capital of the State has been jealously watching the General Assembly lest in its enactments it should pass some law which would be inimical to the interests of capital. On the other hand, labor has also watched and importuned the Legislature not to pass any enactments which would be inimical to it and of benefit to capital. To a less extent here perhaps than in many other of the commonwealths of this country the war between labor and capital is being fought. It might be appropriately described as a state of armed neutrality. If the passion and the tumult of the past can be allayed, and these two great interests so essentially necessary to the prosperity of this people can be persuaded to meet in a spirit of mutual respect and mutual esteem, we may safely look forward to the time when, without legislative enactments, each will sheathe its sword and grasp the hand of its opponent in friendship. Legislation will be necessary in the future as in the past, but let us legislate in a spirit of equity rather than in a spirit of revenge.

MESSAGE TO THE LEGISLATURE.

In his message addressed to the General Assembly Governor Marshall says in part:

I believe that you are here regardless of party affiliations for the purpose of giving the State of Indiana a business-like administration of affairs. Your compensation is such that a faithful discharge of your duty will mark each of you as a man who believes that a free government has a right to the service of its citizens without turning such service into a money-making venture. Can we not have integrity, competency, good service and economy in the public offices of Indiana? I believe that many of the salaries are too large to be commensurate with the services which the officers render to the State and the corps of assistants has been so enlarged as to become a burden to the taxpayers of Indiana. I therefore recommend, in the interests of economy, that you immediately employ a non-partisan expert, if need be, residing out of this State, to enter the various offices in the State House, examine the work which is done therein, report to the committee on appropriations what would be a liberal salary for the official, how much clerical assistance he needs, what such assistance should be paid, and what offices, if any, can be abolished without detriment to the public service. In the interests of integrity I recommend that you put every official in Indiana upon a fixed, definite and certain salary, to which, by no construction of law, shall any sum be ever added; the adoption of a uniform system of bookkeeping; the examination of public records at irregular intervals in such a manner as will not interfere with the right of local self-government; the auditing of all public accounts, showing in every instance upon such account the original contract or the section of the statute authorizing the payment of the money and requiring all vouchers issued in pursuance thereto to have a like showing; the abolition of county councils, township advisory boards, and perhaps other officials; the putting of county commissioners and all other public officials under adequate bond, with a proviso that the statute of limitations shall not begin to run either criminally against the official or civilly against his bondsmen until after notice and demand to repay; preventing any official of this State either individually or as a member of a corporation from entering into or deriving any profit whatever from any public contract; requiring all fines, fees and forfeitures to be entered on the public records, promptly collected, turned into the treasury, and making the official whose duty it is to collect liable upon his bond if he does not collect the same, whenever collectible; and providing for the food and clothing of prisoners in jails and elsewhere at actual cost upon open bids received therefor.

The public is not only desirous of having frequent investigation of all public offices, but such investigations are a check not only upon dishonesty, but also upon extravagance. The system of fees and contingent allowances is likely to lead to extravagant and unwarranted use of public funds. I therefore recommend the investigation of the public offices under the State government for the purposes of ascertaining whether there has been any extravagance in their management and whether the letter of the law has been strained in order to obtain extra allowances.

In my judgment, the election law should be so amended as to definitely provide for speedy returns and the safeguarding of the same to the satisfaction of all parties interested in an election; for the contest of offices in such a way as to guarantee a solution of the contest; and for the adoption of a primary law not only for the nomination of candidates, but for the election of delegates to all State and other conventions, to the end that the people may not turn their government over to the hands of designing politicians. And I suggest that in such primary election the people be permitted to vote upon their choice for United States Senator.

The General Assembly of this State in 1905 enacted what is commonly called "A Railroad Commission Law." In 1907 it either passed or pretended to pass an act amending certain sections thereof. The preamble is vague, uncertain and does not disclose what act was attempted to be amended. Whether the present commission is de jure and whether its orders are legal, are mooted questions. To prevent useless litigation, I recommend the repeal of all acts upon the subject and the passage of a new one, providing that no more than two of the commissioners shall be of the same political party, that one shall be an attorney having knowledge of and experience in railroad and transportation law, and another shall have knowledge of the mechanical part of railroading.

The problem confronting the people of this State with reference to corporations and stock and bonds which have been watered, is one that cannot be equitably adjusted offhand. It must, however, be true that as the corporation is the creature of the State, the State must, by every implication of law, retain the right to control and regulate the corporation. I recommend, therefore, an amendment of the corporate laws of Indiana in toto if possible, if not, to the extent that hereafter a dollar's worth in money or in property of the fair value thereof in the market must go into every corporation for every dollar of stock, and no bonds shall ever be floated until dollar for dollar shall pass into the treasury of the corporation floating the same.

This people will not tamely submit to the creating of an office-holding class, because that class soon comes to stand with the administration and soon believes itself to be the master and not the servant of the people. At the same time they do demand competency in office. Though in the offices of the State the clerical assistance should be representative of the party in power, still I suggest that you at least consider whether a system of examination can not be adopted so that if either Democrats or Republicans are employed, they shall be competent to discharge the duties of their offices.

The Department of Inspection in Indiana should be revised and put upon a business and scientific basis. The office of oil inspector is run upon the vicious fee system. I recommend that the department be reorganized, having a chief inspector, whose sole duty shall be clerical in taking charge of the reports of the subordinate officers and seeing that the fees are promptly paid into the State treasury; and that there be a deputy inspector for each congressional district in Indiana, one and no more, whose salary shall be fixed with reference to the work which has heretofore been done in the several congressional districts of Indiana, the fees remaining as they are, but to be covered into the State treasury.

The metropolitan police law is a violation of the doctrine of local self-government. I recommend its immediate repeal.

There are certain phases of proposed legislation which can scarcely be distinguished from paternalism or socialism. Schemes of all kinds will be presented to you. I can not prevent, and will not attempt to prevent, your yielding to these demands, but I think your sober judgment will appreciate the fact that under the guise of administering a free government, we are, in reality, rapidly turning all the functions of government either into a business asset or a guardianship over the incompetent, the ignorant and the shiftless. In making your appropriations you must not forget that our revenues are constantly being anticipated, and that only the most rigid economy will meet our needs without a bond issue.

The present cities and towns act has, in my judgment, overburdened cities of the third and fourth classes with useless officers and extravagant salaries. They do not add to the efficiency of the public service and are a burden upon the taxpayer. The act should be amended and the useless offices abolished.

Hereafter municipalities should be prohibited from granting franchises until the price the public is to pay to enjoy them is clearly defined, and the municipality is permitted to share in the profits arising therefrom.

The number of boards and commissions in this State is startling. Instead of increasing the number of commissions, in my judgment, they should be curtailed.

The study of the cause and cure of tuberculosis is a laudable one. The same may be said of epilepsy. No better management, in my judgment, can be obtained than that of the State Board of Health. It will not do, however, to turn these two institutions into free sanitoria. Let us deal generously with the unfortunate of the State, but let not the State support those who are able to support themselves.

The erection of what is known as the Indiana School for the Deaf and Dumb was, during the recent campaign, attended with charges of such a grave character, involving not only the amount of money expended, but also the manner of its expenditure and the stability of the buildings when completed, and the erection of the Southeastern Indiana hospital for the insane near Madison having also been brought into controversy. I recommend either a non-partisan or bipartisan investigation of these two institutions which shall involve a report from thoroughly competent architects divorced from any political significance whatever, to the end that we may know whether when these buildings are completed they will be safe and durable.

The State geologist has done a valuable work for Indiana, but that work is probably completed except the making of a soil survey for this State. That survey has already been undertaken by the national government, and several of the counties of this State have been surveyed accordingly. Before continuing this office be sure that it is worth $7,500 a year to the people of Indiana.

The conservation of timber in Indiana, which will always remain an agricultural State, is to be obtained by lectures delivered to the farmers in the various counties of the State by educated men who know the soil conditions and the grade of timber which will grow in such soil. The most that can be hoped for is to induce the farmer to use his waste land as a timber lot.

This State has a large sum of money invested in the State prison in the manufacture of binder twine. This industry was established because it would furnish employment to convict labor in the manufacture of goods which would not come into competition with goods manufactured by the free labor of Indiana. I have satisfied myself that this twine is as well made as any twine in America. You should enact such measures as will give the industry a fair chance to survive, or you should dispose of it and cover the money into the State treasury.

It is your duty to foster and maintain the educational institutions of Indiana, but you should not be so lavish in the appropriations of money as to enable these institutions to destroy private educational institutions which are furnishing without any cost to the people of the State, educational advantages to a large number of its citizens. The accounts of all institutions should be audited for the purpose of determining whether they are economically or extravagantly managed.

Aunt Diana

The Sunshine of the Family

CHAPTER XX.—(Continued.)

The next few weeks passed happily for Alison; she had her dearest friend with her, and what more could she ask for?

Aunt Diana had settled down quite comfortably in her niche, as though she were one of the family. Without making herself unduly prominent, or in any way trenching on the young housekeeper's privilege, she yet contrived, with quiet tact, to lighten Alison's burden and procure her the rest she so much needed.

Alison resumed her walks with Roger, while Aunt Diana amused Missie or read to Mr. Merle. During the day Alison was too much engaged to enjoy much of Aunt Diana's company, but Miss Carrington insisted that she should resume her painting lessons as soon as Missie was able to be with her father; and she also contrived that she and Alison should have one of their old refreshing talks as often as possible. Nothing rested Alison so much as intercourse with Miss Carrington's strong, vigorous mind.

Aunt Diana quickly found her way into Missie's wayward little heart, and she soon turned her influence to good account. One afternoon, when Alison had been spending some hours at Maplewood, she found on her return that Missie had gone back into her old room. All Alison's books and pictures had been moved; Aunt Diana's loving hands had evidently been employed in her service—no one else would have arranged the bowl of dark chrysanthemums on the little round table, and the pretty, fresh cretonne on the couch and easy chair spoke of the same taste.

Alison's voice trembled as she thanked Missie.

"You ought not to have done it, Mabel, dear; it is very good of you, but I would rather have waited until you were really well."

"I always meant to do it," returned Missie, solemnly. "I thought about it every night, and then I made up my mind to speak to Aunt Diana, and she said she would help me. Have you seen the beautiful illumination she has painted for you?"

Yes, Alison had seen it.

"Be not weary in well-doing"—that was the text that Miss Carrington had chosen—"for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." Well, was not Alison reaping a rich harvest? Would she ever repent that she had come back to her own people for loving service and ministry, when she had won Missie's affection, and found her way to her father's heart? That he loved and trusted her, that she was growing daily dearer to him, Alison, with all her humility, could not doubt; but Missie was still his petted darling—the very suffering she had caused him brought them nearer together.

It was a lovely sight, Miss Carrington thought, to see Missie sitting for hours patiently beside her father's couch reading or talking to him. But for her aunt's vigilant care her health would have been permanently injured by her devotion to him; before she left she made Missie faithfully promise to take her daily walk and to resume her singing.

"You must leave something for Allie to do," she said, with a smile; "I can not sanction monopoly. We must watch against selfishness, dear child, even in our best actions: we must not be overexacting in our affection—love sometimes compels one to efface one's self for love's sake."

Anna was a constant visitor to The Holms during Miss Carrington's stay; they had taken a great fancy to each other. Anna told Alison privately that she thought Miss Carrington was the most beautiful woman she had ever seen.

"I don't know about her features," Alison had answered; "I don't think people consider her handsome, but it is a dear face, and that is all I care about."

"I am never tired of looking at her," returned Anna, with girlish enthusiasm; "one sees the thoughts coming before she speaks; her eyes talk to one, even when she is silent. There is something harmonious, too, in her voice, and even in her walk; she never jars on one; I am sure there are no discords in her nature."

Alison repeated this speech; she thought it so prettily worded, and so true. But Miss Carrington shook her head over it and let it pass; she knew much better how the chords of her being had once been jangled roughly out of tune. "No discords in her nature!" when every note had been dumb and tuneless until the Divine Hand had brought the jarred chords into harmony.

"When God's will is our will, then we shall know peace," she said to herself; "I have learned that now." But she spoke very kindly of Anna, and praised Alison's discernment in the choice of a friend. "She is a simple, lovable little soul," she said once; "it is quite a treat in this decided age to meet with a girl who distrusts her own judgment, and believes other people's experiences before her own."

"Anna is really very clever, Aunt Di."

"I am sure of that, my dear; and she shows her cleverness by not advertising her best wares. In talking to her one is not dropping over buckets into empty wells—there is good sense and a clear knowledge of facts at the bottom. Living in an uncongenial atmosphere has make her shy and awkward; she is like a poor little plant brought too suddenly into the light; in another year or so she will be less pallid and depressed; she will have learned to believe in herself a little."

"I am afraid you think her plain," observed Alison, anxiously; for her artistic taste made her lay rather an undue importance on beauty; "but really, when she talks and brightens up she is quite pretty."

"She has a lovely look sometimes. You are wrong, Allie, I do not think her plain. Missie's apple blossom face makes her a little colorless, but there is a delicate white rose bloom about her that is not without beauty. I like her face, my dear."

"Do you know, Aunt Di"—hesitating a little, as though she feared how her words might be received, for Miss Carrington had a horror of gossip—"I am half afraid that there is a new trouble in store for poor Anna."

"You mean Eva's marriage. I think that will be a good thing for her; there is no real sympathy between the sisters."

"No, I meant something quite different. I have been at Maplewood a great deal this week, and Dr. Forbes is always there. I am afraid, from what I see, that Anna will soon have a step-father, and, Aunt Di"—in a voice of strong disgust—"Dr. Forbes is such an ugly, disagreeable man, I must say I do wonder at Mrs. Hardwick."

"Do you, Allie? Well, wonder sits well on young people. I hate to see them taking everything as a matter of course. Your wonder will not hurt you, my dear."

"But if it should be true, Aunt Di?" very solemnly.

"There are no fools like old fools,' Allie, and there is certainly no accounting for tastes. Now, in my opinion, one husband is enough for any woman; but I do not pretend to regulate the world. Don't trouble your little head about it. I have a notion that, step-father or no step-father, Anna will have her share of God's sunshine." And Miss Carrington smiled a queer little smile that mystified Alison, but she said no more.

There were some things of which Miss Carrington never spoke to young people. She often said: "A girl's mind ought to be as clear as crystal and hold no secrets—a crystal reflects everything. I wish older people would remember that." And nothing displeased her more than the careless talk of some mothers. "They don't seem to care what they put into a girl's mind," she would say, indignantly, "and then they wonder that it is chocked up with rubbish."

CHAPTER XXI.

Miss Carrington took a great deal of notice of Roger, and sought every opportunity to be with him; she had a great respect for his character, which, she said, was a most uncommon one.

"Roger differs from the young men of his generation," she said once to Alison; "he cares little for other people's opinions, unless he knows them to be in the right—mere criticism does not influence him in the least."

She took a great interest in his work, and made herself acquainted with the details of the business. Roger wondered a little at the quiet pertinacity with which she questioned him; she even followed him to the mill, and sat in the timber yard watching the men at work.

After a few conversations with Roger she spoke very seriously to her brother-in-law; she told him Roger was very young for such a responsibility. "He is a good lad, and would wear himself out in your service, Ainslie, and that without a word of complaint, but he looks too old and careworn for his age; you must remember he is only two-and-twenty yet—he must have his play time, like other lads."

"But how am I to help him, Diana?" asked Mr. Merle, fretfully. "It is not my fault that I am lying here like a log. The boy must work, or what would become of us all?"

"My dear Ainslie, you misunderstand me," she replied, gently. "Of course Roger must work, but surely he needs help for so large a business. Have you put no one in your last manager's place?"

"No, not yet," he returned, evidently struck by her practical good sense. "Roger never proposed it, and I was too indolent to think about it; but there is Murdoch, a Scotchman—he has been with us a long time, and he is an honest fellow. I dare say he would be glad of a rise in his salary; he has a large young family. I will ask Roger what he thinks of putting Murdoch in the manager's place. I think he would watch over our interests."

"I wish you would do so," she returned earnestly; "Roger is rather too hard worked for his age. He tells me he has no time for cricket or tennis, or for skating in winter. I—I have set my heart, Ainslie, on his bringing Alison for a long visit to Moss-side in the spring. You will be better by that time, and if you have a manager Roger will be able to enjoy a holiday; he tells me he has not left Chesterton for two years."

"I am afraid I have been very remiss and neglected his interests," returned Mr. Merle, rather sadly. "You shall have your wish, Diana; I will manage to spare Roger for a month."

"Come, now, that is generous of you," she replied, brightly; "I shall owe you a good turn for that. Supposing I promise to come and spend my Christmas and New Year with you; shall you care to have me?"

"Try me," was his only reply. But he said it with one of his rare smiles, and Miss Carrington felt she would be welcome.

The prospect of having Aunt Diana for Christmas, and still more the promise of a long visit to Moss-side in the spring, went far to reconcile Alison to the parting when the day came for Miss Carrington to leave them, but when the last hour arrived Alison's heart failed her a little.

"You must not look so pale over it, Allie," Miss Carrington said to her anxiously; "you know if I had the power I would willingly take you back with me."

"Yes, but I could not leave papa lying there. There can be no question now about my duty; it is a comfort to know that."

"Yes, dearest, your place must be here a little longer; they could not spare you to me yet. Do you know, I sometimes doubt whether the old days will ever come back."

"Oh, Aunt Di! Do you mean I shall never be able to live with you again?" asked Alison, in an alarmed voice.

Miss Carrington looked at her in a strangely moved way.

"I do not think you will live at The Holms always; Missie will replace you by and by. I am quite sure we shall be together, even if it be not in the old way. Don't look so perplexed, Allie, darling; in this life, with its manifold changes and chances, things are seldom quite the same."

"You and I will never be different—I am convinced of that," exclaimed Alison, not in the least understanding the drift of Aunt Diana's strange speech. "Oh, Aunt Di, how delicious the spring will be! To think that we shall be rowing on the river again to Long Island, to hunt for forget-me-nots, and that we shall hear the cuckoo in Aspy Woods, and I shall be sitting in the studio watching you painting, and Roger will be with us."

"That's right; look forward, Allie darling; it is your birthright. The young must always look on to a happy future. Now say good-bye to me, for I hear the carriage coming round. Christmas will soon be here, and, heaven willing, we shall meet again." And pressing her tenderly in her arms, Aunt Diana turned away.

CHAPTER XXII.

Miss Carrington, indeed, spent her Christmas and the opening days of the new year at The Holms, to the mutual enjoyment of herself and Alison; but it was not until the end of June that Alison and Roger paid their promised visit to Moss-side—not until the sweet fresh days of spring had passed into the glory of summer. Miss Carrington had written again and again, pleading the compact she had made with Mr. Merle; but neither of the young people had found themselves free.

"When we come it must be with a quiet conscience, and not with a burden of unfilled duties, dear Aunt Di," wrote Alison at last. "Missie can do without me, but Roger can not leave at present—there is such a pressure of business at the mill; and if you do not mind, I would rather wait for him."

Miss Carrington's reply was curt, and to the point: "Wait for Roger, by all means. I am not young enough to fear deferring an unexpected pleasure, or old enough to dread that 'by and by' may mean never. There is danger in hurrying on things too much; we need not crowd our lives. I will have neither of you until you can put your cares in your pockets, and take the full meaning of these sweet, sunshiny days."

Aunt Diana's unselfishness and patience were rewarded when at last the desired letter from Alison arrived. Its bright sentences sounded to her like a ripple of soft laughter from youthful lips. "We are coming, coming, coming!" Could any repetition be sweeter than that?

It was one of the loveliest evenings in June when Alison and Roger arrived at the Riverston station, and stood for a moment looking round them in a pleased uncertainty whether any familiar face would greet them. Miss Carrington had hinted that she preferred receiving her guests in her own porch—she hated the bustle and noise of a railway station. But still Alison's dark eyes would scan the platform and the sunny station room, half in delightful recognition and half in girlish curiosity.

"Allie, who is that handsome fellow just getting down from the dog cart?" asked Roger. "What a neat little turnout! I like a chestnut mare. Hallo! do you know him?" as Alison smiled and bowed.

"It is Greville Moore," she said, hurriedly, and a bright look of pleasure crossed her face at the sight of her old friend, which was certainly reflected in the young man's countenance as he came forward and greeted them.

"You are punctual to a minute," he said joyously, "rather before your time, for I have only just driven up. Miss Carrington told me I might bring the dog cart, and your luggage might go up by the omnibus. How are you, Miss Alison? You do not seem at all fagged by your long journey. I expected to find a pair of dusty, jaded travelers."

"Alison is as fresh as a lark," returned Roger; "she has been chirping like a whole nestful all the way up. It is a good many years since we met, Moore. I should hardly have identified you the first minute but for my sister's recognition."

"I believe I should not have known you," replied Greville, with a quick, scrutinizing glance. "You don't look first rate—does he, Miss Alison? He has an overworked appearance. We must give him plenty of tennis and boating, and make him look younger."

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," laughed Roger. "Two of three weeks of idleness and fresh air will make a different fellow of me. I mean to forget that there are such things as sawmills in existence."

"Come, that is sensible," returned Greville, heartily. "Miss Alison, will you take the front seat? Merle, the groom is going to look after the luggage, so you need not trouble your head about it." And, springing lightly to his place, he touched the mare, and in a moment they were driving rapidly down the shady road.

Fair Lesson in Spelling.

Students in a London school were recently asked to write this from dictation: "A glutonous sibyl with her glutinous hand complacently seized a seive, a phthisical ichneumon, a noticeable supercilious irascible and cynical sergeant, an embarrassed and harassed chrysalis, a shrieking sheik, a complaisant proselyte and an anonymous chrysolite. These all suddenly disappeared down her receptive esophagus. She simply said: Pugh! not saccharine!

"She then transferred a billion of billous mosquitoes, an unsalable bouquet of fuchsias, lilies, dahlias, hyacinths and phlox, a liquefied odellium, an indelible defamatory inflammatory synchronism and a debatable syllogism to the same capacious receptacle.

"Peaceably surrendering her daguerreotype to the ecstatic aeronaut, she descended with her parachute—a synonym for barouche—and grievously terrified the stolid, squalid yeomanry already torrefied by the heat, 101 Fahrenheit."

The King of Diamonds Has License Taken Away. Alleged Bogus Gem Man Rails at Newspapers.

BURLINGTON, IA., Nov. 14—For sometime past newspapers in Iowa cities have been reporting the operations of a man whom they called "The King of Diamonds." It appears that there was nothing criminal in his operations, which consisted in selling "phoney" diamonds, but his methods of procedure were not exactly according to the rules. He usually drops into a jobbing house and tells of meeting such and such a representative of the house on the road and selling him a diamond, to be delivered at the store. He explains that the diamond is only an imitation, and offers to sell anybody else around the place the same thing. Thus he works up an interest and usually succeeds in selling some of his glassware. Mr. Jack of Diamonds dropped into City Auditor Norton's office one morning and secured a license to sell his wares. He had only been out a short time, however, until Chief of Police Hiltz learned of him. Calling in the peddler, he relieved him of his license and gave him back the money he had paid for it. As the man had committed no crime he was released. He was bitter against the newspapers for injuring his business.

The Saloon Problem.

"Incidental with the eradication of the saloon business is discussed thoroughly the result. The temperance workers of course expect great good to come from the elimination of the liquor traffic. They hope to be able to deal with any blind tigers effectually. The people on the other side believe there will be as much liquor consumed in Garrett as usual. They think the people who want their beer or whiskey will have it shipped in or will go to Avilla or Ft. Wayne or other wet towns to get it. They declare a great deal of money will go out of the city because of the dryness that would otherwise be spent here and that the city treasury will get none of it. They say people who indulge a little will get on big loads when they get a chance hereafter. There is no doubt but that some liquor will be shipped in and that Garrett people will go to wet towns frequently. To what extent this will reach is of course impossible to tell and whether or not those drinkers who go elsewhere for their beverage will gradually be weaned away from it is another question. The temperance workers think so. They believe much of the money heretofore spent for drinks will now go for other purposes and that in the long run the city will be better off. The contentions on both sides remain to be solved by experience."—Garrett Clipper.

Indiana's Dependent Children.

The Board of State Charities, in studying the reports made to it by the various orphans' homes in the State, finds a peculiar situation; a notable decrease in the number of children made public wards in the past twelve months as compared with former years, but an increase in the population of the institutions which receive them. The figures, referring to public wards only, are as follows:

In the ten years prior to 1908 a total of 10,023 children was admitted to the various orphans' homes. The annual average was 1,002. The number received in any one year within that period ran as high as 1,169 and as low as 880. This last year the number received was 808, a decrease of 72 from the preceding year and of 194 from the average for the past ten years.

With this decrease in the number of children made public wards it would seem that a decrease in the number of such wards in the orphans' homes would naturally follow. That, however, is not the case. There were 1,633 children of this class on public support on the last day of the fiscal year. There were 1,582, or 51 less, on the same day of the preceding year. Going back eleven years, we find some higher, some lower figures than these, as shown by the annual census. In that period the number of inmates has been as high as 1,747 and as low as 1,527. The average was 1,622, or eleven less than the population at the close of the fiscal year.

The Board feels that the law of 1907 which gives the judge of the juvenile court sole authority to make a dependent child a public ward, accounts for the decrease in the number of children sent to orphans' homes last year. That law in active operation means a careful investigation into the conditions surrounding such children, in order if possible to discover some way of caring for them other than by separating them from their parents or relatives. Sometimes a worthy mother is given necessary help; sometimes a delinquent father is compelled to support his family; sometimes relatives are found who will care for children who would otherwise be sent to the orphans' home. The whole thought is to keep children in their own homes if the homes are at all fit.

It is not possible to explain exactly the increase in the orphans' home population in the face of the decrease in the commitment of wards. One reason for it, however, is quite clear. The associations managing these institutions are far less active than they should be in finding family homes for their wards. The various associations made a total of 777 placements and transfers in the twelve months comprising the last fiscal year. This was forty less than in 1907 and 120 less than in 1906. In fact, there have been only two years in the past nine in which the associations did not place more children than in the year just closed. The banner year in that period was 1902, when 967 placements and transfers were made.

It is unfortunate that more activity in this direction is not shown. The four agents of the Board of State Charities do what they can, in addition to visiting children already placed in family homes, inspecting orphans' homes, advising with local officials, etc. The agent, however, cannot be depended upon for this work. That under the law is the duty of the associations.

From time to time a movement is started for the erection of a new orphans' home. The Board of State Charities feels that this is unfortunate. There is no need for additional institutions of this class. Those existing can easily care for approximately 1,200 more children than they now have. In fact, in some of the counties the number in the homes is so small that there is a strong sentiment in favor of closing them. The home in Boone County has three children; that in Decatur County, five; in Franklin County, six; in Warrick County, eight; in Clay County, eleven; in Johnson County, fourteen. A number of others have a very small population. Their wards could easily be transferred to some other institution, or doubtless, with greater diligence in finding family homes, be taken entirely off public support. The result would be better both for the children and the counties.

FOR 1909

DE LAVAL
Cream Separators

The year that is past was one of unusual interest and importance in a Cream Separator way Twelve months ago we announced to cow owners the introduction of a complete new line of DE LAVAL farm and dairy sizes of machines, marking another great move forward in the development of the Cream Separator. The enthusiastic welcome given, these improved machines by buyers everywhere exceeded even our great expectations and nearly carried us off our feet. Orders came so thick and fast that stock was soon exhausted and the DE LAVAL factory was forced to run day and night from March to July and continued with increased force on full time throughout the entire year. Notwithstanding the universal business depression DE LAVAL sales for 1908 were over 50 per cent greater than in 1907. The new machines simply swept the field of all separator honors and made the year a notable one in separator history. Practical experience in the actual sale and use of 100,000 of the new machines has but served to suggest still greater refinement of perfection and to enable us to offer in the DE LAVAL for 1909 a machine that those who know say IS MILES AND YEARS IN THE LEAD OF EVERYTHING ELSE IN A SEPARATOR WAY. If you have not seen and used an IMPROVED DE LAVAL you really cannot know what a Cream Separator is today. It's surely in your own interest to do so before thinking of buying any other. Why not write at once for catalogue and full information, to be had for the asking.

RECEIVED BY EDWARD CARNES

Long Beach, Cal., Jan. 4 '09.

Mr. Edward Carnes.
Land of snow and ice.

Dear Cousin:-I will write a few lines to you this afternoon, mamma is writing to Wall.

We are enjoying the nicest kind of weather, it just reminds me of the weather there in May. It gets as warm here as it does there, but there is always a cool breeze from the water making it very pleasant. It seems odd to have all kinds of fresh fruits and vegetables all the time. There are so many flowers. There is quite a large hill just back of here, mamma and I went out that way for a walk, there is mostly Japs living there, and they raise acres of different kinds of flowers and ship them, as it gets very cold on the other side of the coast range where the ocean breeze does not get. I got a large bunch of carnations they were grand. Nansturtiums grow here in the back yards, people tramp them out as they have to many pretty flowers. The ocean is grand, the large warm waves come rolling in, it is fine for to go swimming. I advise you to come and try it, hope you will get to sometime I am sure you would never regret it or even the trip through, it is fine, we certainly had a grand trip.

You can never realize the beauty of the mountains, the mountain streams dashing down over the rocks, the water is so clear, and the beautiful lakes up there. Cape Horn is fine, we went around it, that is the highest we were. The prettiest canyon is called Blue Canyon, there is a mineral water running out of the rocks, it is shipped to all parts of the world, we all jumped off and got a drink, it seemed as though one could drink forever and would not be satisfied.

You have heard of the new railway across Salt Lake, we crossed in the morning and it looked fine, it took us three hours to cross, for miles and as far as eye can carry you can see white beds where the lake has once been.

I am going to try to go to school the first of February. There is a fine school here, three thousand pupils attend high school, I went three days and had to give it up on account of my eyes. We received our Christmas presents and appreciated them very much. I think we have a fine town the population is twenty-five thousand. They are dredging an inner Harbor, and the Salt Lake R. R. have built the largest lifting bridge in the world. The town has improved greatly since we were here before, and we like it better. There are not so many fleas since the streets are paved. We live about two blocks from the ocean, our house is plastered and they are putting in the windows, we planted some palm trees and a couple of century plants between the curbing and walk. The people seem so different here, only about three fourths of the houses are plastered, every thing rough and stained. Every thing is sold by the pound, they don't know what a bushel is, and instead of saying thenty-five cents worth it is two bits (12½ cts. a bit). I can hardly get used to it. I must close hoping to hear from you soon.

Your Cousin,
Gladys Paff.

THE YIELD OF COAL.

More than three-fourths of the country's coal yield is bituminous.

Half a ton of coal per inhabitant is the world average. The United States produces four tons per inhabitant.

Germany produced in 1904 192,000,000 tons of coal, coke and lignite, but the strike lowered production somewhat.

Austria-Hungary produces and uses less than a quarter as much coal as Germany. Big Russia produces less than little Belgium.

The United States produces 319,000,000 metric tons of coal per year (1903), worth at the mines $485,000,000 and costing consumers nearer a billion dollars.

No other country produces nearly so much. Great Britain sells (1904) 48,000,000 tons, worth $180,000,000, yet her total production is nearly 100,000,000 tons below our own.

MODES OF THE MOMENT.

Only the slender woman may enjoy to its fullest extent the modish gathered skirt.

The newest pompadour lace has a most exquisite bell pattern and will be very fashionable.

In the plain tailor made the usual puffed sleeve changes into a long plain coat sleeve, with occasionally some gathered fullness at the top.

The tunic has made its appearance in London. When this is worn the dress is generally of a pale solid tint, and the tunic, on the order of an overskirt, is bordered with a band of delicate embroidery.

Receives another Letter

H. G. Hursh received a letter from his cousin, Carlisle, who is in the navy at League Island, Philadelphia, Pa., in which he says:—"The weather here is cool and at present a steady stream of ice is floating down the Deleware. This is one of the best collection of warships afloat, but one does not just know its environments until he has been in it. I do the best I can and try to live up to a proverb which is said to belong to Sailors, "Man comes into this world all naked and bare, he goes through life full of trouble and care; when he dies, he goes, the Lord knows where, but if he does well here he will do well there."

Dated December 30th, 1908.

DANIEL J. BAKER,
Administrator.

B. F. PENCE

Mr. Pence, father of William Pence of this city, and of Monroe Pence who resides on the Dilgard farm on the Waterloo road, was rendered helpless yesterday by a stroke of paralysis. He made his home with his son Monroe. Returning from a visit in the country he drove to his son, William's in this city and the family looking saw the father sitting there as if asleep but upon investigation they found him helpless. He was taken into the house and medical aid summoned.—Thursdays' Auburn Dispatch. On Friday morning at 12:30 o'clock he passed away. The funeral was held Sunday morning, at 10:30 from the Lutheran church, the Rev. S. E. Slater officiating.

He is survived by six children, four sons and two daughters, Amos and Wilham of Auburn, Monroe, north of Auburn, McClellan of Garrett, Mrs. John Zerkle east of Auburn, and Mrs. Emma Hollabaugh of Spencerville.

MESSAGE OF GOV. HANLY

The financial condition of the State is exceptionally good. The revenues for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1907, exclusive of transfer funds and including a balance in the treasury Oct. 31, 1906, of $507,654.00, aggregated $4,599,333.58; the expenditures were $3,701,705.97, leaving a balance in the treasury at the close of the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1907, of $897,627.61. The revenues for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1908, exclusive of transfer funds and including the balance in the treasury at the end of the fiscal year 1907, aggregated $5,217,370.85; the expenditures were $4,724,253.85, leaving a balance in the treasury Sept. 30, 1908, of $493,117. In this balance there was no advance payment, nor were the revenues for the present year anticipated or impaired.
